REKINDLE THE FIRES.

By The Editor.

IF we let the holiness fires go out, if we let the revival of sanctification burn low, it is going to get fearfully dark and cold.

If we get so busy with this, that and the other, that we cannot go to the camp meeting, neglect the convention and fail to come together in the gatherings held especially for the promotion of holiness of heart and life, the fires are going to burn low and the darkness and chill will be felt.

If we neglect to read holiness literature, if we fail to circulate the papers, books, pamphlets and tracts, if we grow indifferent, tired, discouraged or indolent in this work, there will be a falling off of attendance, an abatement of zeal in our camp meetings and conventions and the revivals will die down and the great billows of sin and worldliness will roll over us.

With the startling increase of popular unbelief, of modified infidelity in churches, colleges and clergymen; with the widening, deepening stream of worldliness and Sabbath desecration, if we cease to contend for the second work of grace, if we fail to stir up the people to seek the Lord in his sanctifying power, if we fail to cry out against inbred sin, we will find the floods of wickedness sweeping us away.

If you have made up your mind not to attend the holiness camp meeting this summer, change your mind and go. You need a spiritual uplift the meeting will give you, and the camp meeting needs you. Go and take a lukewarm friend with you and pray that friend through to victory and come back home and spread the fire. If you have neglected your full salvation books, get them out and read them over again; refresh your memory and rekindle the holy glow of perfect love within your breast. If you have modified your testimony in the least, bestir yourself and speak humbly, though plainly, of Christ's cleansing blood and sanctifying power. If you have been crucified to the world, remain crucified to the world.

The doctrine and experience of sanctification have a thousand foes. The opposition to a pure heart and a holy life, will change front and method every day if it may but accomplish its purpose—the destruction of your faith in the power of Christ's blood to sanctify you wholly now. Let us be steadfast, unmovable in our faith in Christ and our willingness to suffer for him. We must be courteous and kind to all men, but we must be free from fear of men, or compromise with men. To obtain and retain the blessing of entire sanctification, we shall have to take up our cross daily, and follow Christ. God's sanctified people are peculiar people misunderstood and misrepresented by the world. Having embarked in this great, good cause, let us not turn back or lower the flag for one moment. Go to the place of secret prayer; go to the camp meetings; go to the conventions; go into the work of spreading scriptural holiness over these lands. I wish we might have a score of three days' holiness meetings in Kentucky before fall frost. I am willing to help in town, village or country church, bearing my own expenses. Think, pray, get busy.

The Restoration of Israel to Palestine No. V.

FOLLOWING up our scripture references to the restoration of Israel, there is a beautiful promise in the 14th chapter of Isaiah 1-3, which reads:

For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and will set them in their own land: and the strangers shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob. And the people shall take them, and bring them to their place: and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the Lord for servants and handmaids: and they shall take them captives, whose captives they were; and they shall rule over their oppressors. And it shall come to pass in the day that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve.

This is a very clear statement with reference to the restoration of Israel. Notice that the prophet says, "The strangers shall be joined with them." I take this to mean that people, generally, who are not Jews, will sympathize with, and assist the Jews in their restoration to Palestine; and that is exactly what Great Britain is doing, and the American government is in sympathy with the British government in this matter.

In studying Isaiah's prophecy be on the alert to notice the many promises of a great spiritual awakening among the Jewish people. All along in connection with the restoration of Israel is the promise of spiritual blessing. Take the following verses, Isaiah 26:1-4:

In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in.

Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee.

Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.

The scripture conveys the thought of great spiritual joy. Take the last verse of the 7th chapter of Isaiah; it harmonizes with the work of the Zionists' Movement bringing the poor suffering Jews out of countries where they are oppressed. It reads:

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which are ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship in the holy mount at Jerusalem."

In the 51st chapter of Isaiah, 3rd and 4th verses, we find a most gracious promise with reference to Palestine:

For the Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places, he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody. Harken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation: for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgments to rest for a light of the people.

We have here a promise for the fruitfulness of Palestine, and this promise is now being fulfilled. Wonderful improvements are being made in agriculture. The orange product is remarkable. Much excellent honey is being shipped out of Palestine and places that, a few years ago, were nothing but desert, are becoming fruitful fields and gardens. There are those who would spiritualize much of the prophecy concerning Israel; while no doubt there is a deep spiritual meaning in these prophecies, there is also a literal significance.

We close our quotations from Isaiah, with a splendid selection from the 62nd chapter, beginning with the first verse, reading to the close of the 7th verse:

For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name.

Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

For as a young man marieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence.

And give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

There is no doubt in my mind but the prophet is speaking of the wonderful restoration of the Israelitish people to their home land, the remarkable protection of God over them, and great spiritual illumination. They will no doubt accept the Lord Jesus Christ as the Messiah of prophecy, and their Redeemer. Stop for a moment and think of the tremendous effect upon Christendom, and the world at large if, as the Jews begin to be restored to Palestine, and prosper, they should accept Jesus Christ, and worship him as their Lord and Saviour. All human civilization would be stirred and startled by such marvelous fulfillment of prophecy, and our modernistic brethren, who have been denying the inspiration of the Old Testament Scriptures, would be compelled to seek some other occupation than that of destroying the faith of the people in the inspiration of the Bible.

Whilst the patriarch was pouring out the bitterness of his soul the stars came out. "Look now toward heaven and tell the stars if thou be able to number them," said his almighty Friend. And he believed. For the first time that mighty word occurs in Scripture. Henceforth the patriarch reckoned on God's faithfulness.—F. B. Meyer.

SOME ASPECTS OF HOLINESS.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

Rev. Dr. Pope, the eminent Theologian of Methodism, was a faithful exponent of Wesleyan doctrine, but on the great truth of Entire Sanctification sometimes expressed some negative views. He says in his "Compendium of Theology": "Never do we read of a Higher Life that is other than the intensification of the lower; never of a Second Blessing that is more than the unrestrained outpouring of the same Spirit who gave the first." In one of Thomas Cook's holiness conventions Dr. Pope took occasion to recant these words and declared that he stood as a penitent for having written them. Another time, speaking before a large number of ministers, Dr. Pope said: "I have wondered whether it is right to speak of a Second Blessing, but I have read the Scriptures in which our Savior takes a blind man and partially restores his sight and then, holding the man up before us for a little while that we may study his state, which is a great advance upon what it was. He lets us watch the struggle. He touched him again and he saw every man clearly. In the face of that narrative, and in the face of the experience of multitudes of our fathers, and of the testimonies of multitudes now living, and in the face of the deep instinct of my own unworthy heart, I will never again write against the phraseology to which I have referred."

The doctrine of Entire Sanctification was one of the great central truths of Methodism. In our day it is a rare occasion, indeed, to hear of a Methodist preacher occupying a prominent pulpit preaching upon this subject.

Dr. Dale, that great preacher of Birmingham, was a great lover of the doctrine and accepted it and said that he saw in it the possibility of an ethical reformation of greater importance than the doctrinal reformation of the Sixteenth Century.

Rev. Dr. Mackennal, (Presbyterian) said in the Wesleyan Conference of 1887, that all the churches were indebted to Methodism for bearing testimony to the truth that "holiness is imparted to the soul of the believer by the direct gift of God."

II.

This is explicitly taught in the Word of God, in such passages as Matt. 3:11: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire."

A wonderful book on this subject is "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost" by Dr. Asa Mahan, of Oberlin College, in Finney's days. Speaking of some peculiarities which mark those who have received this great blessing, he says:

1. "They have an omnipresent peace, quietude, assurance and fulness of joy in God which remain with them in all vicissitudes.

2. "A peculiar and special form of self-control and balance of soul. A control over their own spirits, their temper, their appetites and worldly propensities.

3. "A peculiar and special degree of moral and spiritual power. Some are sons of thunder; others are sons of consolation.

"The Baptism of the Holy Ghost brings upon the believer such blessings as:

1. "Quickening of all the natural powers into unwonted activity and energy.

2. "A vast accumulation of moral and spiritual power—power with God and with men.

3. "Soul-transforming apprehension of truth. Power to quicken and enlarge thought, deepen spiritual emotion, energize the moral activities, and transform the whole moral and spiritual being and character.

4. "Absolute assurance of hope. We know that we are of God.

5. "Fellowship with the Deity and deep and permanent blessedness.

"Our interior life will fully correspond with Christian experience as foreseen by the ancient prophets, and as portrayed in the New Testament. Such experiences as 'Joy in God,' 'Joy in tribulation,' 'Joy unspeakable and full of glory' are experiences of New Testament saints, and may be ours of the twentieth century."

Some characteristics of the mental state in which this Baptism of the Spirit is given may be considered: Waiting expectation and mind preparation the seeker is brought into a state of fervent desire, earnest seeking, importunate prayer and waiting expectancy. This is best illustrated by the case of Rev. J. B. Taylor, (Presbyterian). He says: "My desire was that the Lord would visit me and baptize me with the Holy Spirit. My cry was: 'Seal my soul forever thine.' My earnest desire was that all love of the world should be destroyed, all selfishness extirpated, pride banished, unbelief removed, all idols dethroned, everything hostile to holiness and opposed to the Divine will crucified, that holiness to the Lord might be engraven in my heart. My soul has panted more for complete deliverance from remaining corruption than ever before. O, for perfect love! Oh for complete sanctification in soul, body and spirit!"

A plea for the Spirit's fulness is well expressed in those lines of a well known writer:

"Lift the flood gates, let salvation
In tremendous currents flow,
To the uttermost fulfilling
Thy blest mission here below;
Until myriads of sinners,
Borne on love's resistless tide,
Shall be swept into the kingdom,
And believers sanctified.

"It is coming, we believe it,
Thou dost hear and answer prayer;
It is coming, we shall see it,
Thine almighty arm made bare;
Tides of power; tides of glory,
Holy tides of perfect love,
Satisfying, overflowing,
Coming on us from above."

III.

METHÏDISM AND THE BAPTISM OF POWER.

Dr. Asa Mahan, writing on the baptism of the Holy Spirit and Methodism, has this to say: "We may now clearly apprehend what will hereafter constitute the glory or the shame of Methodism. The central article of her creed is free and full redemption in Jesus Christ. In the holding and advocacy of that truth her ministry and membership glory before the world. Now if this denomination shall remain true to her heaven-descended mission by continuing to hold and advocate this great truth, and by a living faith shall exemplify its all-purifying influence, both before the church and the world, this will be her wisdom and her understanding in the judgment of all nations who shall hear of this great salvation. But if she should renounce faith in this great truth, or cease to advocate it and, above all, should hold it as a dead faith instead of an all-vitalizing power, this would be her shame before God and the world."

Sixty years have passed since those words of Dr. Mahan were written. Shameful things have happened to Methodism because she has failed to be true to her high calling. She has lost her place as leader in Revivalism and has gained an exalted place among Modernists, Unitarians and Liberalists, and she has been shorn of her power as a soul-saving church.

IV.

A minister of the Gospel, whose work has stirred two continents, came to the Second Crisis in his life in the days of the Cambridge Seven (1882). He said, "My Christian life was spasmodic and fitful, now flaming up with enthusiasm and then pacing wearily over leagues of grey ashes and cold cinders. . . . There were things in my heart and life which I felt were questionable. I knew that God had a controversy with respect to them. . . . At last, I said, 'Lord, I am willing to be made willing. Come and take me and break me; make the most of me that can be made for thy glory.'"

It is a sublime moment in a believer's life when God leads him to a great crisis in his soul experience. That famous hymn—"Wrestling Jacob"—strikes some notes of soul crisis in the following lines:

"Wilt Thou not yet to me reveal
Thy new, unutterable name?
Tell me, I still beseech Thee, tell;
To know it now resolved I am:
Wrestling, I will not let Thee go,
Till I Thy name, Thy nature know.

"What though my shrinking flesh complain,
And murmur to contend so long?
I rise superior to my pain;
When I am weak, then I am strong:
And when my all of strength shall fail,
I shall with the God-man prevail."

V.

SUNDAR SINGH.

When Sundar Singh, that saint of India, found Christ and witnessed to it to his family, it brought no joy to them, but consternation. It was a dreadful thing to have a sikh of a proud family to turn Christian. His father urged him to put away such foolishness, to remember his high estate and the noble prospects that lay before him. He unrolled before him visions of wealth and honor and high positions. Then more pressure was put upon him by his rich uncle who tried to turn him from Christ by taking him to his great house. Bringing him to a deep cellar below the main building, the uncle locked the door and Sundar wondered if his last hour had come; but the uncle, taking a key, stepped forward and unlocked a large safe. Throwing open the door there was revealed to the boy's eyes such wealth as he had never dreamt of. Rolls of bank notes, priceless jewels, and quantities of money were what he saw. His uncle then besought him not to disgrace the family name by becoming a Christian, and taking his puggaree from his own head, he laid it on Sundar's feet, as the last and humblest supplication he could make, with the words: "All these shall be yours if you will remain with us." Such riches dazzled his eyes; his heart was moved by his uncle's condescension in humiliating himself to the youngest son of the household. But at that moment his heart overflowed with the love of Jesus, and he found it easy to refuse. His choice of Christ was made once and for all. Then that moment he became an outcast and the storm of persecution began. Behold what a consecration! No wonder that Sundar Singh became such a saint. In these soft days of ease and luxury we hardly know what real consecration means.

VI.

When Napoleon was devastating Europe with his wars, the story is told that Massena, one of his great Generals, suddenly appeared with 18,000 men before an Austrian town incapable of defending itself. The Council met and decided to surrender the town into the General's hands, but the old dean of the church reminded them that it was Easter, and urged them to hold services as usual, ring the church bells and trust God with the outcome. They rang the bells. The French took the ringing of the bells as denoting the arrival of Austrian troops to defend the town and they rapidly withdrew. God works mysteriously sometimes in protecting his own.

In the African Sudan a missionary and family were in great peril from the tribes which threatened to destroy them. Warning was sent the missionary by the British Consul to hasten out at once, as an attack was imminent. The missionary went to prayer and resolved he would not flee but trust in God. That night a host of savages were on their way to attack, when a British airplane with great lights appeared. Terror seized the savages, they fled in all directions, the missionary was saved.

"God is the refuge of his saints,
When storms of sharp distress invade;
Ere we can offer our complaints
Behold him present with his aid."

A FEW MILD WORDS IN DEFENSE OF PREACHERS.

Bernhard Baegner.

HERE's to the preacher! Who is like unto him? His critics are many and vociferous; his defenders few and mild in voice; but could we get along without him?

He's not perfect (he'll confess it himself) but he's closer to perfection than his critics are. While they find fault with the English of last Sunday's sermon, he is out visiting the sick; when they spend an evening at the club, he is conducting a prayer meeting; while they "damn him with faint phrase" or furious invective, he is comforting the broken-hearted and consoling the sorrowful.

His critics may produce material wealth; but he produces something infinitely nobler and better—character! We may criticize his sermons, his pastoral work, but in the supreme moments of life—when life is born, when the nuptial bells ring gladly, when the Somber Angel appears at the door, we cannot do without him.

If a physician be a good physician, an attorney a good attorney, the world is satisfied. But if a preacher be a good preacher, is that enough? Not in ten thousand years.

He must be a good preacher, certainly; but that is only a fraction of one percent. of what is expected of him. He must be a model of virtue, tact and uncommon sense. He must be as wise as Socrates, as patient as Job, as harmless as a dove, as diplomatic as Met-ternich, as business-like as Charles M. Schwab, as eloquent as Webster, as subtle as Emerson, as practical as Westinghouse—a superman, in truth! In addition to all this, many expect him to be a hired man for the Ladies' Aid Society, office boy for the official board and perpetual peacemaker between church factions the members of which cannot agree.

If he fails, in any of these things, he is accounted a failure—by somebody. Obviously, this is all unjust and unfair, but for the moment, we are impartially and impersonally recording the facts. At some other time, we plan to expose the fallacious reasoning of the clergy's critics.

He (the preacher) spends more time and money in getting his education than any man I know, and still he gets less pay than anybody else who has prepared in a similar way. He strives for years to acquire the knowledge which will permit him to appreciate certain books, but when he has acquired this art of appreciation he can seldom afford the books he is to appreciate. Following the grade school, he must go through high school, college and the seminary—eleven years in all. After all that preparation, he is given a post in the rural districts paying him a puny salary.

As recipient of unmerited criticism, he is the world's champion.

If he uses slang, he is sensational; if he uses good English, he is a high-brow. If he attacks present-day evils, he is a demagogue; if he doesn't, he is a spineless coward. If his political opinions are liberal, he is a Bolshevik; if he is a political conservative, he is the tool of the capitalistic system. If he believes in a personal devil, he is narrow and medieval; if he doesn't he is a higher critic. If his church progresses financially, he is dubbed an expert beggar; if it doesn't, he is an incompetent administrator.

If he dresses well, he is extravagant and stuck-up; if he doesn't he is untidy and parsimonious. If his audiences are small, he is a poor preacher; if he fills the edifice every Sunday, he is a seeker after notoriety. If he preaches about the sins of the Old Testament, he is not up-to-date; if he preaches about the sins of his own congregation the wealthy contributors and politicians refuse their support. If he has intimate friends, he is playing favorites; if he has no friends, he is cold and distant. No matter what he does or says, somebody is going to join in the Anvil Chorus.

The following verse, discovered years ago in an Episcopal weekly, summarizes the impossible demands which are made of the average minister.

WANTED: A PERFECT RECTOR.

Our wardens have gone traveling; they're on a mission bent,
To pick us out a rector—one with whom we'll be content.

He mustn't be too High, and he mustn't be too low;
We'd like him very plastic, a man made out of dough.

He mustn't be too short, and he mustn't be too tall,
And he must not have opinions that will clash with ours at all.

He mustn't be too young, and he mustn't be too old,
And he must be very humble and never speak out bold.

He must please the rich and haughty, and the poor and humble too,
And he must always praise us all for everything we do.

He must be very tactful, and have pleasant things to say,
And when we disobey him, he must look the other way.

Our wardens seem to think that they can find the very man;
But, do you know, I'm doubtful if they ever really can.

This versifier, being an Episcopalian, uses the ecclesiastical vocabulary of his particular communion, but his summary of what is expected of the average minister is candidly frank in its truthfulness.

So much is expected of him—too much in fact. And if he cannot fill the requirements, he is attacked, unjustly and unfairly, from within and without the church. Every act of his is subjected to the severest scrutiny, and when the defect searchers, aided by microscope and telescope, discover anything which they dislike, they immediately open up a barrage of censure and abuse.

Harsh words are said about him, unkind criticisms are made, and still the preacher makes an important, nay a necessary contribution to civilization and progress.

In a world of commercialism and dollar chasing, he holds aloft the banner of an Ideal that is spiritual and eternal. He deals primarily not with material objects but with the imponderables, the things of the Spirit, everlasting truths, by which the world is to be saved.

And these truths, sane and homely, are healing in their influence, comforting in practice, steadying in their effects, and prevent life from descending to the level of the beast.

He has his faults, our preacher, but can civilization ever repay the colossal debt it owes him?

Taylor University Elects New President.

Taylor University, at Upland, Ind., is starting on a new forward movement under the leadership of Dr. Robert Lee Stuart, recently elected to the presidency as successor of Dr. John Paul, who retired from the office of president April 1. Under the almost nine years of Dr. John Paul's administration, the school plant and equipment have greatly improved and enlarged, and the institution came into a wider and more favorable place of influence with the public in the field of Christian education.

Dr. Stuart comes to the leadership at a hard time in the business world to carry the school forward through another period of growth in attendance and material development, but he comes in the full strength of years, both in body and mind, and with the courage and a consecration ready to tackle a hard job. Coupled with an unwavering faith in God is a faith in the future of Taylor, his alma mater, and in the work of higher education built around Christ and the unquestioned Bible as a center.

To the support of Dr. Stuart as their new leader the faculty and students are rallying with an optimism and enthusiastic loyalty that give promise of a healthy future for Taylor University, "The College that Cares for the Soul."

Great Evangelist Commended.

Rev. F. Lincicome, of Gary, Ind., is today one of the foremost evangelists of America. By a steady upward climb during the past years he has come to the very front rank of the leading ministers of the nation. He is a noted Fundamentalist and a powerful preacher of the Gospel. He rings clear and strong on the great cardinal doctrines of Christianity. His well-thought-out and carefully-prepared sermons are constructive and brimful of facts for saints and fasten conviction on the sinners. He is equally at home in a red-hot holiness camp meeting or a large Tabernacle campaign. God is mightily using this gifted and guided man in these perilous times for the upbuilding of his kingdom. Follow his career, watch his slate and be sure to hear him if he comes your way. Pastors and camp meeting committees can reach him by writing him at 412 Jefferson St., Gary, Ind.

The First 10,000 Years in Hell,

With Introduction by Rev. H. C. Morrison, is a book of five stirring sermons, "Ten Thousand Years in Hell," "The Fate of an Unfaithful Shepherd," "A Pastor's Vision of a Lost Soul," and two others. This is a book that is calculated to make one stop and think, and there never was a time when it was more needed. 25c a copy, or $2.00 per dozen. Place a dozen or more where needed.

FAITH, A SOUL POWER.

W. M. Young, Ph.D., D.D.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. For by it the elders obtained a good report. Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." Hebrews 11:1-3.

FAITH is a soul-power which seems to have received greater consideration in other ages than in ours. We have psychologists who hesitate to make use of the word soul, and yet psychology is supposed to be the science of the soul and the powers and functions of the human soul. But though scientists of a certain sort may ignore the soul, we are all the time acknowledging the soul in the things that we do. We do not build schools, and colleges, and churches for animals. Even though some evolutionists believe that man sprang from some branch of the monkey family, they do not build institutions to develop them into men. Why do we build great pipe organs, and write inspiring songs, and compose exquisite music, and form great choirs? Because man has a soul.

THE BIBLE IS THE GREAT SOUL-BOOK.

Why did God inspire the writing of the Bible? Was it not to meet the needs of the human soul? The Bible meets the soul's needs as no other book. It is God's reply to the longings of the human soul for forgiveness, and peace, and hope, and faith, and love, and eternal life. Imagine the condition of a bird that has developed in the shell by the heat of an incubator or the brooding of the mother bird, and feels the urge to break the shell and be free, or the butterfly that is ready to burst the cocoon and fly away into a larger, nobler environment. When man is aroused and his spiritual nature is touched by the Spirit of God, he is like a living man entombed beneath a coffin lid, he struggles for light and air and food. However men strive to ignore the soul, it will not down.

THE SOUL IS A THING OF POWER.

If we accept the statement of Saint James, "The body without the spirit is dead," then we are led to admit that the soul is a thing of power.

In Bishop Foster's book, "Christian Purify," there is an illustration of a man who stretched himself upon a ladder and held himself there in spite of the efforts of two of the strongest horses to draw him off. "Muscular power!" say you. "Soul power!" say I. Bind a dead man there by hands and feet, and a single horse would shred his body like flax in the hands of the hatcheler."

Men need no longer doubt the great strength of Samson when we see Quasimodo of our own generation who could lift more than Samson, and yet we are told that the secret of Samson's power was spiritual; when the Spirit of the Lord departed from him, he was weak as other men.

PROGRESS DEPENDS ON SOUL-POWER.

Mr. Babson tells us of two men who were standing on the bridge at Niagara looking at the great falls. One turned to the other and said, "Behold the greatest source of undeveloped power in America!" "No; the greatest source of undeveloped power in America is the soul of man," replied the other. And then Mr. Babson says: "We have gone daffy over such things as steam, electricity, water power, buildings, railroads, and ships, and we have forgotten the human soul upon which all these things depend and from which all these things originate."

Look out upon the world today and see all the vast developments of science, and art, and literature, and all the progress of the modern world, and yet the basis of all this is soul-power. Soul-power is fundamental to all human greatness. When we neglect to develop our soul-powers, we allow the roots of our imperial greatness to shrivel.

FAITH A SOUL-POWER.

Faith is a faculty of the soul. Faith is to the spiritual man what conscience is to the moral man, and what intellect is to the thinking man. We talk about reasoning out a problem, but who ever heard of faithing out a matter? Dr. Isaac T. Headland says: "We have made reason into a verb, because just as soon as a faculty goes to work it must work as a verb . . . There are great spiritual problems which will never be solved unless they are faithed. Who by searching, thinking, reasoning can find out God? Spiritual problems must be solved by spiritual faculties. No man could solve a problem in Euclid by faith. Nor could any one solve a spiritual problem by reason. You can no more reason things of faith than you can faith things of reason. Each must do its own work in its own realm."

DEVELOPMENT OF FAITH.

Faith may be developed by certain laws and rules just as conscience or reason can be developed. Paul says: "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. 10:17. But where is the University or Theological Seminary that has endowed a chair for the culture and development of faith. We have colleges and universities which tend to break down faith. But, God forbid that we should destroy one of the greatest soul-powers that he has given to man!

This is not an age of faith; this is an age of unbelief. What right have we to say that there never was an age of faith? Because we have never seen a dinosaur or a megatherium, what right have we to say that they never existed. If some men have never seen miracles wrought by faith, what right have they to affirm that miracles were never wrought by faith? Jesus says: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Matt. 28:18. He also says: "Whosoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." John 16:23.

FAITH BEYOND SCIENCE.

A very much worthwhile book is called "Beyond Agnosticism." Shall we not say that faith is beyond science. Science may lead us out into the Jordan till we can no longer touch bottom, and then we must either sink or strike out by faith for the other shore. Science can bring us down to the Jordan of Death, but there we will need the hand of faith to lay hold upon God and eternal life.

Reason may present to us the way of salvation; but we must take hold of Christ by faith. Learned professors may present to us the great facts of history, but we will have to accept them upon the testimony of others. The sacred writers have presented to us a great Saviour who was with the Father before the world was, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, "made of a woman," (Gal. 4:4) wrought miracles, died a sacrificial death, and rose from the dead, but we will have to accept the facts by faith, for we can never go back to the year of our Lord to prove them for ourselves. Paul tells us that this is the gospel by which we are saved, "that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15:3, 4. But that information may profit us little unless we receive it by faith. "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." Eph. 2:8, 9.

I entered the Treasury Building at Washington, and a guide took me down to a great vault in the basement; we came to great iron doors, and he said that the Government had $111,000,000 silver dollars stored away there. As we came away a man said to me, "We can hardly say that we have seen $111,000,000." No, we had not seen it, but we both believed it. The United States Government was authority enough for us. God tells us that we were made in his image and may obtain eternal life through Christ; that is good enough authority for me.

"THE ELDERS OBTAINED A GOOD REPORT."

The elders of whom the writer speaks may not have known as much about science as we do, but they knew more about faith. Faith is that great soul-power by which Enoch, and Noah, and Moses walked with God. By faith Moses changed a rod into a serpent and sand into lice. By faith Joshua dried up a river and knocked down the walls of a city just as effectively as the big German guns knocked down the walls of Antwerp. By faith Elijah increased the barrel of flour just as Jesus increased the loaves and the fishes by which he fed the thousands. By faith Elijah called down fire from heaven and brought water upon a thirsty land. By faith Elisha made an ax of iron to swim, and Daniel stopped the mouths of lions, and three Hebrews passed through the fire uninjured. By faith Jesus turned water into wine, and walked upon water, and cured the leprosy, and raised the dead. Men of our day deny these things, but they deny them because they have not faith. Science cannot explain these things, because faith is a soul-power which science has not yet appropriated.

"THROUGH FAITH WE UNDERSTAND THAT THE WORLDS WERE FRAMED."

If this had been written by some evolutionist, he would have said by evolution the worlds were framed, but creative evolution never created anything. Evolution is as helpless a god as Dagon, the god of the Philis-times, which fell to the ground before the ark of the Lord. 1 Sam. 5:4. If evolution be anything, it is the description of a process, but back of the process is the Lord God Almighty, and he has faith and knows how to use it to create worlds and to bring many sons to glory.

Let us today make an adventure of faith; faith in the blood of Christ; faith in the love of the Father; faith in the great beyond. Soon we shall come to the end of the trail, and we shall have to faith it across the gulf into the Paradise of God.

Ecclesiasticism or Evangelism.

JOSEPH H. SMITH.

HERE are two of Spirituality's handmaidens who strive, ever and again, to be mistress of the house. These are Educationalism and Ecclesiasticism. Each has a lawful and an important place; but it is hard to keep either of them in their own proper sphere. Tributary they both may be to the soul-saving mission of Christianity; but when not subordinated they suppress Evangelism with their phylacteries and dim the light of Truth with their tapestries. The learning of the educated, meant to be an instrument in the declaring if not in the discovering of saving Truth, may minister to the pride of men's reason by exalting science and philosophy above what is written; and the power of church rulers meant to serve in furthering the liberty wherewith Christ makes men free may lord it over God's heritage to the shutting of the doors of the Kingdom to many. When thus out of divine order, they build up hierarchies of their own instead of the temple of the Holy Ghost among men, they develop themselves in mastery more than in ministry. They foster forms rather than the power of godliness. They evolve an order in worship that is more funereal than like the freedom, frolicsomeness, and fervor of a normal household of faith. Their rule grows more and more big businesslike and oppressive upon monetary lines, and more and more lax upon spiritual, social and moral lines. Loyalty to the church is construed into sectarian fidelity rather than adherence to the faith once (for all) delivered unto the saints. Tribal fealty takes ascendancy over fidelity to Israel at large. State rights, as it were, would secede from Federal unity.

Nor are the attempts of church federations to be mistaken for approaches to the unity of the Spirit. These are as patent failures as is the League of Nations for the maintainance of world peace. All such federations cost concessions, and compromises as to some things essential, and tacit agreements and consent only upon things incidental. Their sectarian sensitiveness is as acute and alert as when acting in their individual or independent capacities. These unifications of churches upon the ecclesiastical plane are more of the nature of business mergers than of Pentecostal fusions. Their leading objectives are material and political rather than spiritual. Their chief arguments are economical rather than evangelistic. Wherever we have known such denominational mergers there has grown a fresh necessity for some independent agency or mission for the saving of men. In proportion as a church grows big and its ecclesiasticism gets strong, it becomes less soul-saving and in proportion as ministers ascend in ecclesiastical office they decrease in evangelistic passion, purpose and practice.

Government has a place in Christian society. It is only apostates, heretics, fanatics, modernists, and the ignorant that despise governments and speak evil of dignities and assume to be a law unto themselves. And the holy man that is wise will obey them that have the rule and follow their faith as they that must give account.

But as domination leads to revolution in the State, and as children leave home as soon as they can without much love or longing to return where all they knew of parental love was a father's rule and rod, so the excessive ecclesiastical developments of our day, together with the dry feed substitutes for green pasture, are filling the corrals with goats and causing the sheep to wander hither and thither after food for their souls.

Yes, governments have a necessary place; but what Christ majored upon in his ministry is entitled to first place. Institutionalism and organization do not appear in the narrative of the gospels save only in the faintest shadows. His fellowship with the apostles began in his lodging rather than in a temple, synagogue or school. He announced family relationships—as of mother, sister and brother, for them that believed in him. He showed that it was the ambition of the politician or the practice of the nations to have rule over the people, but “declared it shall not be so among you.” No, nor yet from their religious hierarchies where they are called “Rabbi” are you to take your pattern; but as the Son of man come not to be ministered unto but to minister so be ye “brethren.” Neither to fence in, corral of his own, nor to fleece for maintenance of the budget; but to feed the lambs and the sheep is the foremost and the final charge of Christ to a minister who was to lead like Peter.

The Church of Christ to which we belong is much greater than the denomination that holds our name. This true Church of the Lord Jesus is more manifest in some of the very smallest denominations and simplest missions than in most of the great ecclesiasticisms of our day. More of real Truth—revealed Truth is to be heard in a single week in some of these humble societies than in a whole year in many of these “big” churches. (The writer is personal witness to this fact). That is a true household of faith where souls are born again, and where Zion's daughters are arrayed with the wedding garment of holiness awaiting the coming of the Bridegroom: and where the clear notes of the gospel trumpet are being sounded to their neighborhood and to the uttermost parts of the earth. (Missions have their beginning at our “Jerusalem” and in Evangelism of our “Judea”)

Let not our holiness people be dismayed at the smallness of their societies, or the crudeness, immaturity and changing policies of their ecclesiasticism. Much of the bigness of the churches is dropsical (and is due to heart disease,) and much of the refinement and complexity and dignity and power of the church governments above us is worldly, political, and monetary.

Let our faith and our zest be greater for souls than for (even) our church: and with inflexibility of purpose we can risk much flexibility in policy for adjustment to times and conditions as we find them.

“Sanctify them”—Who? What?

REV. A. S. HUNTER.

Jesus' upper room prayer, “Sanctify them,” was not incidental, but climactic. The entire prayer followed what was probably the most intimate discourse Jesus ever made to them. In it, he marked them as “not of the world, therefore the world hateth you.” In the prayer he said, “Thine they were, and thou gavest them to me.” They had been God's in some special sense, or such a mention would have no meaning.

Undoubtedly, those men had been among the many who, under John the Baptist's preaching, had repented of their sins; confessed them, and been baptized in token of the remission of their sins; they had been converted, born of the Spirit, made children of God. It was by that, that they had become the Father's, and he gave them to the Son.

Their recognition of Jesus as “the Christ, the Son of the living God,” was through their relation to the Father. John had identified him to them as “the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world,” and who baptized with the Holy Spirit. Therefore when Jesus called them, individually, from their vacation, they were ready to leave all and go with him.

Jesus' call to follow him was not their call to salvation, or to discipleship, but to special service. He did not thus call all who believed on him to leave their business and go with him. Again, from the whole body of his disciples, he chose 12 apostles, sent ones. So, in this prayer, he said “As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world.” In the previous discourse, he had said to them, “I have chosen you and ordained you.” Thus we see how wholly distinct they were from “the world” of unbelievers—at least three steps separated.

Long before, Jesus had said, “I will build my Church.” The Greek word “ekklesia,” translated “church,” literally means, “I call out.” Therefore, what Jesus really said was, “I will build My called out ones”; and such these were. And, it was for the called out, separated, unworldly ones, that Jesus prayed, “Sanctify them.” And, to make the distinction more definite, he said, “I pray not for the world,” out from which these had come. In like manner, the Holy Spirit, by Paul said, “Christ loved the Church (called out ones), and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it, . . . that it should be holy.”

Therefore, “Who” is the called out, separated, unworldly church? Only such are eligible to sanctification, and will receive the truth.

Next, “What?” The Greek word, “hagios,” means holy, pure, clean. “Hagiadzo” is the verb, meaning “to make holy”; and which is translated, “sanctify.” Our English word, “sanctify,” is from two Latin words which mean “to make holy.” Therefore, “sanctify” is the correct translation of “hagiadzo.” That is the primary meaning of “sanctify”, to make holy.

Like many other words, in use it has acquired a secondary, a modified meaning; that is, to set apart, to dedicate, to consecrate. Thus, “God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it”; he set it apart from the other days of the week, to the sacred purpose of his worship. Likewise, we dedicate, set apart, consecrate church buildings to a like sacred use, the worship of God. Neither time nor material things have a moral character, and they cannot literally be made holy; they can be holy only as to their use.

Likewise, Jesus said of himself, “for their sakes, I sanctify myself.” He was always holy, therefore, he could not be made holy, as we must be. But, he did set himself apart from the glory which he had with the Father, “and was made in the likeness of men; . . . and became obedient unto death”; and all this that sinners should be saved from sin, and his Church sanctified, made holy. So, his prayer continues, “For their sakes I sanctify (set apart) myself, that they may be truly sanctified” (made holy).

Therefore, “What” is purified, made holy?

Verses 17 to 19 are the climax of the upper room prayer, which is itself a sample of Jesus' mediatorial prayer for us now. From that climax radiates all that follows in the prayer, including the unity of believers. That unity is unity in holiness. And, the prayer reaches down to the end of time, taking in “all them also which shall believe on me through their word.” Every called out, separated, unworldly disciple of Jesus is in his prayer, “Sanctify them.”

Salt, so needful, so wholesome, yet is it to be wisely used. Salt discreetly sprinkled over all the common dishes of life, giving all things a savor and sweetness,—this our Master seeks to make us!—Mark Guy Pearse.

E. STANLEY JONES' LETTER

My dear Friend:

THIS is Easter Day. I have just come back from the service at the church where, in response to my appeal that the young people make their decision, nearly the whole church stood in front of me. The Living, Resurrected Christ stood in our midst and his hand was on the heads of us all as we bowed for his touch.

I am at home now putting the finishing touches on a book which I have been writing. I have never tried writing in the midst of the evangelistic campaigns. But it has worked beautifully. It made the writing stay close to reality, for every day it was being corrected by the facts of life. This book on the Sermon on the Mount has been written out of the heart of the situation. There will be the scars of India's strife upon it.

But I must not talk about the book for I want to tell you of the most wonderful three months I have ever had. They were exciting three months for the national situation was acute. The Round Table Conference in London had been far more successful than we had hoped and then came the release of Gandhiji and the national leaders. It looked as though for awhile there would be no agreement between the Government and nationalists. But when Lord Irwin and Gandhiji got together and spent days in conference, the human touch of these great souls did it. Lord Irwin is a real Christian, a man of prayer and he is really interested in India. I have never talked with a man who so impressed me with the depth of his sincerity and fineness of character. Men like him hold the British Empire together. When the announcement of the agreement was made I was in Rajkot and announced it to the audience. There were cheers, and may I add, there were tears! It seemed too good to be true. Since then the situation, which has seemed brighter than it has ever been for years, has been marred by two things: one was the hanging of one of the revolutionaries and his companions. Government should have commuted their sentences to life imprisonment, and then they would not have been made martyrs. They were guilty of murder, it is true, but the ends of justice would have been better served by life imprisonment and the situation would have been bettered. Since their hanging the situation has been set back distinctly. The other blunder was the pronouncement of Gandhiji about the work of the Christian Missions in India. I will not quote what he is reported to have said for press reports are not very reliable. I have written an open letter to him in reply to these reported statements. What he said is a decided disappointment. As I write the situation seems easier for the Congress has declared that every one will have the right to religious freedom. That is a distinct gain.

But I must not take up more space with the political situation. You will want to hear about my meetings. One of the finest series I have had was in Rajkot, Kathiawar. This section of Western India is a series of States ruled over by Indian rulers under an Agent of the Viceroy, an Englishman. They are independent, but they have relationships with the central Government through him. This Agent, a very fine type of Englishman, became interested in the meetings and stood back of them in every way. The committee of non-Christians met at his house on the first day of my arrival to welcome me. This Committee of non-Christians managed the meetings. The Agent invited in some of the Maharajas and two of them came and stayed three days though they only intended to stay one! It was great to preach the Gospel to these rulers of millions. I had long talks with these rulers at the Residency where they were staying with the British Resident. I found them most interested. One night the Prime Minister of a Native State forty miles away came to take the chair. In a talk with this Prime Minister, who was a Moslem, he said, "My religion is gone. It has been killed by the backwardness of the followers of Islam." It was a very interesting comment. It cannot be taken literally of course, but he did feel the strain that Islam was being subjected to in these days of enlightenment and progress. He felt that his religion was not quite up to the strain of modern demands. It isn't! One night the virtual ruler of another state, Sir P——, came to the meetings a long distance. I had been his guest in his state several years before so when he heard that I was there he came to attend the meeting. He had just returned from the Round Table Conference in London. He is a sage and a statesman in one. I found that he had a copy of "In His Steps" marked all through where he had underlined what had appealed to him. He has been deeply Christianized. At Rajkot I spoke to about 1200 students in the High School where Gandhiji had attended while a boy. It was a great meeting.

FACTS FROM THE FIRING LINE.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."—Hos. 4:6.

Prohibition has wrought miracles of moral, social and economic redemption, but thousands of drunks do not know it. Every pastor is urged to reprint the following Fact in the Church Calendar, or read it from the pulpit to offset the destructive wet propaganda which appears in many of the secular newspapers. A new Fact appears in this place in each issue.

Prohibition has reduced commitments for drunkenness by 55.3 per cent according to the figures of the U. S. Census Bureau.

One of the finest series I have had was at Baroda. This state is one of the largest and best governed in the whole of India. The Gaekwar is a very enlightened ruler. He sent word one day that he wished to attend my lecture. He sent invitations to 300 of his officials to attend, and the invitation of the ruler is a command! So they all turned up from the Prime Minister down. The state authorities took over charge of the theater and decorated for the occasion and put down in front a raised platform on which His Highness was to sit. Red carpets were put out to the motor. The place was packed and jammed. I had literally the whole state before me. For an hour and a half I spoke on the Sermon on the Mount. "You were very courageous to say those things in front of rulers," someone said to me afterwards. But I refuse on principle to change one single thing from the address I give to the ordinary people. When the Viceroy came I said exactly the same things I would have said were he not there. It is the only way one can save his own soul. The Gaekwar was deeply moved and held my hand a long time at the close and said to me, "I am trying to live some of the things you have been saying tonight." I think he is. He was so moved that he said he wanted to come the next night. They prepared for him but he was detained. The Prime Minister came however and presided. I gave two whole nights to questions alone. I found some of the young men decidedly anti-religious. It is a symptom. But the crowds were wonderfully fine and responsive.

Kolhapur is another native state and there the theater was packed to its utmost limits. One night the principal of the local college was the chairman of the meeting and at the close of the address he tore me to shreds. He

HERE IT IS!

Just what you have longed for—a small Bible with large clear type.

The binding is an extra fine genuine Levant Morocco, leather lined to edge, silk sewed. A beautiful small grain, stamped in gold, overlapping edges. It is exceedingly flexible.

The paper is a very white, opaque, thin India which makes the Bible thin and light; at the same time, it is very durable.

The type is a large, clear special self-pronouncing that reads like long primer. The names of the books are printed on the corner of the pages, making it easy to turn to them; the chapter numbers are in figures.

The helps are 40,000 center column references with dates at the head of each column, one of the most comprehensive and complete concordances of 160 pages, 80 pages of other valuable helps, including maps in colors.

It is red under gold edges, has the silk headband and marker, thickness is 1 inch, size is 5x7, weight is 22 ozs.

We have been selling Bibles for 30 years and this comes nearer being the most ideal than anything we have offered to our customers. The binding is handsome and durable, and the most pleasing thing about the book is that it lies perfectly flat in the hand anywhere it is opened. This is a book you will fall in love with.

The regular net price of it is $8.50. We have tried for years to have manufactured the finest and most attractive Bible that could be made, and at the same time sell it at the low price of $5.00. We have just been successful in doing this and you can get one of them. On account of the close margin at which we are selling them, we ask you to send 10c extra to pay the postage. If you are not doubly pleased, you may return the Bible in good condition within 10 days and we will refund your money promptly.

was brilliant and unscrupulous and for half an hour he ripped me to pieces. They expected me to answer him the next night. I arose and said, "You wonder if there are any pieces left of me after last night, I want to report that I am not even bruised. The man who tries to hurt another only hurts himself. I am unhurt." I then went on with my address. The next day this man was in our Round Table Conference and when it came his turn to tell what religion meant to him in experience, he was out of his depths, said a few halting things and closed. It was an awful collapse. The nemesis had come of its own accord. It always does.

I stopped one night at Miraj where 17 years ago I was operated on after a hard battle with tetanus. What a wonderful hospital these Presbyterians are running. They work night and day. Dr. Wanless said recently, "I am getting to be an old man, now I cannot continue on operating till midnight as I used to do. I have to knock off at nine o'clock now." And he said it with a sigh as though he were a shirker!

Several hundred stayed for the after-meeting at Belgaum and there was a deep sense of God in the meeting. My space is gone and I cannot tell of Vengurla and other places. This has been a great round.

I am in Sitapur for a few days and then I go to the Ashram to be there for two and a half months with a very splendid group. It is going to be much larger than last year, and I hope much deeper. As we are there in group meditation and prayer and thought we will think of you and thank God for you and what you do to help us in the work of the Kingdom.

We will try to be God's trustee for your gifts and put them where they will count for the Kingdom.

With my prayers and gratitude,

E. STANLEY JONES.

If You Want Something

Convincing on the tithe, something that tells you what God says about it, send 10c and get a copy of "Will A Man Rob God." It is a splendid little book to hand out to members of your church who do not believe in tithing. We will send one dozen for $1.00.

GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD

FLORIDA MEETINGS.

At this writing I am beginning a meeting at Bonita Springs, Fla., after closing a most successful engagement in Ft. Myers, twenty miles north of this place.

In Fort Myers we had quite a number saved and reclaimed, the church membership strengthened and increased, some ten or twelve family altars erected and eight pledged for tithing. The pastor, Rev. Hubert Dodd, we had helped before in Venice, Fla. He is one of our coming preachers and his people love him very much. In this connection allow me to say that I have the advantage over some evangelists in that, when I leave I do not take the hearts of the people with me, but do all in my power to form a stronger fellowship, if possible, between the pastor and his people. The attraction for me is not sufficient to take the affections of his people with me. Another advantage I have is, that after my preaching it makes the pastor's work better. "Well bless the Lord any how," as Will Huff used to say. Keep praying for us. Charlie D. Tillman.

ENROUTE FROM MADRAS TO MAHABLESCHWAR.

Dear Herald Friends:

India, "The eternal riddle," with its three hundred and fifty million God-hungry souls; over religious, yet filled with the horror of eternal hopelessness; stained with the blood of countless millions of sacrificial bulls and goats, but forever her people a wretched, quivering sacrifice to the gods of pain, poverty and rampant lusts; renowned for her men of super-intellect and mental alertness, replete with liberty and scientific lore which dates back to prehistoric ages, but still groping in illiteracy. Boasting redundantly rich rajahs, while overwhelmed with the peril of a pitifully poor populace. What a commentary on the power of heathenism!

As we steamed up the treacherous winding channel of the Hoogly River, one of the mouths of the sacred Ganges, we were somewhat apprehensive. India, we had been told, smothered under the thick absorptive blanket of a Hinduism, re-invigorated by anti-English political agitation, had little desire for Christianity. Also our friends had warned us against coming in the hot season. One on whom we had counted much said, "It will be no use to come if you can't get here until March." Then too, we knew nothing of our program. One meeting was definitely scheduled in Calcutta, but we were in the dark as to whom we were working with and what they expected of us. One thing we did know, that a hard battle was ahead. Several days before, as we knelt in our ship cabin praying about India, God sent us a wireless, in that we were all led to realize our utter dependence upon the Holy Spirit for grace, strength and power to meet some unforeseen conflict.

Sweltering under a mid-day tropical sun we slowly docked and landed in the midst of clamorous confusion, caused by hundreds of almost naked coolies, each determined to have his share of the passengers' baggage. Wm. Mawson, whom we knew at Asbury, warmly welcomed us to India, and took us to the Lee Memorial, a commodious steel and concrete structure of four stories, providing school and dormitory facilities for four hundred Indian girls, many of them orphans and outcasts. This meritorious institution was wrought through the indomitable faith and courage of Mrs. Ada Lee and her late husband, who turned heart-rending tragedy into glorious triumph as they dedicated the Lee Memorial, a monument to their six beloved children, who, as Mrs. Lee beautifully puts it, "On September 24, 1899, in a landslide at Darjeeling, India, a sanitarium in the Himalaya Mountains, God called upon us to return to him—and took away that which was dearer than all the world besides."

Mrs. Lee adopted us into her great family as soon as we arrived, and immediately called us into conference, where we learned that we were to conduct a highly advertised, city-wide revival campaign for English-speaking people. We knew then why God had called us to lean upon him for a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit a few days before. As we realized the importance, magnitude and possibilities of the opportunity before us it almost took our breath. That night we met the committee in charge of details, which included pastors of Methodist, Congregational, Anglican and Nazarene Churches, several missionaries and Christian business men. Many of them had banded together and for two years cried to God for a revival in Calcutta. Their expressed faith and confidence put new life into us so that, from the first service, we were conscious of the presence of God.

The program called for two evening services daily; one at 6:30, and the other at 9:15. Both were well attended from the start by a mixed congregation of Americans and Europeans, Anglo-Indians, and Indians. At first, we were a curiosity with our informal, breezy American ways, but after we got acquainted, conviction began to settle upon the crowd. The first altar call was given the third night and one young man came to pray. The second appeal brought at least a dozen to the mourners' bench. On the fourth day, such hunger to get right with God fell upon the people that little effort was needed to bring them to the place of prayer, and by the end of the ten days hundreds had sought God. Scores returned night after night to pray until their faith had found firm anchorage in the Rock of Ages. Many of those who came were Westerners and Indians, but the great bulk of those reached were Anglo-Indians. Their mixed blood constitutes a cruel barrier, segregating them from both Indians and English, which they feel keenly. Thank God, there is no barrier between them and the great family of our Heavenly Father, into which so many of them were freely adopted during these days of gracious spiritual blessings.

God has marvelously opened doors, and we have more calls than we can fill, notwithstanding the vacation season. As we write this letter, jolting along through a parched rough country in a third-class coach, the thermometer hanging upon the wall of our compartment stands at 105 degrees. God has graciously provided health and strength to meet our strenuous demands through this intense heat. Praise his name! Asbury Foreign Missionary Team, Crouse, Erny, Kirkpatrick.

MANCHESTER, GEORGIA.

We have just closed the greatest meeting that the town of Manchester, Ga., has ever seen. All the churches in town participated. There were something over 200 conversions and reclamations. Around 200 lined up with the various churches, and the churches are greatly strengthened. This meeting was conducted in a large tent, with a seating capacity of 1800 people, and was filled most every night. The music was directed by Rev. James B. Cambron, of Bessemer, Ala., assisted by a choir of 100 voices with a twelve-piece orchestra.

Evangelist J. A. Collier, of 1415 Forrest Ave., Nashville, Tenn., did the preaching. Bro. Collier is a great preacher of the old-time gospel, and one of the outstanding evangelists in the field. He condemns sin and holds up the Christ who is able to save to the uttermost. He has an open date from June 7th to 28th. Any one desiring his help will do well to secure his services. We pastors of the town are glad to recommend him for a city-wide or church meeting.

T. E. Steely, Acting Sec., of the Pastors' Alliance.

TWO GOOD REVIVALS.

I closed a fairly good revival with Rev. S. J. B. True, at Fordsville, Ky., the last of March with some bright conversions, among them the reclamation of a young man who had passed four years of the course of study in the Louisville Conference, but located and backslid. This young man was wonderfully blessed and has gone to preaching again. There were 17 additions to the church.

What is said to be the best revival in the history of the church at Horse Branch, Ky., was closed May 10 with some twenty additions to the church. It was a revival of the Christians and a work of real salvation. The last day of the meeting the old-time shout was heard in the afternoon service, and at night the Holy Spirit was so consciously present one woman laughed the holy laugh, others wept, all rejoiced together at the great work of grace wrought in the hearts and lives of the converts, who were all mature, among them several heads of families. The membership was increased fifty per cent. I have seen 74 received into the church since conference, under my ministry. God has all the praise and the glory. C. K. Dickey.

INTERESTING MEETINGS.

The fact that we have not reported in your valued paper for a long time does not indicate that we have not been busy. We are glad to report victory all along the line. We are praising God for his many blessings upon us physically and spiritually. He has kept us more than busy for the past seventeen years in the evangelistic field and years before in the pastorate. We are rejoicing over several very good meetings the past three months. We were sent by our General Home Mission Board for a month's campaign in the metropolis of the South, that historic city of New Orleans. A band of holiness folk are attempting to get a foothold in that very needy city and to plant a Holiness Church of the Nazarene as a Lighthouse for the multitudes out of the Kingdom. It surely is needed there and we did our best under quite unfavorable conditions to help them all we could. Their annual Mardi Gras Carnival was on which seemed to attract the multitudes and made it harder to get a hearing. Yet some sought and found the Lord and were added to the Church.

At Georgetown, Ill., our next engagement, we had a hard battle, but God gave some good victory and the people and their fine pastor were encouraged. At Argo, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, God came mightily on the scene and gave a very gracious meeting with many seeking and finding God in pardon and cleansing, and a good class came into the Church of the Nazarene, of which Rev. and Mrs. Elmer Nelson are the good shepherds.

Our next battle was at West Church of the Nazarene, Wichita, Kan. This was a very good meeting against many difficulties and hindrances. There were four deaths during the revival, affecting four families of the church, which hindered the attendance greatly. But the Lord mightily moved in convicting power; we have seldom seen more soul travail, especially by a few young people, than we saw here. But it paid, for some very hard cases were brought into the kingdom on the last day. A great service with the Sunday school and an altar full of seeking hearts, and souls at the altar for the morning service, and seventeen prayed through in two altar services at night, closing at midnight with shouts of victory. We closed a very good meeting at Newton, Kan., and souls found the Lord. We began our summer campaign here in Freeman, S. D. May God bless all these good people in their work of salvation. We covet your earnest prayers.

Theo. and Minnie E. Ludwig.

JERUSALEM AND ENVIRONS.

Tilden H. Gaddis.

The sacred spots in this Holy City we find are covered by great church buildings. One's indignation is stirred by this ecclesiastical desecration of holy places. A tourist swindling machine in the name of a church has placed its own location, built a shrine and the beggars have gathered there until most everything under a roof has lost its sacredness, and most everything out in the open inspires one. Jesus lived in an out-of-doors country and one can see much by wandering and watching. Such sights as one beholds in the winding streets, up and down steps so narrow that in places you can touch either wall with extended elbows.

It is Friday. We go to the wailing wall and there about the old stones used in Solomon's temple they kiss the granite, chant and repeat and read from Jeremiah, weep and wail and write prayers to stuff in the cracks and, driving nails in between the rocks, believe it will be a "nail in a sure place," burn candles in the niches between the stones as incense to the Lord, and write prayers on the wall. They get together and as one reads the promises all say "Amen." They weave back and forth while soldiers and police in strong guard watch carefully to prevent a repetition of the outbreak of 1929 between Arab and Jew over the rights of this spot.

Jerusalem is very accommodating regarding the Sabbath. Friday is the Moslem, Saturday the Jewish, and Sunday the Christian Sabbath. As the Moslems are more greedy than reverent few shops close on their day except for an hour for the owner to go to say his prayers. At the pool of Bethesda the healing of the impotent man is written in 103 languages. The Crusaders who engaged in a gigantic building program preserved this place as they did many others by building a church on the site.

Of 18,000 tombs about Jerusalem two are exhibited as the one in which Jesus lay. That of the Catholics under the Church of the Holy Sepulcher and Gordon's Tomb which is held by Protestants. In the first mentioned church they have Calvary, the tomb, stone of anointing, rocks cleft by the earthquake at the Resurrection, pillar to which Jesus was bound in Pilate's judgment hall, cistern in which the three crosses were found, tomb which Joseph of Arimathea hewed for self after Jesus used the first one, and the place where Adam, the first man, was buried. All under one roof and near where the cross stood, is the image of the virgin with two million dollars worth of jewelry hung on her, and gold and candles and lamps and altars and crucifix and objects of Pagan worship which so spoil its sacredness that it does not appeal to the true Christian. They claim that Adam was buried on Calvary and at the crucifixion the rocks rent and a drop of Jesus' blood fell on his guilty head; it is for this reason that they always place a skull underneath the cross.

The Upper Room is very striking. It was likely in such a place that our Lord partook of the last supper and later, the 120 tarried for the Holy Ghost and went out to turn the world upside down. The Mount of Olives and Garden of Gethsemane are spoiled by buildings and walls, but we found a place in the Greek section of the Garden to read and pray where a long-robed ecclesiastical beggar did not molest us.

We crossed the Allenby bridge into Transjordan where the mountains of Moab and Mt. Nebo are located, and where the Bedoin tribes are living as they did in the days of Abraham, in the black goatshair tents, a roving nation of strange customs and costumes. A missionary told us that everyone that had turned to the Lord soon disappeared, and all who consider accepting the Lord are threatened with death. A chief told his son that if he became a Christian he would kill him and drink his blood. The Moslems have Moses buried in the wilderness on a mountainside near the Dead Sea. The mount of Temptation where Jesus was led of the Devil, is capped by a Greek monastery.

Our evangelistic labors in the Holy City included ministry to Jews, Arabs, Armenians and Syrians in churches and schools at Jaffa, Bethlehem and Jerusalem. This was a time of rich blessing. With the Church of the Nazarene in Jerusalem, in addition to the regular services to the Armenians, we had an all-English service with twelve missionaries present from various stations, and a good audience of English people who either lived in the city or were visiting. Seventeen remained to pray for themselves and most, if not all, were definitely touched of the Lord. In the closing service the building was packed and included 44 missionaries and Christian workers. The buildings at Jaffa and Jerusalem were taxed to their capacity and some turned away. We plan to return to Jerusalem in the spring of 1933 for a great union campaign among the English-speaking people with the co-operation of various missions.

Fishing for souls is a personal work. Every man or woman who possesses faith and an ardent love of Jesus should engage in it. Each fisher must drop his own hook, baited with love.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

Answer to An Earnest Inquiry.

A reader of THE HERALD writes us a very sincere letter of inquiry with reference to public confession of sins. This party is greatly grieved because of some sins committed in years past. The party claims that these sins were not of a gross, immoral character, and is now living a devout Christian life, but is troubled about these past sins. The writer seems to feel that they should be confessed in a public way.

We have known some earnest evangelists who seem to feel that they were doing great work if they could drive people to drag out their past sins and hold them up to public gaze. We have not sympathized with that sort of thing. It is quite proper for a sinner to confess his sins publicly, but to specify and name what those sins are to the embarrassment and humiliation of the confessor and innocent members of the family, is an entirely different proposition. We judge from the character of the letter to which we refer, that the party concerned is tempted and tortured by the Devil and is being robbed of the peace and joy that said party might enjoy.

Of course, if some individual has been wronged, confession and, if necessary, restitution, should be made to that individual; but to parade one's sins before the public, either before or after, forgiveness, is entirely another proposition. We believe from the letter written us that this friend should say, "Get thee behind me, Satan," trust in Jesus, pray through to victory and rejoice in the Christ who has promised to forgive and remember our sins no more forever.

These lines are not written for the comfort of any one who ought to make a confession to those who have been wronged. The Word of God declares that "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." We do not understand that this means that it is necessary to give a detailed account of one's sins to the public. Untold millions of broken-hearted penitents have confessed to God, and confessed themselves sinners before their fellow-beings and have been graciously saved and gone on to heaven, who never did go before the public with a detailed statement of the various sins they had committed. The party writing us has evidently had a bitter experience of grief for sin.

One of the needs of our time is preaching that will bring on deep conviction for sin, a profound sense of being lost. It is good for a soul to grieve over sin, but Satan would delay and hold one in this painful state of mind. The Lord Jesus is gracious to forgive and mighty to save. We commend this friend, and all others in like state, to trust wholly in the Lord, with a distinct understanding that he shall have his will and way in both heart and life. H. C. M.

Highwater Mark.

The Nashville Christian Advocate, as a great religious weekly, has reached high-water mark. The Editor, Dr. Alfred Franklin Smith, with the publishers, are to be congratulated on the excellence of this religious journal. It ought to have a wide circulation in the church. We can hardly see how any preacher of the denomination it represents can well afford to be without it; and every congregation has persons who would undoubtedly subscribe if the matter was properly presented.

We especially congratulate the editor on the excellent information The Advocate carries on the very important and vital question of Prohibition. If there ever was a time when all the spiritual forces of this nation should unite themselves against the liquor traffic, that great foe of God and humanity, that time is now. The church papers, generally, are having their say against the forces of evil, which are doing their utmost to break down prohibition laws, and bring back upon our people the curse of the liquor traffic. ### THAT GNAWING WORM.

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

It is a nice thing to live with a conscience void of offence toward God and man. One can live so as to pass as respectable in the eyes of the world, but there may be within something that is eating the vitals of Christian experience, which prevents the life from blossoming forth in fruitfulness and beauty.

There is always a cause which produces certain effects. If you are not a fruitful Christian; if the well of water is not springing up unto everlasting life, there must be something wrong at the root of your living, for when the soil is clean the plants will grow and bear fruit.

I was reading a splendid story which illustrates the fact that I have in mind. It is entitled.

THE STORY OF A FERN.

BY W. HAIG MILLER.

A lady of my acquaintance has a fern now in her garden which has a profitable story connected with it. She used to keep this plant in her drawing-room, but was mortified to find that, notwithstanding all the care and attention she bestowed upon it, it would not grow. It had life, it was true, but that was all that could be said of it. One day, taking up the pot that contained it, she said to herself, as she looked upon the puny, sickly thing, "What can be the cause of this? Let me try the effect of deluging it with water." Accordingly, suiting the action to the word, she got the water-jug and poured its contents liberally out upon the poor, diseased plant. Then she repeated the operation, and thought as she did so that the earth in the pot seemed to move a little. Wondering at the cause of this, she still kept pouring on the water, when, lo! out ran from the plant one of those ugly-looking insects which seem to crawl upon a hundred legs—a miniature centipede. It had been comfortably nestling near the roots of the fern, I suppose, and had been able to stand the moderate supply of water that had been usually given to it; it had even managed to endure the two copious waterings that the lady had first bestowed upon it; but the third stream was too much for it. It had evidently made it feel very uncomfortable, and forced it to leave its quarters without any further delay.

The lady (who I may observe has now for thirty-eight years enjoyed the blessing of a clean heart) called her family together and told them what had occurred. "Now," she said, "you will find the fern grow, for the worm that was gnawing at its root has been dislodged. (In this we may in passing observe she was right, for the plant immediately began to sprout up, and is still, after some years, in a healthy and flourishing condition).

"This," the lady continued, "is an emblem of the evil effects produced in the heart when any known evil is allowed there: it will surely stunt it and hinder its growth in happiness and holiness. It is a lesson, too, of the way in which the heart is to be washed from wickedness." (Jeremiah 4:14).

"The insect here could retain its place near the plant, so long as only a little water was applied to it; but it could not stand the deluge of water, so to speak, that I gave it: so with the soul, when it is half-hearted—when the will is only partially surrendered to God. A little grace may enable it to go through a round of half-hearted formal duties, but will not dislodge the evil tempers, the pride and worldliness, that choke it up, and cause the spiritual life to be so often a series of struggles, failure, and defeat. When, however, the Holy Spirit is poured out upon it, like floods upon the dry ground, and the soul is baptized into the death of Christ, and reckons, by faith, its old man crucified with him; then the centipede of evil finds the heart an uncomfortable place for it, and is cast out. The soul relieved from its enemy, grows then in health and beauty, and conformity to the image of Christ."

The same lady is fond of telling another illustrative anecdote, with which I will conclude this paper. On one occasion when she accompanied a friend to pay some legacy duty at Somerset House, one of the sovereigns that were tendered for that purpose being found light of weight, was ruthlessly cut in pieces by the official who was seated there to protect the interests of the Crown.

This circumstance set the lady thinking as she returned home. That sovereign, she reflected, was considered by my friend to be all right. So apparently it was regarded also by the other persons through whose hands it had passed, yet, when it came to the place of test, it was rejected and cut in pieces, because of its defective weight. Let me then take care that my religion shall not in like manner be found wanting. I may have a name to live, and think myself all right. Amongst my neighbors I may pass current as an eminently religious person; but what will all this avail, if, when I come into the presence of the Crown and the Great White Throne, I am rejected and become a cast-away, as being of light weight. Let me take Christ into the balance with me, and be filled with the fruits of his Spirit.

Highlights of Taylor University Commencement Season.

May 31 to June 10.

May 31 to June 3 are banner days. We are privileged to have with us for that period Bishop Francis W. Warne, an outstanding Bishop of the Methodist Church. Bishop Warne's first service will be in the College Chapel at 3:00 P. M., Sunday, May 31. He will speak in the evening at the Methodist Church, in Upland. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday he will speak at 9:40 A. M., and 8:00 P. M. For forty years Bishop Warne was the spiritual dynamo of the great Empire of India. Wherever he went his hearers learned the secrets of spiritual victory in India and every land, and doubtless the same will be true during his stay at Taylor.

Francis Warne was the gift of Canada to the United States and the world. After a few years as a missionary to British North America, the finishing of his education in the United States and a few years in the pastorate in Chicago, he went to Calcutta, India, as successor to Bishop Thoburn in the pastorate of Thoburn Church and Presiding Elder of the Calcutta District. There he served for thirteen years, when he was elected Missionary Bishop of Southern Asia at Chicago in 1900.

June 7th is Baccalaureate Sunday. The baccalaureate sermon will be delivered by Dr. O. W. Fifer of Indianapolis. At 3:00 P. M. the University Chorus, under the direction of Professor Kenneth Wells, will give an Oratorio, The Holy City. Dr. John F. Edwards, of Huntington, Ind., will deliver the anniversary sermon at 7:30 P. M.

Tuesday, June 9 is Alumni Day and Legal Hundred Day. Plans are being made for a big Alumni Rally to greet the new president, who is an alumnus, class of 1906. The Legal Hundred meets at 9:00 A. M. The Alumni business meeting is at 2:00 P. M., followed by a banquet at 5:00 P. M. At 8:00 Dr. Ward W. Long of Stockton, California, will lecture.

The graduating exercises are at 9:30 on Wednesday morning, June 10. Dr. Ira M. Hargett, of Tulsa, Okla., will deliver the Commencement address. President Stuart will present diplomas and awards.

THIS YEAR AND TOMORROW

By Dr. L. R. Akers, President of Asbury College.

T is generally agreed by the administration and faculty of Asbury College that the year just closing has been one of the best, if not the very best, year in the history of our institution.

In spite of the widespread financial difficulties throughout the country, the enrollment of the institution has held up splendidly, being practically the same in the college of liberal arts as last year, while the Seminary has made an appreciable increase.

The year has been marked by unusually gracious revivals in which a large number of the student body, as well as many citizens of the town, have been definitely blessed. The atmosphere of good feeling and spiritual fervor has maintained in a remarkable degree throughout the entire year. There has been unusual harmony in all departments of the school.

The scholastic work has been exceptionally good. The debating teams have run true to form and have come home with almost an unbroken record of victories. Both Glee Clubs have had unusually successful itineraries and have splendidly represented the school in a number of states. The recitals, representing the various departments of the school, have also been of high order. Quite commendatory have been the comments of those who have visited the school as to the fine personnel of the student body, and its cosmopolitan representation from most of the states of the nation. Our Art Department has again distinguished itself by receiving a silver cup of honor and various gold prizes at the exhibit of the Credited Art Students Division of the International Art Students League which was held this year in Montreal.

One of the notable features of Asbury College in its scholastic progress is the number of teachers who are engaging in graduate study in many of our leading universities, thus keeping abreast of the day in approved methods of teaching and educational culture. Professor Heston, who is now in Columbia University, will soon receive his doctor's degree in Education. Mrs. Sebring, efficient head of the Modern Language Department, will spend this summer in the University of Toulouse in France, and is also on the home stretch for her Ph.D. degree. Dean Hughes, Dean Kenyon, and Professor Nankivel are busily working toward the doctorate in the University of Kentucky. Miss Nabia Abbott, who holds a Master's degree from Boston University and who finished there with high honors, is taking work on her doctorate at the University of Chicago this summer. Her assistant, the popular young teacher, B. I. Wiley, is granted leave of absence for next year and will work toward his Ph.D. in Yale University. Miss Ridgell, the very efficient director of our Conservatory, is spending the summer in advanced work under noted teachers in Kansas City. Miss Daisy Dean Gray, the highly accomplished director of the Speech Department, will pursue advanced study in the field of Speech in the University of Southern California, and Miss Mary Corley, Associate Director, who recently received her Master's degree in the University of Wisconsin, will spend eight weeks this summer in advanced work in her chosen field in the University of Michigan.

The Voice Department this year has greatly prospered under the fine direction of Professor I. D. Moon. His work of training the Glee Clubs has received widespread commendation. The great chorus at Commencement time will be one of the outstanding features of the season. The Pipe Organ Department, under the leadership of Mrs. Era Wilder Peniston, is continually growing in importance and promises to be one of the leading departments of our school.

The Home Economics Department will be enlarged next year and advanced work taught by the new director, Miss Lucy Adams, who holds her Master of Science degree in this field from Iowa State University.

Miss Alice Virginia Lentz, expert dietitian and caterer from Ohio State University, will succeed Chef Gammage, who, to the regret of a host of friends, has gone to Morehead State Teachers' College for next year. Miss Lentz has been first assistant in Dietetics in the culinary work of Ohio State University. She will bring to the school the most approved methods and the latest thought in properly balanced menus.

The close of the year sees a number of improvements upon the campus. The white-columned facade on the semicircle is chaste and beautiful in its new coat of paint, while the grounds have been beautified by a rock garden and many shrubs and flowers, which represent painstaking care on the part of our supervisor of grounds, Mr. T. V. Stout, and Chef Gammage. It is to be questioned whether a more attractive campus can be found within the borders of our state than that of our own school at present writing.

The College Quartette, consisting of Messrs. L. Stokes, Matt Bradley, Orrell York, and L. R. Akers, Jr., is planning its annual itinerary which will cover some seventeen states and probably as many thousand miles. A number of our ministerial students will be engaged in tent campaigns during the summer; and revival fires, kindled by the fervent ministry of our students, will burn brightly in many parts of our nation.

Sometime ago more than one hundred reservations for next year had been made in the girls' dormitory, while a large number of boys have registered for Fletcher, Morrison, and Wesley Halls.

Asbury College is growing in favor throughout the nation, particularly among the God-fearing people who realize the need of definite New Testament standards of life and experience. As indicative of the ever-enlarging influence of Asbury College, we would mention the appearance on May 7 of an Asbury College edition of the North Carolina Christian Advocate with a picture of the campus as its frontispiece, a fine write-up of the institution, a number of views, and a roster of the 106 missionaries now in the field. This kind of publicity could not be purchased at any price, but was freely given because Dr. A. W. Plyler, its editor, has seen the work of the institution and heartily approves its spiritual emphasis and scholastic standards. More and more may our school be called a world institution. This is shown in the personnel of its Board of Trustees numbering outstanding men throughout the nation, including a number of bishops and such world-known figures as E. Stanley Jones, of India, Dr. Clarence True Wilson, of Washington, D. C., Dr. Henry Clay Morrison, and others.

In conclusion, we may truthfully say that the school is going forward without any compromise or lowering of its spiritual standards. The real reason for its existence may be seen in the golden words emblazoned above the great organ of the Hughes Auditorium, "Holiness unto the Lord."

young women who are struggling, trying to live Christian lives, need a message of encouragement—a message that really creates in one a desire and determination to find time for the deep devotional life.

The little book, "Mary of Bethany," is one of the fullest, richest messages on the devotional life we have read. She had nothing too precious for Jesus and to read this wonderful little book will encourage, inspire and enrich any heart.

The price is only 25c, or 5 copies for $1.00. Order some to hand out just for the good they will do. It will be doing good preaching. Pentecostal Publishing Company, Louisville, Ky.

for a Sunday school teacher or pupil to go to Sunday school with an unprepared lesson. In this busy age both the teacher and pupil need something brief and to the point,—something that stresses and brings out the richest spiritual thoughts on the lesson.

All this may be had in Arnold's Commentary. In this book will be found the very best helps for the Adult Class, the Young People, the Primary and the Beginner.

We have a few copies left and are closing them out at 75c per copy, postpaid. Don't fail to avail yourself of this opportunity to secure a book that will give you spiritual help every week in the year, and then when the year is finished, it is an attractive volume to place in your library for future reference. Send coin, money order, check, or if more convenient, stamps, to the Pentecostal Publishing Company, Louisville, Ky., and a copy will be mailed you at once. We have only a limited number to offer at this price.

Believing that a Divinely-called, wholly-sanctified, well-equipped, Spirit-filled ministry is one of the greatest needs of our times, and for all time to come, I am glad to make a donation for the upbuilding of the Asbury Theological Seminary at Wilmore, Ky.

For this great work, I promise to give $..... per year for five years, first installment due September 1, 1931. I will join all who are helping in this good work in prayer for the blessing of the Lord to rest upon it.

MAN'S SIN AND PUNISHMENT.

Mrs. Geneva Mendenhall.

Now there dwelt in the Garden of Delight a strange beast, the serpent, who did not love Adam nor Eve, but hoped to bring them into mischief and, if possible, teach them to disobey.

One day after Eve had been admiring the forbidden fruit on the Tree of Knowledge, she met the old serpent sneaking about the garden. He asked her if she believed what the Lord had said about the tree which stood in the midst of the garden. Eve listened a minute and then turned to look again at the forbidden fruit on the tree.

"The Lord knows that on the day when you taste the fruit your eyes will be opened and the fruit will not hurt you at all." So when the serpent took some of the fruit from the tree and gave it to Eve she decided to take one little taste. It looked very beautiful and very tempting in her hand and when she had tasted it, she not only ate it all up but picked the largest fruit she could find and ran with it to Adam telling him that it tasted very good and would not harm him at all. And Adam ate the fruit.

When the Lord came in the cool of the evening to walk with Eve and Adam and talk with them, they ran and hid in a thick underbrush.

When the Lord found them they were afraid, and the Lord seeing their fear knew that they had disobeyed him. Adam began at once to make excuses saying that if the woman had not offered it to him, he would not have eaten of the fruit. And Eve, in turn, tried to blame the serpent telling what that cunning beast had told her.

Then asked the Lord, "Did I not say that if you ate of the fruit it would bring you pain and sorrow and death? And have you preferred to believe this beast rather than me?"

He condemned the serpent to crawl in the dust of the earth, despised by man and beast alike. He told the woman that her sorrow and suffering were to be greatly multiplied. Adam was told that because he had listened to Eve he should have to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, and thorns and thistles should choke his crops, and make his life hard. After they had been dressed in skins of animals they were driven out of the beautiful Garden of Delight and life has been a great struggle for man ever since because of the sin of Adam and Eve.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a little Kentucky girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am in the fourth grade at school. I go to Sunday school every Sunday I can. I was saved March 17 at home, while my father and mother were having family prayer. I want all you cousins to pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end. My birthday is July 28th. I am eight years old. Have I a twin? If so, please write to me and I will answer all letters received. Who can guess my middle name? It begins with K and ends with N, and has eight letters in it. I hope to see this letter in print as it is my first. With love to Aunt Bettie and all the cousins.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a North Carolina girl join the happy band of Christian cousins? I am eighteen years old, with dark brown hair and brown eyes, and small for my age. I belong to the Methodist Church and go to Sunday school and church every Sunday. My Sunday school teacher is Mrs. Moore. I don't go to school. I am a Christian girl and love God with all my heart. I gave my heart to God in 1924, and 1927 I was sanctified. I live with my aunt. I have a brother sixteen and a sister ten. My father has gone to heaven. I am taking a Bible course for personal workers. I am anxious to see souls saved.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I love Jesus and want to be true to him. I have a poem that is a help to me, and I am copying it for page ten so it may be a help to all the boys and girls who read the letters.

Whatever you say in a whisper or

Read nothing of which you are perfectly sure,

Consternation at once would be seen in your look,
If God should say suddenly, "Show me that book."

Whatever you write with haste or with heed,
Write nothing you would not like Jesus to read,

Whatever you sing in the midst of your glees,
Sing nothing that God's listening ear could displease.

Wherever you go, never go where you fear
To answer if God asks, "Why art thou here?"

Whatever the pastime in which you engage,
For the cheering of youth or the solace of age,

Turn away from each pleasure you'd shrink from pursuing,
Were God to look down and say,
"What are you doing?"

Hoping Mr. W. B. is out so others may be helped by this poem, I close.

Mrs. F. C. Holland.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Please let me join your happy band of boys and girls. I am fourteen years old and in the ninth grade. I am five feet and one-half inches tall. I have dark complexion. I hope Mr. W. B. has gone to a basket ball game for I hope to see this letter in print. Tell all my cousins to write to me. I will answer all the letters I receive.

Maggie Ruth Woodham.
125 Main St., Coffeeville, Ala.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Just sitting by the fire wondering what you and the cousins are doing. This will make my second letter to The Herald. I wrote one in September. I appreciate your printing it for me. I did not receive any letters. Please write to me; it keeps me from being disappointed. I am corresponding with a little girl in St. Charles, Ark.; her name is Juanita Howell. I have lots to be thankful for; father and mother are both living and they are Christians. My grandmother lives with us. I hope all the cousins and Aunt Bettie are well.

Vivian McNair.
Stapleton, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I love The Herald. It has been a wonderful blessing to me. I am glad Jesus is all the world to me. My dear Herald cousins, some people think it is wonderful to own wealth in this world, but Jesus is more to me than all. What shall it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his soul? I can't go like other girls as I have to stay with my grandpa. I thank God for all the help received from the friends that wrote to me. I am just a poor girl, but God helps me. Please write for the letters are a great help to me. I am letting Jesus have his way. So many people are fond of the world and its pleasure. I love these verses:

Elijah made a sacrifice
To offer to Jehovah,
It had been wet with water thrice,
Baal's sacrifice was over.
Elijah prayed, the fire came down
And licked the water all around
And doubting ones believed,
And found Elijah's God was living.

Elijah's God still lives today
And answers still by fire,
My friends just let him have his way,
He'll grant your heart's desire.
Consume the sacrifice you make
And bid your slumbering soul awake,
And chains of inbred sin will break
Elijah's God is living!

Elijah's God still lives today,
And answers still in power,
As when Elijah prayed for rain
God answered with a shower.
If you would have your soul refreshed
With rain that falls from heaven,
You must pray through like the rest
And showers shall be given.

Elijah's God still lives today
To take the guilt of sin away
And when I pray my heart's desire
Upon my soul he sends the fire.
I am nineteen years old, and I want to live for Jesus. Pray for me.

Pauline Harner.
Rt. 3, Celina, Ohio.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Here comes a Texas girl to join your merry band of boys and girls. I don't go to school but I can read and write a little. Every evening mother reads me some out of Aunt Charlotte's Bible Stories and in the morning she reads some Bible Stories. I am going to ask a few questions about some of the Bible stories mother reads to me. Who sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites? Who was David's great-grandfather? Who was it that saw the burning bush that didn't burn up? The stories I like best are about little Samuel and Jesus. My brother is writing this for me. I would like all the little boys and girls to write to me. I will stop now and leave room for other boys and girls. Your little friend from Texas.

Anice Schneider.
Rt. 6, Box 121A, Austin, Tex.

My aunt takes The Pentecostal Herald and sends it to us. My birthday is June 30. I like to read the letters on page ten.

Mary Woodham.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a little Scottsville girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am eight years old and in the fourth grade. If so, please write and I will send you a card. Mary E. Gare, I guess your middle name to be Eulah. I would like to have your picture.

Heralds of a Passion.

By REV. CHARLES L. GOODELL.

This is a plea for the souls of men. The author maintains that everything great in life is a passion, and religion being a life, must be impassioned. It is a great book. Send $1.00 to Rev. C. R. Crowe, 2725 Victor Place, Louisville, Ky., and get a copy.

Virginia B. Hickerson, I guess your middle name to be Bell. Be sure to write me a long letter if I am correct. Who can guess my first name? It begins with O and ends with A, and has three letters in it. The one who guesses it first I will send them a card. My grandmother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. Mildred Pruett.
Rt. 2, Scottsville, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: This is my second letter to The Herald. I am glad Mr. W. B. didn't eat it. I was saved two years ago and like to serve Jesus. Can any one guess my middle name? Well, I will close and let some other cousins have the space.

I go to Williamson Center School. I surely do enjoy reading our Boys and Girls' Page. Who can guess my middle name? It is a rather unusual name which begins with A and ends with A, and containing six letters. If you can guess my name please write to me. Evangeline M. Schneider, I guess your middle name to be Marion. Am I right? Edith Bolt, I guess your middle name to be Eleanor. I am not much of a good guesser but I tried anyway. I hope Mr. W. B. is out buying groceries when my letter arrives for I would be disappointed if this was not in print. Please write to me, will you cousins?

I live out in the country on a big farm. I go to Sunday school and prayer meetings most every Sunday. I will close now hoping Mr. and Mrs. W. B. are planting peas when this letter arrives. Thanking you very much. Clyde McNair.

FALLEN ASLEEP

HUBBARD.

J. B. Hubbard, of Carthage, Tenn., was born Sept. 20, 1856 and departed this life Oct. 2, 1930, age 74 years and 12 days. He was united in marriage to Miss Capitola Legon, to which union were born five children, four boys and one girl. He was converted early in life. He heard Dr. Morrison preach holiness and sought the experience of entire sanctification and lived a devoted Christian until death. He was a charter member of the Nazarene Church at South Carthage. He will be greatly missed by his church and neighbors and many friends. He loved The Pentecostal Herald and feasted on its wonderful soul food. He fought a good fight, he kept the faith and is now enjoying his reward.

JOHNS.

Little Frankie Johns, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Johns, of near Claymour, was called home Monday, May 4, 1931, following an illness from infantile paralysis, at the age of one year and ten months. Rev. Thornberry conducted services at the grave in the Pleasant Hill cemetery. Frankie is not dead; he only sleeps. He has gone on to await our coming. Weep not, father, mother, brother and sisters for little Frankie. He stands on the other shore and beckons you come. But weep not for the dear one.

He is not lost, but gone before;
Let us prepare to meet dear Frankie,
When our days on earth are o'er.
May Mallory.

PIGG.

Just one year ago today, June 4, 1931, the death angel entered the home of Mrs. Margaret Jane Pigg, of Erick, Okla., where she and her husband, George W. Pigg, had settled on a homestead four miles north of Erick about thirty-two years ago, and claimed her as its victim. Our darling mother was so sweet and precious, and more especially needed to hold the home and family together since father went away less than two years before, June 12, 1928. He was eighty-five years and eleven months old and mother was eighty-three years and six months old. They grew dearer to us as we could see age creeping on them, but there were but few gray hairs in their heads at above eighty years. They were married more than fifty years, reared nine children to be grown.

There were many beautiful flowers, precious friends to sympathize, good ministers to preach, but still there is a vacancy that no human can fill. The absence of her life here reminds us she is over there helping for the reception of her children to follow, which one, her oldest son, John W., crossed over in Jan. 21, 1931, to help in the hallelujah strain. He kept quoting the 23rd Psalm, which was a joy in life and a comfort as he was passing over the river. It seems we miss mother more and more as the months go by, but we are on our way doing what we can to get others ready for the journey. Her children, twenty grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren appreciate her home life and devotion.

Mother was converted and she and father joined the M. E. Church together about 1878. She professed to be entirely sanctified at Sunset Camp Meeting about thirty-two years ago. Most of her children are members of the Nazarene and M. E. Churches.

Dearest mother, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
And our sorrow he will heal.

Lovingly her daughter,
Rev. Mrs. Susie Eagan.
Jester, Okla.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Mrs. V. E.: "Please to pray for me and my children that they may be saved, and that I may have more faith."

Mrs. R. L. Grifford: "Our little girl was stricken with acute appendicitis and had to be operated on. She also has typhoid fever, and I am requesting prayer for her recovery, if it be the Lord's will."

A. J.: "Will the readers of The Herald pray for my relatives and loved ones who are unsaved."

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas: It has been our privilege during the four years just ending, to have as our pastor Rev. W. E. Smith; to listen to his inspiring sermons delivered with unction and permeated with the evangelistic spirit; to observe his self-sacrificing life, which has been equalled by few pastors and excelled by none, and to have been so often blessed by his kindly Christian spirit, also his victorious faith and,

Whereas, By his own initiative, and against our wishes, he has deemed it wise to terminate his pastorate, giving as his reason, that having been in Cambridge nine years, the best interests of the church would be better served by the coming of a new pastor, therefore, be it

Resolved, that we members of the First Evangelical Church, Cambridge, Mass., with members of the board, express our appreciation of his labor and love amongst us, and heartily recommend him as a safe and sane pastor or evangelist to any desiring to listen to the gospel of full salvation preached with the Holy Ghost and power.

Our prayers will follow him.

G. A. Moore, Clerk.

WHAT HE SAID.

The most wonderful surgical operation ever performed was when Doctor Lorentz of Austria came to Chicago and made little Lolita Armour walk.

Lolita Armour was the granddaughter of Philip Armour, the meat king. She was born with the pelvic bone entirely solid on one side, with no place for a hip joint.

Now the hip joint is the most difficult joint in the body to do anything with, if something goes wrong. Surgeons said that if an artificial joint was made and it lacked the hundredth part of an inch of fitting, (a hundredth part of an inch is the thickness of a sheet of thinnest tissue paper,) it would not work. But Doctor Lorentz made an artificial joint and articulated the thigh bone in it, and he did not make the thousandth part of an inch mistake, and the child walked and is now a grown woman.

Those were the old license days. The other surgeons were so delighted that they gave him a great banquet. At each plate were six wine glasses. Doctor Lorentz turned each wine glass down, so that no liquor could be poured in them.

"Doctor Lorentz, do you not drink wine?"

He replied most emphatically, "I do not. You are giving me this banquet in honor of that operation I performed on Lolita Armour. If I drank one glass of this wine it would be six weeks before my brain would be quick enough and clear enough that I could perform another operation like that. I would as soon take strychnine. No surgeon has a right to touch alcohol."

That is pretty good evidence from one who knew what he was talking about. Any man who has to have a quick brain, or a steady nerve, should never touch alcohol.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson XI.—June 14, 1931.

Subject.—The Resurrection and the Ascension. Luke 24:25-40; 24:50, 51.

Golden Text.—It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Rom. 8:34.

Time.—Sunday, April 9, A. D. 30.

Places.—Emmaus and Jerusalem.

Introduction.—There was much significance in what a missionary said to a Mohammedan concerning the empty tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. The Moslem boasted that he could find a coffin containing the bones of Mohammed at Mecca, but that the Christian could find no remains of Jesus Christ at Jerusalem. The missionary replied that that was just the difference: Mohammed was still dead in his coffin; but Jesus Christ had risen from the dead, and had left an empty tomb. That empty tomb has been the wonder of the ages. The Jews hired the guard that saw Jesus rise from the dead to report that his disciples stole his dead body while they were all asleep; but that story will not bear investigation. If they were all asleep, how could they know that the body was stolen, or who stole it? That one question kills that falsehood forever. Besides, who is going to believe that a Roman guard would all go to sleep on duty when such an act meant death to every one of them? If the Jews had believed that lie, they would have ransacked Jerusalem and the surrounding country in search of the body. Nothing could have given them so great joy as the discovery of it. But it could not be found, because he was alive forever more; and they knew it.

Nothing less than the resurrection of the body of Jesus could have lifted his sorrowing disciples out of the gloom of despair into unspeakable joy. No sham resurrection could have done that. They saw the living Christ in the very same body that they had handled what time he had walked with them and taught them the things that pertain unto life eternal. They had sat at his feet; they had eaten with him, they had listened to his speeches; they had seen him heal the sick and raise the dead; they had heard him pray; they had seen him die; and when he revealed himself to them after his resurrection, they knew him beyond all possibility of doubt. The rapturous shout of Peter was but the echo of all their hearts: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively (living) hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." That glorious rapture did not arise from a cunningly devised fable. Certainty had come: doubts had gone forever.

But here comes a so-called preacher who says that belief in the resurrection of Jesus Christ is not necessary to Christianity. I shall let the apostle Paul answer him: "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." That is sufficient on the negative side; but Paul says positively: "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept." You will find this and much more in his first Corinthian epistle. Let it be forever settled, that without the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead there is no salvation for men. That blessed fact lies at the foundation of Christianity forever; and he who undertakes to destroy faith in it is an infidel, although he may be called a D. D.

It is thrilling to read of the early morning visit of the devout women to the sepulchre with their bundles of spices and their boxes of ointment. They were determined to show their devotion to their Lord; but he was not there. An angel declared to them his resurrection; but soon their eyes were opened, and they saw their Lord alive. The ecstasy of such moments must be felt; we can only imagine it. Soon Peter and John were at the sepulchre and the good news was flying from heart to heart among all the disciples.

That was a fine walk that Cleopas and his friend had from Jerusalem to Emmaus on the day of the resurrection. If you do not believe that Moses lived and wrote the Pentateuch, read the conversation those two men had with Jesus that day. He had demonstrated the fact of his Deity by the resurrection from the dead; and in that conversation he endorses Moses. It is hard to have patience with, or respect for, an arrant infidel in ministerial garb, who has the impudence to stand in the sacred desk and call Jesus Christ a liar. Maybe that is strong language; but I shall not retract one word of it. It is time to speak out straight from the shoulder.

I thank God that the historic evidence of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead is absolutely unanswerable. Would you destroy faith in that doctrine? Then you must begin by destroying the entire body of Christianity. You must make the world forget that there ever was any Christianity. Its doctrines must be obliterated from the minds of men. You will have to blot out nearly all the worth-while literature of the last two thousand years. Civilization will have to die and be forgotten. Europe and America, all civilized peoples, must return to absolute paganism. Jesus Christ has walked this earth in broad daylight, and his footprints are so deep and so clear, that one had just as well undertake to dry up all the seas as to rub them out. They are here to stay forever, thank God!

Comments on the Lesson.

25. O fools.—Not in the bitter sense that men call each fools when they are mean at heart; but rather, ignorant of truth. However, there is a rebuke in the Master's words, for he tells them that they are "slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." Maybe some of us need the same rebuke.

26. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things.—There are mysteries here that we may never understand; but of this we may be assured: It was an absolute necessity for Jesus Christ to suffer and to die for our redemption, in order that God might pardon our sins and still be a just God. Put your own interpretation upon the Master's words; but this word ought (which is a fair translation from the Greek) seems to me to indicate that the Christ felt himself under some awful obligation to make an atonement for fallen men. And to enter into his glory.—What sort of glory is this that calls for Gethsemane, the Roman lash, and the cross? In the 17th of John he says that the Father gave him this glory of suffering for lost men, and that he in turn was giving it to us who love him. Dig deep, or you will not find the hidden jewels here. There is a glory in unselfish sacrifice for others that makes one to be Christlike; and I am not sure that there is anything higher or better than that in any world.

27. Beginning at Moses and all the prophets.—Amid the little flimsy criticisms that are being made today by men who boast of their scholarship(?) it is a consolation to know that our Lord Jesus Christ endorses the Old Testament from Genesis to the Revelation. Moses is no fictitious character in his estimation, but a real man and the author of the Pentateuch. One almost envies those two fortunate men as they listen to the Master while he "expounds unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself."

28. The village.—Emmaus. He made as though he would have gone further.—I suppose he was merely testing them, as he had sometimes done on other occasions.

29. They constrained him.—It was more than an invitation—they entreated him to abide with them for the night. O, if we would only pray that way, I am persuaded that he would enter in and abide with us all the time.

30. He took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave to them.—Those were simple deeds; but they were bursting with meaning to those two men who reclined with him. They had seen him do that before. Their eyes were opened; and they recognized the risen, living Christ. Our own hearts long for such privileges; and yet he says we are better off since the Comforter has come. Will the Church ever learn that the Holy Ghost has been given? He is the forgotten Person in the Holy Trinity, although we are living in the time of his dispensation, and can do nothing without him.

31. He vanished out of their sight.—Why? I know not. But this one thing is certain: It was best for them and us.

32. Did not our hearts burn?—Certainly, they did. They were stirred with a holy excitement as he turned the light of Divine exposition upon the prophets. The Old Testament became as luminous as the noonday sun.

33. They rose up the same hour.—Traveling was dangerous by night; but they had the best news the world ever heard of, and could not wait for daylight to come. They returned to Jerusalem at once, and found the "eleven" apostles and some other brethren gathered together. There seems to be a slight discrepancy here. Judas Iscariot was dead; and John says (20:24) that Thomas was not present. Since the fact of the meeting is clear enough, we need not suffer ourselves to be annoyed by such minor matters.

34. The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.—This seems to have been the statement of the group, and not of the two who came from Emmaus. It does not mean that Simon Peter was with Cleopas on the way to that village.

35. Now we have the two speaking.—They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread." There

My Hospital Experience

Dr. H. C. Morrison says of "My Hospital Experience" by Bud Robinson:

must have been something marvelous about the way he broke bread.

36. Jesus himself stood in the midst of them.—A wonderful moment! How did he get into that room? The doors were all shut for fear of the Jews. Walls mean nothing to a resurrection body. Peace be unto you. They were frightened at his sudden appearance; and he was quelling their fears.

37. But they were terrified.—What strange beings we are. Most men are brim-full of superstition. Very few of us could go to sleep in a cemetery. Those disciples thought they had seen a spirit, and almost had delirium tremens. But spirits cannot harm one.

38. Why are ye troubled?—It is fine to note how the Lord calms their fears. Ever and anon he tells us not to fear. Perfect faith in God will quiet all our doubts and fears.

39. Study this verse, and learn how anxious God is for us to know the whole truth concerning himself. Nothing hides him, but our sins. They have separated between us and God. Spirits have no bones. See how the Master shows them the nail-prints in his hands and feet. They must know the whole truth, that they may have no more doubts; for doubts are born of sin and ignorance—bad parentage. Truth makes men free.

24:50, 51. These would be fearful words, were it not for the promise of his return. He made that promise himself. Their hearts were breaking with sorrow at his departure; but just as he was going away, "two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Well, bless God for that. No wonder they returned to Jerusalem with great joy. Glory!

The Directors voted to start the erection of a new tabernacle, and to make other changes so the camp may be held this year. They would appreciate assistance from any of the camp meeting friends. Address F. A. Hillery, 212 Oxford St., Providence, R. I.

Mrs. B. E. Bingham, who has charge of the mission in West Bay, Grand Cayman, B. W. I., requests that persons having books they would like to donate to the mission may send them to Mrs. B. E. Bingham, care Capt. Charlie Farrington, Florida Custom House, Tampa, Fla. They will gladly pay freight on them.

Any one interested in this motto may address the party as above, who will be glad to give full information regarding same.

A good meeting was recently conducted by Rev. W. R. Parker and wife in Willingham M. E. Church, Alabama. Brother Parker did some good preaching and the people heard and sought the Lord. Sister Parker was taken ill and will have to undergo an operation. Prayer is asked for her recovery.

The committee has arranged a special program for the annual all-day meeting, Memorial Day, at Fletcher Grove Camp Meeting Grounds, Delanco, N. J. There will be preaching at 10:30 A. M. by Rev. H. L. Burkett, West Collingswood, N. J., Dr. J. B. Kulp, pastor of the First M. E. Church, Collingswood, will preach at 3:00 o'clock, and Rev. S. H. Delanco, N. J.

The largest crowds that have attended worship or Sunday school services in many months were present in Bethany Presbyterian Church, Joplin, Mo., May 6 to 17 during special meetings which Guy W. Green, Kansas City layman, held there for Rev. Douglas V. Magers, pastor. Numerous adults united with the church during the meeting. The young people who made decision will come later after adequate instruction. Delegations from Miami, Okla., and Sarcocixie, Webb City and Carthage, Mo., attended in liberal numbers accompanied by their pastors. In addition to his sermons, Mr. Green delivered outside addresses to the Rotary, Kiwanis and Lions Clubs, Junior and Senior High Schools, Chamber of Commerce of Webb City, Y. M. C. A., American Legion, Byers St. Methodist Church and Ministerial Alliance.

HEAVEN.

Mrs. W. J. Davidson.

And I saw a new Heaven and a new earth;

The beauties of it, Oh! what can it be worth,

The first heaven and the first earth were passed away;

But those who enter in are there to stay.

The Holy City, I saw, John said, It is filled with spirits that are not dead,

For with garments they were adorned, Like the folks here on earth are worn.

And the Great Voice out of Heaven saying, Behold,

The wonders here cannot be told.

The Tabernacle of God is with men,

For God, himself, shall be with them then.

To wipe away all tears from their eyes;

To strive to enter in, it would be wise Neither shall there be any more death,

He said, And with the Holy Spirit multitudes are fed.

Neither shall there be any more pain, So what more have we to gain,

For I make all things new, He said, Write, for these words are faithful and true.

And He said unto me, It is done, This has been made possible through my Son;

He that overcometh shall inherit all things

For God from his word has never waned.

But the fearful, and unbelieving and all liars

And murderers, and sorcerers, and idolaters,

Shall have their part in the fiery lake,

Which by choice is their own fate.

Then I, John, in the Spirit saw, The beauties and wonders of it all,

The Holy City Jerusalem of God, The saints who with the Gospel of Peace have been shod.

The light of the City was the glory of God,

The walls of it, he measured with a rod,

To those who enter in they shall not wait,

For on either side there are three gates.

On these walls have your names enrolled,

Like the brave old martyrs of old; The walls are wide and high,

And we can see our loved one standing by.

This beautiful City we are told The streets and walls are of pure gold,

And are garnished with all manner of precious stones

Which will complete our heavenly home.

The City had no need of the sun, Neither the moon to shine in it,

For the glory of God did lighten it, And the nations that are saved shall walk in it.

STAND FAST IN THE LORD.

By The Editor.

THERE is one thing of which we may be perfectly sure: Evils do not remedy themselves. The Reformation, the great Methodist revival, the freeing of the slaves, the crushing of the whiskey traffic, in fact, all of the forward steps in the enlightenment and salvation of the race, have called for energetic self-sacrifice and martyrs.

God is not indifferent to the overflow of all evil and the advancement of all that is good for humanity, but in the very nature of things he must have true servants, who will receive into their heart an undying love for a great truth, a principle of righteousness, a movement for the uplifting and betterment of the race; and such persons must give themselves wholly to the Lord and for the cause for which they stand. God works through human instrumentalities and these human instrumentalities must be wholly given up to him. They must be willing to suffer for the cause they love.

Then the brethren and sisters who love the cause of full salvation must not suppose for a moment that this great work can go forward without the spirit of self-sacrifice in those who know and love this great doctrine. Those who have experienced the cleansing power must be so mastered with a holy passion for the spreading of the full gospel that nothing can deter them. They will not be discouraged, they will not keep silent, they will not give up their faith; they know by sweet experience the great power of God to save from all sin. Having received the cleansing power, their hearts long that others may be purged and know the fullness of the grace of God and the power of Jesus Christ to save and cleanse and keep.

When holiness preachers become quiet, easy-going, money-loving and praise-seeking the revival fires will go out, their own hearts will grow cold, and directly they will awake to the fact that their spiritual house has been left unto them desolate. May the Spirit of God stir us up to redoubling our diligence; that with energy and zeal we may press the great, good work of a full salvation revival. Let us carry the news far and wide; let us preach with love, but with great faithfulness, on the deceitfulness, the ruin and blast of sin and the gracious power of Jesus Christ to cleanse it all away and keep the heart wholly consecrated to him in perfect peace and power.

A tremendous responsibility is that resting upon the watchmen on the walls of Zion. If they fail to sound the warning note, the blood of immortal souls will be required at their hands. The true shepherd of Israel will be found following in the footsteps of his Master, seeking those who have missed the way. The cry of the faithful pastor should be,

"Help me to watch and pray,
And on thyself rely,
Assured if I my trust betray,
I shall forever die."

There has never been a time in the history of this nation when there was greater need for the testimony of blood-cleansed, Spirit-filled men and women than at this time. God looks to us to bear witness to the power of Christ to save from all sin.

The Restoration of Israel to Palestine No. VI.

READING the Prophecy of Jeremiah you will find that he is in perfect accord with Isaiah. He brings tremendous protest against the sins of Israel; he warns them of coming judgments, he faithfully declares that their punishment will be their subjugation to foreign, pagan people, and that they will be carried into captivity.

Many times in his prophecy Jeremiah sees hope for Israel and prophecies of their restoration to Palestine. Again and again, as he looks into the future, he beholds the coming Christ, and speaks of him with a clearness not to be misunderstood. We shall give a few quotations from the prophecy of Jeremiah with reference to the restoration of Israel. Take the third chapter, 17th and 18th verses:

At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart.

In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers.

We find a very hopeful prophecy for Israel in the 12th chapter, 14th and 15th verses:

Thus saith the Lord again: all mine evil neighbors, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, I will pluck them out the house of Judah from among them.

And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

One of the most beautiful and encouraging prophecies found in Jeremiah with reference to the restoration of Israel is in the 16th chapter. It is very clear and positive. It includes the 14th, 15th and 16th verses; they read:

Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

But, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks.

We are quoting at length, because many will read this chapter who have not a Bible convenient; others will not want to take time to look up these passages. I trust the readers of THE HERALD will make a special study of Jeremiah's prophecy, and will particularly note those prophecies which declare that the Israelites, embracing, of course, the tribe of Judah, shall be carried into captivity and scattered throughout the earth. These prophecies have been fulfilled, as our readers know. The prophecies concerning the restoration are being fulfilled and cannot fail. God has spoken.

In Jeremiah 24:6, 7, we find the restoration spoken of is not the restoration from Babylon, but refers to the restoration that is now going on; and it is not only the promise of the return to Palestine, but of a great spiritual awakening and blessing.

For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

And I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the Lord: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart.

We wish to refer the reader to the 31st chapter of Jeremiah. It is clear with reference to Israel's restoration. It is so lengthy that we shall not quote it in full, but will give you the 10th verse:

Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.

Twenty-one years ago it was my great privilege to hold revival meetings with The Christian Missionary Alliance people in Jerusalem, in which a number were saved at the altar. We were refreshed and graciously blessed. While there, I read a prophecy from the 31st chapter of Jeremiah, and asked the missionary to guide me to the hill Gareb. He did so, and I saw with my own eyes the wonderful beginning of the fulfillment of the Scriptures. I now quote the 38th, 39th and 40th verses of this 31st chapter:

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.

And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more for ever.

Many splendid houses had been erected on the hill Gareb by the Zionist Movement, and were inhabited by Jews who had been brought from countries where they were persecuted and living most unhappily. We walked over what is here called "the valley of the dead bodies." It was once a vast burying ground, but has not been used for that purpose for centuries. There is not a vestige of any of the bodily remains of those who were buried there, but it will be cleared up and become a beautiful place of residence for returning Jews.

SOME ASPECTS OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

Keble, the British poet, writing upon the Holy Spirit, said:

"But when he came the second time,
He came with power and love;
Softer than gale at morning prime,
Hovered the Holy Dove."

This is an aspect of the Holy Spirit which we sometimes forget, I fear, in these days when so much is said of the Baptism of Fire. I sometimes think it would be well if we emphasized more the Christlike aspects of the life in the Spirit. Dr. Joseph Parker said a fine thing in the following words:

"My first question about any doctrine is, How does it come down stairs out of its dreamer's intellect and behave itself in the kitchen. How does it put on its apron and tuck up its sleeves and go to life's daily work? How does it go into the chamber and hush itself into gentleness and quietness, and what does it say to the pained heart, and what to the ebbing life? By its fruits let it be known. What it can do in the plain, everyday circles of life shall be its proof to me of its heavenly origin."

In this age of complexities and big business, show, sham, etc., it is absolutely essential that God's people should preserve simplicity and sincerity. In these days of luxury and big money it is a hard thing to maintain these virtues. I believe the reason we fail to get our prayers through is due to the lack of these things. I think of the men and women who moved the world for God; they lived in simplicity and sincerity. They turned their back and said an eternal adieu to the world, its laws and applause, customs, luxuries, and superficialities. Think of John Wesley who could have been one of the wealthy men of his age; he gave away to the poor and to the kingdom all that he received, except the twenty pounds odd which he lived on year by year. Kagawa, that great Japanese Christian leader, is called the John Wesley of Japan because of his unselfish, self-sacrificing life. He has a large income from his books, but he lives the simple life and gives all to the work of the Kingdom. He is impressing all Japan by his Christlike life and his ardour for souls. Nothing will promote simplicity and sincerity like the prayer life.

Adoniram Judson, perhaps the greatest missionary ever sent out from American shores, was emphatic in his insistence upon prayer. I quote his words: "Be resolute in prayer. Make any sacrifice to maintain it. Consider that time is short and that business and company must not be allowed to rob thee of thy God." That was the man who impressed a mighty empire for God.

In my student days I loved to read about Methodism's great preacher-orator, Bishop Simpson. In the days of Inskip he preached frequently in the Holiness camp meetings. He was a great Bible preacher and preached the glorious salvation with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. Bishop Simpson preached some years ago in the Memorial Hall, London. For half an hour he spoke quietly, without gesticulation or uplifting of his voice. Then, picturing the Son of God bearing our sins in his own body on the tree, he stooped, as if laden with an immeasurable burden, and rising to his full height he seemed to throw it from him, crying: "How far? As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us." A professor of elocution was there. A

IN SOUTHERN SEAS.

At this writing I am sailing along the coast of Chili, after leaving Peru where we witnessed a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Chili has a coast line of 3,000 miles, as far as from New York to Liverpool. Look at the map and you will see it is a narrow strip of land in width about 130 miles. Chili is like Egypt in some respects, long and narrow. Egypt is only 700 miles long and about 12 miles wide, except in the Delta. Chili is bounded down to the Magellan Straits by the Cordillera of the Andes. Chili has less than four million people and is one of the most united and patriotic nations of South America. While revolutions roar and tear all around, Chili holds still and maintains a good steady government. They say the men of Chili make good sailors and fine soldiers. In the war with Peru and Bolivia they conquered as they went along.

There are a great many English and Germans in Chili; also, of course, a great many North Americans from U. S. A. Nearly all the great industries, mines, nitrates, etc., owe their development greatly to foreign capital. The nitrates of Chili go all over the world; it is the main industry and source of revenue to the government. The shores of Chili are rainless hence, barren and dry; not a shrub, not a blade of grass, not a tree. Absence of rains is what has preserved the nitrates. If rains had come they would have washed the precious mineral out of the soil into the Pacific Ocean. These shores sterile themselves and are sources of fertility to other lands.

As the steamer sails on to Valparaiso I am praying much for revival power in the four cities which I will labor in, Valparaiso, Santiago, Concepcion and Temuco. I praise God for the old-time power in Peru. Join me in prayer for Chili.

friend who observed him and knew that he had come to criticize, asked him, when the service was over, "Well, what do you think of the Bishop's elocution?" "Elocution," said he. "He's got the Holy Ghost!"

Another Bishop who enjoyed and preached holiness was Bishop Hamline. He had a great ambition to be a lawyer, but the Lord gripped him, and changed him, and sanctified him. He tells how he became sanctified in the following words:

"All at once I felt as though a hand—not feeble, but omnipotent; not of wrath, but of love—was laid on my brow. I felt it not outwardly but inwardly. It seemed to press upon my whole being, and to diffuse all through me a holy, sin-consuming energy. As it passed downward, my heart as well as my head was conscious of the presence of this soul-cleansing energy, under the influence of which I fell to the floor, and in joyful surprise of the moment, cried out in a loud voice. Still the hand of power wrought without and within; and wherever it moved, it seemed to leave the glorious influence of the Savior's image. For a few minutes the deep ocean of God's love swallowed me up; all its waves and billows rolled over me."

IV.

Among the saintly men of early Methodism no doubt John Fletcher ranks chief. Well born, well educated and, best of all, sanctified and filled with all the fullness of God. Mrs. Rogers describes Fletcher in one of the meetings thus:

"When I entered the room, where they were assembled, the heavenly man (Fletcher) was giving out the following verses with such animation as I have seldom witnessed—

'Near us, assisting Jesus, stand;
Give us the opening heavens to see;
Thee to behold at God's right hand,
And yield our parting souls to Thee.

'My Father, O my Father, hear,
And send the fiery chariot down;
Let Israel's famous steeds appear,
And whirl us to the starry crown.

'We, we would die for Jesus too;
Through tortures, fires, and seas of blood,

All triumphantly break through,
And plunge into the depths of God.'

"After this Mr. Fletcher poured out his full soul in prayer, or praise, or spiritual instruction; and every word that fell from his lips appeared to be accompanied with an unction from above.

"After dinner, I took an opportunity to beg him to explain an expression he had used in a letter to Miss Loxdale namely, that, on all who are renewed in love, God bestows the gift of prophecy. He called for the Bible; then read and explained Acts 2, observing, that, to prophesy in the sense he meant, was, to magnify God with the new heart of love, and the new tongue of praise, as they did, who, on the day of Pentecost, were filled with the Holy Ghost. He insisted now that believers are called upon to prove the same baptismal fire; that the day of Pentecost was the opening of the dispensation of the Spirit—the great promise of the Father; and that the latter day glory, which he believed was near at hand, should far exceed the first effusion of the Spirit. Seeing then that they, on the day of Pentecost, bare witness to the grace of our Lord, so shall we; and, like them, spread the flame of love. After singing a hymn, he cried, 'O to be filled with the Holy Ghost! I want to be filled! O, my friends, let us wrestle for a more abundant outpouring of the Holy Spirit!'"

V.

I have had to travel a great deal East and West. My thoughts are often stirred as I look at some of Nature's great sights. Sam Jones once said:

"The mountains are God's thoughts piled up.
Flowers are God's thoughts in bloom.
Prairies are God's thoughts spread out.
The Rivers are God's thoughts in motion.
The Harvests are God's thoughts expressed in bread."

Very striking are those lines of Mrs. Browning in one of her great poems:

"Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes—
The rest sit round it and pluck blackberries."

When Whitefield was preaching in Boston in 1746, Colonel Pepperill, of the State troops, was appointed to command an expedition. He asked Whitefield to give him a motto for their flag; the motto given was, "Nil desperandum Christo duce." If Christ be Captain, no fear of defeat."

The Holy Ghost honored Christ at the Day of Pentecost and poured upon the disciples such a baptism of power that it worked, according to Richard Watson, the following effects:

"It raised the disciples from earthliness to spirituality.

Their gross conceptions of the kingdom were swept away.

Their dim eyes were lightened to perceive the Scriptures.

It kindled the ardor of unquenchable love of Christ.

Transformed them into bright reflections of his purity.

Converted dark and sterile souls into life, verdure and fruitfulness.

Animated every affection.

Invigorated for service.

Purged from the heart all its stains of sin, and all its debasing alloy of earthliness, and rendered it meet for high fellowship and intercourse with God for ever."

Unless the Holy Spirit is at the steering wheel, the preacher had better not start on the trip.

LIVING OUT OF THE OVERFLOW.

Rev. Earl S. Scott.

"I am come that they may have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."—John 10:10.

R. William L. Stidger, Professor of Homiletics at the Boston University School of Theology, has written a book called, "Preaching out of the Overflow." That book has suggested the idea for this article. In the book, Dr. Stidger's idea is that preachers should prepare for preaching and should preach in such a way as to have something left over after the sermons have been preached.

Have you ever heard anyone preach when you felt sorry for him? Has it appeared to you that he has exhausted every ounce of physical energy that he possessed, in the delivery of the sermon? Has it seemed to you after the first few minutes that the speaker has almost run out of things to say? Has it seemed to you when he sat down at the close of the sermon that he had said everything that he could say, and that before he preached again he would have to go back to his study and search frantically through his books to get some more ideas? I hope that you have never had such experience, but if you have, you know exactly what Dr. Stidger warns against.

Dr. Stidger wants a man who preaches to have so much physical energy stored up, and so many thoughts crowding forward for expression that it seems impossible ever to exhaust either supply. Would you not prefer to listen to some one speak, whom you think could say many more things and say them with great force even after the speech is through?

It is a wonderful thing to live out of the overflow. In the first place it is more satisfactory to the person who is doing the living if he has something left over. We all know how comfortable it is to have some money left over. Isn't it thrilling to have something in your pocket-book? In my home community there was a woman who declared that she was never out of money. And yet she was not wealthy, but was rather on the lower side of what we generally call moderate circumstances. The reason that she was never out of money was that she would never spend her last dollar. No matter what demand arose, or how urgent it was she would never give up the last dollar she had. I only wish that everyone could always have that much in reserve. It is a wonderful feeling to know that you have something left over.

I heard of a preacher who went one Saturday night to his grocer who also was an active member of the Church, and asked to borrow five dollars until the next Monday morning. The grocer gladly made the loan. Early on Monday morning the preacher paid that grocer five dollars. The grocer thought that that was a strange thing, because he knew that the minister had not received his salary check Saturday night and Monday morning.

When the next Saturday came the pastor came again to the grocer and made the same request. Monday morning the five dollars were repaid again. This happened another week, and then the grocer became very curious. He decided upon an experiment. The next time the clergyman came he loaned him a five dollar bill on which he had noted the number. Thus he was able to prove when his pastor came back Monday morning that he brought the same bill that he had taken away. The merchant could not restrain his curiosity longer. This was too strange. Perhaps his pastor was becoming weak mentally. So he said, "Pastor, I must confess that I noted the number on the bill I loaned you Saturday night, and here you have brought back the same bill. I do not understand this. I am willing to help you, but if you will tell me what is wrong perhaps I can help you more."

The minister said, "Well, I see that I shall have to tell you. I have to use all my salary to pay my necessary bills, and it used to be when I was preaching that during the sermon I would put my hand down into my pocket, and it used to embarrass me even while I was preaching. I could not bear to realize that there was nothing left over, so I borrowed the five dollars from you and then when I put my hand in my pocket I felt there that folded paper which I knew was worth five dollars." (Oh, what an exquisite touch! That's the paper you love to touch.) "I did not stop to think it was not mine. It just made me feel better to know that I had five dollars in my pocket. It's a wonderful thing to have something left over." It is a great thing to have some money left over, but it is a greater thing to have some spiritual energy left over.

When you forgive someone who has offended you are you exhausted spiritually? Does it take every ounce of spiritual energy you have to forgive once? Or could you forgive seven times and have some forgiveness left? Or could you forgive seven times seven times and have some forgiveness left? If you could you are living out of the overflow. When you give something to somebody have you exhausted the goodness in your soul, or could you give something more the same day and still feel that there is an overflow of goodness in your soul?

When you sacrifice some of your popularity for the sake of sincerely standing by some cause which you know is worthy, how do you feel? Do you feel that you have made the last sacrifice which you can possibly make for the Kingdom of God, or have you enough willingness to sacrifice left to do it again? If you have, then you are living out of the overflow.

If I go through a provoking situation and keep my temper it is a good thing, but I am not doing as I should do, if I feel that I could not have held out a second longer. In that case I would be living up everything I had in the line of self-control. But if I could go through that situation and then go through another which also is trying, and then go through another trial, and still control myself, then I would be living out of the overflow. It is a great thing to live out of the overflow. It gives you satisfaction yourself.

Moreover, it helps those around you to live out of the overflow. A person who is sick appreciates the coming of anyone to visit him. If a visitor who himself is afflicted come hobbling in, hardly able to get in and out of the room without collapsing, the effect on the patient is questionable. But if a visitor come who is overflowing with enthusiasm and who is the very picture of health as we say, the sick one consciously or unconsciously is going to be improved if improvement is at all possible. One who lives out of the overflow has a contagious spirit.

Abraham Lincoln lived out of the overflow. When he was visiting an army camp he overheard a boy being sentenced to death. He went in the tent and said that reminded him of a story. He told the story and then pardoned the boy. I know by Mr. Lincoln's actions that he had not exhausted his kindness and his forgiveness in that one act. Mrs. Lincoln was so trying and yet he only grinned when most men would have lost their temper. The climax in the relation of Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln came when Mr. Lincoln said, "Mary, from now on I am running this war." That settled it. There was no uproar in Mr. Lincoln's soul. There was depth enough there so that a thing like that did not stir him to his depths. He lived out of the overflow.

When the question of prosecution of the noble character, Robert E. Lee, arose, he showed again that he was living out of the overflow and his high sense of justice prevented any prosecution. The question of the treatment of Jefferson Davis arose, and Mr. Lincoln said that that reminded him of a story. He told the story, and there was still enough of his generous nature left to extend the same attitude toward Mr. Davis.

In his early life the passion for helping the negroes some day took hold of his soul, and yet his soul was so big that it was not all used up by that passion. He had enough left so that that story which every school boy knows was possible. I refer to the story of his going to court and stopping on the way to pull a pig out of the mud.

It takes preparation to live out of the overflow. There was a highly dramatic moment in Mr. Lincoln's life. He was in his law office, and he said to his partner, "Here I am at fifty, a failure in everything I have tried." In a sense I suppose Mr. Lincoln was a failure at fifty. Generally speaking we expect a man to be successful at fifty if he ever is going to be. The cases of people who have attained prominence after fifty are singular. But in a larger sense Mr. Lincoln was highly successful at fifty. He had prepared. He had learned law. He had learned human nature. He had learned when to smile. He had learned how to tell a story in such a way as to soothe the upset nerves of his listeners. He had learned how to cope with the selfishness and bitterness of people. He had learned to be calm when there seemed to be little to be calm about. He had stored up so much love that he was able actually to live in the spirit of malice toward none and charity for all. Those were important fifty years when he accumulated that character.

In those fifty years he prepared himself so that later he could live out of the overflow. At that dramatic moment in Mr. Lincoln's life as soon as he had declared himself to be a failure, a man came to ask him if he would accept the nomination for the presidency of the country. Because he had prepared himself for fifty years he was able to accept that responsibility.

In this connection I think of Another, who spent thirty years in preparation. As soon as he was old enough to work he became a Carpenter. But when he was thirty years old he was merely an obscure carpenter in a rough little mountain town where culture and character were exceptional. But those thirty years were thirty years of preparation. He went down to the Jordan and was baptized. And then this obscure Carpenter thought that he needed even more preparation. So he went into the wilderness. And when he came out of those thirty years and more of preparation he came out as the world Redeemer. He lived the greatest life and he lived it out of the greatest overflow we have ever known.

Plotting Pharisees cleverly tried to trap him. He repaid their subtle attempts with fairness and justness. People thought that he was beside himself, but without anger he opened up that greatest mind, and showed its breadth and depth of love. They associated thieves with him in his death. But he died as he lived, out of the overflow, and on the cross included one of those thieves in his brotherhood. His persecutors spit on him, but he prayed for them. Jesus lived and died out of an overflow of love.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL IN A STEW.

Bishop Warren A. Candler.

OR years the Federal Council has been injecting itself into many issues without the authority of the constituent bodies from which it draws membership.

Recently a majority of its Administrative Committee broke out in a needless and indelicate discussion of Birth Control. This action of the majority of the Administrative Committee has brought down upon the Federal Council widespread and just criticism.

In a recent issue of the Presbyterian, an excellent paper published in Philadelphia, appears a most sensible article on the subject written by Rev. Donald M. Grant, D.D.

It is not necessary to discuss the particular points in the report of the Committee, except to say that its frequent use of such terms as "contraceptives" is to be regretted and condemned. Such matters are not suitable for public discussion, least of all by a body claiming to represent the Churches of the United States.

The majority of the Committee, by which the report was made, seemed to think that the churches were about to do what no church has ever thought of doing or cared to do. Hence, it said:

"The church should not seek to impose its points of view as to the use of contraceptives upon the public by legislation or any other form of coercion and especially should not seek to prohibit physicians from imparting such information to those who in the judgment of the medical profession are entitled to receive it."

It should be said that the Federal Council of Churches should not seek to coerce the churches by any expression of opinion upon this or any other subject that the churches have not authorized it to speak upon.

In the article of Dr. Ronald M. Grant several questions are raised which ought to have careful consideration. He raised the question of when the Federal Council has ever sent to the churches any action for their approval or disapproval. Upon this subject he speaks as follows:

"When has the Federal Council ever submitted any question of national or international importance to its constituency of 20,000,000 members for whom it so authoritatively speaks, and yet the secretary of the Federal Council has the temerity to say: 'The Administrative Committee of the Federal Council takes all its actions, without any reference whatever to the policy or program of any other body or person, whether in the United States or any other country, excepting the church bodies.' That declaration was under date of April 22, 1927. And yet, did not the Federal Council, in that same year, issue a letter of congratulation to the Nationalist Movement in China? When was that submitted to the 'Church Bodies'?"

Dr. Grant tells us that the Presbyterian Church in the United States as far back as 1926 requested the Federal Council in the future to make no pronouncements upon moral questions which affect the church until they were submitted to the General Assembly for its acceptance or rejection. But he tells us this has never been done.

It is doubtful if the actions of the Federal Council have ever been submitted to any of the authoritative bodies of any of the churches. It claims to represent 20,000,000 church members, but it represents itself only.

The control of the Federal Council is vested in the Administrative Committee, a majority of which is selected by the president of the Council and his group of associates. It is a self-perpetuating corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York. Concerning this point Dr. Grant says:

"As I understand it, there are 77 members composing the Administrative Committee, only 28 of whom represent the church. The other 49 are made up as follows: 15 members at large, 15 representing each commission or standing committee, 5 officers of the Administrative Committee, and 2 former presidents. Those 28 men representing the churches are for the most part, busy with their own church affairs, and can scarcely be expected to run to New York once a month to attend the meetings of the Administrative Committee, and even if they were to be present at every meeting, they would be outnumbered more than two to one, and even worse than that, the officers of the committee, five in number, are responsible for most of the decisions of the Council."

Dr. Grant further affirms that many of these liberalistic members of the Administrative Committee are affiliated with organizations, some of which no Church approves. His exact words are as follows:

"Please ask these men and some of their associates composing the Administrative Committee as to their affiliations with such organizations as the following: 'The Industrial Workers of the World,' 'The American Civil Liberties Union,' 'The Intercollegiate Socialistic Society,' 'The Community Forum,' 'The Civil Liberties Bureau,' 'The Communist Propaganda,' 'The Socialistic Propaganda,' to mention only few of the interlockings of these men who compose the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council. A pretty lot of bedfellows, are they not? What chance, I ask you, have these twenty-eight men who represent the churches, if they all had their eyes open, against such an alignment as this?"

Holding these views, Dr. Grant is ready to have his church separated from the Federal Council of Churches. Upon this he speaks as follows:

"To be specific, when has the Federal Council's latest pronouncement, that on 'Birth Control,' been submitted to the General Assembly? And yet the Administrative Committee is presumptuous enough to declare that it represents 20,000,000 church members. Are the more than 2,000,000 composing the Presbyterian Church included in this? I do not see how, if the General Assembly wishes to save its face, we can longer support such an organization, and I hope someone attending the coming meeting of the Assembly in the city of Pittsburgh as a commissioner will go properly armed with an overture attested as being the action of his presbytery. You cannot handle pitch without being defiled. Neither can you hold fellowship with the Federal Council without becoming, in a very real sense, responsible for its actions. Has not the time come for us as a church to cut loose from this organization, not only because of the embarrassing situation into which the Administrative Committee of the Council is forever plunging us, but, and much more important, that we may do the work of our church that we cannot do so long as this incubus hangs about us."

He concludes his views on this point with these words:

"Why will we as a church continue to pour into the treasury of such an organization $18,000 every year when the Boards of our church are so greatly hampered in their work for the want of proper financing? Several extra missionaries could be kept in China or Africa or Brazil with this money."

The Federal Council of Churches seems to have become something worse than a superfluous organization. It costs the churches a good deal of money without returning any compensating benefits. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, assesses for it $10,000 a year or $40,000 for four years. This sum would be more than sufficient to support some of our foreign missions. What do we get for the expenditure? The general public is impressed that the deliverances of the Federal Council represents our Church, though they do not now and never have represented it in any true sense.

In this last deliverance on Birth Control, it really misrepresents the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Why should $40,000 be appropriated to a body that thus acts?

If these men who conduct the Federal Council wish to continue that enterprise, let them run it as an independent movement and pay its bills. But for it to act independently and at the same time claim to represent 20,000,000 church members is uncandid to say the least.

In truth there is not one church member in ten in the United States who knows anything about the body except what is printed in the daily papers.

Most of the members of the churches that pay into its treasury do not know that they are contributing to such an organization.

But this latest deliverance will enlighten and inform many of them, and the Federal Council will have to change its ways or suffer for their continuance.

It is not easy to see what service it can render the churches without intermeddling with their affairs. The churches are abundantly able to conduct their own matters without this organization, and as a matter of fact they have been conducting their work without it for many years.

The truth is the churches are supervised too much by organizations that assume supervisory authority over them. One of these supervisory organizations was what was called the Inter-Church World Movement. That Movement wasted five million dollars, and some of the Churches that underwrote its obligations have lost so much thereby that they have been forced to call very many of their missionaries home and abandon not a few missionary stations abroad.

A very energetic and earnest effort was made to induce the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to underwrite the obligations of this Movement to the amount of $750,000. A few men opposed it and by a bare majority the proposition was defeated in the Board of Missions. What would be our case now if we were still in debt to the amount of $750,000 for that superfluous and useless Movement?

The churches need rest from all these quieting and disturbing agitations. They need to give themselves wholly to the work of God in calling sinners to repentance, and they have no time for mere outside movements.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

OUR GREAT ADVERSARY.

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

HE Devil has many names, chief among them being "adversary," or one who opposes the Christian in his fight for eternal life.

There are those who say there is no Devil, but we are creatures of circumstances, and that victory belongs to the one who is able to lift himself above the sordid, trying experiences of life and show himself as the "survival of the fittest."

I think I am safe in saying that all orthodox Christians, and orthodox sinners as well, believe in the personality of the Devil. On every hand there are evidences of his "going about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." It is also a common belief that, while Satan is not omnipresent, yet that, being a spirit, he is fleet of foot and on the alert to trap the feet of those who come in his way. He is hostile to all that is noble, good and true, and besieges every soul that is within reach of his activities.

Satan not only is a powerful enemy of the human soul, but he has allies of wicked spirits who are ever ready to move at his command. Just as Adam is the federal head of the human family, so the Devil is the head of the family of wicked spirits. He is called the "prince of the power of the air," and under his banner are marshalled the enemies of the soul. Satan appreciates the value of organization, for it is said that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickedness in high places."

Did you know that the world and the flesh and the Devil have a sort of treaty, and that the human ally never fails to supply its contingent in the war against the soul? There is in the human heart that something which goes to the door when the enemy knocks, and, sad to say, lets him in, instead of closing the door against his adventures. Thus, we see not all of the blame is to be laid on Satan, mean as he is, for if the human heart had nothing to respond to the suggestions of Satan, he could not break the door down and enter. Only the human will is master of that citadel. Realizing that we have this trinity of evil—the world, the flesh and the Devil—to combat, how shall we prepare for their attacks?

I have written this in order to give you some salient facts from A. Lowrey, who seems to understand the situation better than I, and offers some most wholesome advice, under the title of

HOW TO DEFEAT THE ADVERSARY.

"First. Do not extend to the devil any hospitality. The devil goes where he is invited. He does not stand on ceremony, and accordingly obtrudes himself often; but he is sure to go where he is invited. Any sin left in the heart is an invitation for him to visit you. He has an appetite for such food; it is a luxury to him. It acts upon his taste like decayed flesh upon that of carnivorous birds. 'Where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.' Sin, however small and excusable in its appearance to us, is so coveted by him that he cannot resist the invitation to come where it is. He has a keen scent for those minor indulgences which Christians are only too apt to extenuate, ignore, and forget. If our life is even flavored with sin or unfaithfulness, it is sure to operate on Satan as a bait. Take for example an unsubdued temper. We are accustomed to call its spirit and bursts impulses of holy indignation; but as they generally have the odour of anger, envy, or revenge, Satan scents them out as such, and, putting on the fuel of his stimulus, fans the feelings up into a flame of wrath and retaliation.

"Take our ambitions as another illustration. We aspire to places of honor and higher compensation, and to situations more comfortable and permanent. We persuade ourselves that the motive is a desire for a wider sphere of usefulness, a vantage-ground to do more good. We prove it, too, by Scripture: 'Covet earnestly the best gifts'; 'He that desireth the office of a bishop, desireth a good work.' What harm can there be in desiring a 'good work'? What if we do scramble a little for it, are we not told to 'covet earnestly'? But Satan is sure to detect pride and self-seeking in all these apologies. Accordingly he is at hand to help to lift the aspirant to the pinnacle of his ambition; and this he does, not that he may exalt and glorify, but that he may pervert and destroy. To this end he will even quote Scripture, that he may beguile his victim into presumption and recklessness. For his object is not to place him on a pinnacle of sublime eminence for good, but to cast him down with deluded consent among the rocks of sin, disaster, and ruin.

"Take another illustration: You introduce the dance and games of chance into your home, or frolic and fun into the Church. You argue children and youth must have some amusement and recreation, and if they cannot get it at home they will go elsewhere to obtain it. The plea seems plausible, and conscience is reconciled to it. But Satan accepts this as a card of invitation. He sees in these worldly compromises the beginnings of apostasy. His first device is to push fun into fury, vanity into vice, and recreation into debauch. If this cannot be done, he will attack your confidence by showing the inconsistency of such practices with a profession of religion. How can romp and rollick comport with godliness? By bringing such incompatibilities to the thought Satan often prompts Christians to suspend family and private prayer, public worship, and even a confession of Christ.

"The only way, therefore, to defeat the devil is to extend to him no hospitality at all; and this can only be done by getting all sin expunged from the heart. Be so empty of sin, that when Satan comes unbidden he will 'find nothing in you.' Carnivorous birds soon fly away when they find nothing but life, sweetness, and purity to prey upon.

"Second. If you would foil the devil hold no parley with him. Satan is a great debater and sophist. He belongs to a class of irrepressibles. He is quite a casuist. He is constantly raising questions of conscience and propriety, and deals largely in doubt and puzzle. He is an expert in delusion and knavery; and being such he knows he has half captured a man the moment he can secure attention to sin, or a little discussion about it as an open question. He is well aware that in debate he has the sinner, and the saint also, who is not fully saved, at a decided disadvantage. He is in the majority to start with, as all unsanctified inclinations side and vote with his vile solicitations. Sin has an affinity for sin. The only safe way, therefore, is to break off all correspondence with him, and to banish him and his works from the mind. Say on every occasion when he obtrudes himself, 'Get thee behind me, Satan.'

"Third. If you would utterly confound the devil, get beyond his reach. St. John speaks of a state of grace in which if a man continue 'that wicked one toucheth him not.'

"We cannot in this life reach a place of unconditional exemption from temptation, but we can attain unto a state of contingent inaccessibility to the touch of the devil; that is, our life may be so 'hid with Christ in God' that 'that wicked one toucheth us not.' Nor can he reach us with his sorrows. They are neutralized by the medium through which they have to pass. Can fire reach us through water, or poison through its antidote? No more can Satan reach you through the resisting surroundings of holy living. It is only when you come out of the citadel and expose yourself on the parapets that Satan can put his bullets through you. Stay in the garri-son of full redemption, and that wicked one will touch you not. If at any time you are commanded to sally forth in aggressive action, put on the whole armour of God, and still he cannot touch you. There is a shield which has the strange power of quenching all the fiery darts of the wicked one. As fire shot into water goes out, so the darts of Satan are extinguished in a moment, when obliged to be shot through a stream of atoning blood. 'Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ.' (2 Cor. 2:14).

"Fourth. If you would make sure of victory over the great enemy, keep your heart aflame with love. Satan cowers and slinks away from blazing love, like the tigers in the jungles of India are said to run from a flame of fire into their dark hiding places. Observe, it is only the fire of love that Satan dreads. There is a kind of fire in which he delights. For example, a fiery temper, a fiery altercation between Christians, a fiery discussion in the newspapers, a fiery division in a church, are kinds of fire that attract rather than repel him. But in the presence of burning love he suffers a complete collapse. Love acts upon him like the handwriting upon the wall did upon Belshazzar. It must be remembered that sin and Satan are not to be argued or educated or legislated out of this world, but burnt out. The consuming fire of love is the invincible force. By it "resist the devil, and he will flee from you."

Now that Old Age has bound you with his fettlers,
And formed long furrows in your brow of care,
Although he bent you with the weight of win-

And left his snowy traces in your hair,
You are to me the fairest and the dearest
That this or any other world can hold,
And while you still remain on earth to love me
My life will keep its sunshine's rarest gold.
When, weary with fate's burdens and life's crosses,
And heart-sick at the cruel ways of men,
I turned to you for words of hope and com-

You never failed to cheer my bosom then;
So, I will not forsake you while you linger,
And totter on the brink of your last home.
No matter where my restless footsteps wan-

Back to your side I ever long to roam.
You have seen time and death your loved ones scatter;
They leave you now to spend your days alone,
To wait in cheerless solitude, forsaken,
With no companions of the hours long

With no strong hand your frail form daily

With none your griefs to solace, soothe your fears.
O world! I turn from all your paths of pleas-

If there is one word above another that will swing open the eternal gates it is the name of Jesus. There are a great many pass-words down here, but that will be the countersign up above. Jesus Christ is the "Open Sesame" to heaven. Any one who tries to climb up some other way is a thief and a robber. And when we get in what a joy above every other joy we can think of will it be to see Jesus himself, and to be with him continually!—D. L. Moody.

THE FATALITY OF SIN.

REV. C. W. RUTH.

IN the very beginning of time God himself declared the fatality of sin, by saying, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Gen. 2:17. And again and again, by the mouth of his servants he has said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; "The wages of sin is death." Ezek. 18:4-20; Rom. 6:23. And not only did he thus warn men by precept and statutes, but by a literal enforcement of a physical death penalty for the violation of his laws and commandments as contained in the decalogue. Of the sin of Sabbath desecration, we read, "The seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death." Ex. 35:2. Concerning the sin of blasphemy we read, "He that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death." Lev. 24:16. Concerning the sin of adultery we read, "The adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death." Lev. 20:10. And so for the sin of cursing a parent, kidnapping and murder, (Lev. 20:9; Deut. 24:7; Ex. 21:12) and numerous other sins, the extreme penalty of death was meted out. Nor has God's attitude toward any of these familiar sins changed, nor sin become less fatal.

This physical death penalty was God's kindergarten method of teaching the solemn truth that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die;" that "the wages of sin is death," and the death of the soul is a thousand times more dreadful and solemn than the death of the body. Physical death has to do with our temporal interests but the death of the soul has to do with our eternal destiny and everlasting welfare. This is why Jesus said, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. 10:28. Physical death may mean release from suffering but the death of the soul will mean eternal suffering: a death that never dies.

This solemn truth should be regarded as a loving warning from our heavenly Father, rather than as a threat or as an arbitrary enactment of law. God does not decree nor will the death of any man; but the nature of sin itself is so horrible that death is the inevitable result,—with all its eternal consequences. "The Lord . . . is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Pet. 3:9. But men need to be reminded that sin is just as fatal today as it has ever been. It is still positively and absolutely true that "He that pursueth evil pursueth it to his own death." Prov. 11:19. Because men do not realize, nor believe that sin is fatal; and because they think they can commit sin and yet escape the dire consequences, and the fatal results of sin they continue to roll it as a sweet morsel under their tongues; and as the wise man has said, "Fools make a mock of sin." Prov. 14:9.

We wish to note at least three reasons why death is the inevitable and inescapable result of sin:

1. Because it separates the sinner from God, who alone is the source of all life. He alone is the fountain head of life; he alone is the life giver; and he alone can "make alive." No man can have union, communion, nor fellowship with God and live in the practice of sin. As was said to ancient Israel, "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you." Isa. 59:2. And being thus separated from him who is the life, and the only source of life, death is inevitable.

2. A second reason why death is inevitable is because of the inherent nature of sin itself. Just as the violation of physical laws interprets and destroys the harmony and the proper functioning of our physical organism, thus producing disease, and death, just so the transgression of moral law produces an abnormal and disintegrating condition in our moral and spiritual nature, which inevitably corrodes and destroys our spiritual life. In the language of the street, sin "thrusts a monkey-wrench into the machinery," thus demolishing all spiritual sensibilities in our moral fiber. Thus we read of Nabal, "His heart died within him, and he became as a stone." 1 Sam. 25:37.

3. Because in all jurisprudence there must of necessity be a penalty for the violation of law; and in justice, that penalty must be determined by the nature of the crime, and be commensurate with the guilt. "Sin is the transgression of the law: 'Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law.'" 1 John 3:4. And sin is such an atrocious crime against God and such a diabolical, and utterly inexcusable offence, that the only penalty commensurate with such an act, is the extreme penalty of death.

FACTS FROM THE FIRING LINE.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."—Hos. 4:6.

Prohibition has wrought miracles of moral, social and economic redemption, but thousands of dries do not know it. Every pastor is urged to reprint the following Fact in the Church Calendar, or read it from the pulpit to offset the destructive wet propaganda which appears in many of the secular newspapers. A new Fact appears in this place in each issue.

"Industrial insurance in the period 1914-1919 (wet) was about $5,250,000,000. From 1920 to 1925 (dry) it increased to almost $12,000,000,000, or an increase of almost 250 per cent."

It is well to remember that God's laws are not despotic and arbitrary, but absolutely necessary and essential for the well-being and preservation of the race. Even as it would be impossible to preserve order, and life itself, in our physical world without governing laws, so in like manner it would be impossible to maintain spiritual life in the spiritual world without spiritual laws, to regulate and govern the same. Thus we see that all divine law is instituted for our highest good in the protection and preservation of our spiritual self-hood and spiritual life. God is constantly saying, "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked: but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways: for why will ye die." Ezek. 33:11.

The Bible speaks of at least four kinds, or four conditions, of death. First, the person who is "dead in trespasses and sins." Eph. 2:1. Speaking of a certain class in this condition, the Apostle Paul declares she "is dead while she liveth." 1 Tim. 5:6. This refers to the person who is separated from God by reason of sin, and therefore separated from the source of all spiritual life. Second, in Rom. 6:2 we read of those who are "dead to sin," by reason of the fact that "our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed;" thus a person is separated from original sin, as the root or source of evil. "He that is dead is freed from sin," and is dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6:7-11. Third, We read in Heb. 9:27, "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the Judgment." This, of course, relates to physical death: when soul and body are separated. It is in this latter sense that the term death, is used most generally. "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for

HERE IT IS!

Just what you have longed for—a small Bible with large clear type.

The binding is an extra fine genuine Levant Morocco, leather lined to edge, silk sewed. A beautiful small grain, stamped in gold, overlapping edges. It is exceedingly flexible.

The paper is a very white, opaque, thin India which makes the Bible thin and light; at the same time, it is very durable.

The type is a large, clear special self-pronouncing that reads like long primer. The names of the books are printed on the corner of the pages, making it easy to turn to them; the chapter numbers are in figures.

The helps are 40,000 center column references with dates at the head of each column, one of the most comprehensive and complete concordances of 160 pages, 80 pages of other valuable helps, including maps in colors.

It is red under gold edges, has the silk head-band and marker, thickness is 1 inch, size is 5x7, weight is 22 ozs.

We have been selling Bibles for 30 years and this comes nearer being the most ideal than anything we have offered to our customers. The binding is handsome and durable, and the most pleasing thing about the book is that it lies perfectly flat in the hand anywhere it is opened. This is a book you will fall in love with.

The regular net price of it is $8.50. We have tried for years to have manufactured the finest and most attractive Bible that could be made, and at the same time sell it at the low price of $5.00. We have just been successful in doing this and you can get one of them. On account of the close margin at which we are selling them, we ask you to send 10c extra to pay the postage. If you are not doubly pleased, you may return the Bible in good condition within 10 days and we will refund your money promptly.

that all have sinned." And "the sting of death is sin." (Rom. 5:12; 1 Cor. 15:56). Thus we see that physical death is the direct and indirect result of sin. Our scientists have long endeavored to find the source and origin of life; suppose they explain to us the source and origin of death, and tell us why we are all destined to die! If our physical organism can renew itself, and resist and overcome the encroachments of disease and decay for fifty, seventy, or a hundred years, why may we not continue, and keep up this process forever? Fourth, in Revelation 21:8, we read, "The fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." This is the final and eternal separation, and banishment of the finally impenitent from God, after the physical death and the judgment have passed. "They were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Rev. 20:13, 14. May none of my readers ever know the significance and meaning of this second death.

Because God foresaw the fatality of sin, and its eternal consequences, and because we were utterly helpless, his great heart of love was moved with pity and compassion, and he sent us a Savior,—one who is "mighty to save, and strong to deliver,"—whose name is called "Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins," and bestow upon them "the gift of God," which is, "eternal life." For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Matt. 1:21; Rom. 6:23; John 3:16. And "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts 4:12.

---GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD---

STANLEY JONES' ASHRAM, INDIA.

Dear Friends of The Herald Family:

Until last year Calcutta was the capital of India, but the government headquarters have now been moved to the ancient capital of Delhi. Calcutta reveals the touch of western influence, with its splendid paved streets, rapid electric and motor transportation, as well as modern buildings and up-to-date shops. For almost two weeks this city was the center of our labors and while there we had the privilege of visiting some of the points of interest in this large metropolis.

One site of great interest to us was the church erected by William Carey, the brilliant missionary who left his work as a shoe cobbler in England and came to India as the first Protestant herald of the cross. He began his labors in 1791, and built the church we visited in 1806. This building is still being used today. We saw the famous baptistry in the center of the main auditorium where Adoniram Judson was baptized when he joined the Baptist Church upon his arrival in India, ere he went to take up his work as the first missionary in Burma.

The Victorian Memorial building constructed in honor of Queen Victoria is a magnificent structure and a fitting memorial for England's noble queen. The Botanical garden is also a place of attraction with its great variety of tropical plants and trees outstanding among which is the large Banyan Tree. This tree is said to spread itself over more ground than any tree in the world. We saw many other places such as the Black Hole, the large market, and the parks, which space will not permit us to describe.

The site which left the deepest impression upon us was the renowned Kalighat Temple. This place of worship is one of the outstanding in Hinduism, and here we beheld some of the gruesome as well as awful things of this heathen religion. As we drove up the road approaching the temple we found it lined with pitiful looking beggars, the most of whom were lepers, for lepers are permitted to roam at large in India. The dreadful disease of leprosy had done its terrible work and there they were, in rags, marred bodies, some with fingers and various members gone, others blind, while with grating, husky voices they begged for alms; a most pathetic sight.

As we alighted from our car we were quickly surrounded by another band of beggars said to be holy men. Pushing them aside we started for the temple just ahead. To our left we noticed a large pool of water said to be fed by the water from the Ganges River, thus making it holy to the Hindu people. We were told that the women who are barren come to this pool with the hope that by bathing here they will find favor with the gods and then give birth to a child. To be childless is a great disgrace in all Oriental lands and such women are looked down upon with no little contempt.

We entered the rear gate of the temple grounds and the first sight that caught our eyes was the sacrificing of a goat by the priest. We watched him a moment as he severed the head of the goat and the blood came gushing forth. We looked in another direction and here a Brahman priest was leading a family in the worship of the fire god. They were sitting on the ground around a little fire, and the priest chanted some prayers and then took ashes and rubbed them over the foreheads of the forlorn worshippers as they went through the ceremony. We noticed the father of the family hand the priest a sum of money, who greedily tucked it in his pocket while the family wended their way through the temple gate going as they came with souls shrouded in darkness.

We then started up the stairs entering the temple but were soon stopped by the yells of onlooking Hindus and priests who quickly advised us that we were defiling their temple by entering without taking off our shoes, so we retreated. As we turned we noticed a row of small buildings standing by the temple and we were told that behind these locked doors the priests carry on a traffic of prostitution under the guise of religion. Our friend then pointed out several children which we noticed were begging on the temple grounds. "These," said he, "are the results of this diabolical practice." A revolting and horrible condition.

We started down the path which connects the Ganges River with the temple ground. We walked about a quarter of a mile and were besieged on every side by beggars who presented some horrible pictures of poverty. As we approached the bank of the river we noticed a goodly number of people bathing in the water, and thus worshipping the river god. Some were praying, others were drinking the water hoping thus to gain virtue, while still others were going through a long ceremony of worship as they stood there in mid stream, under the blazing sun, in their ignorance and superstition worshipping the Ganges River.

We then moved along the side of the river until we came to the burning ghat where the Hindus take their dead and the priests burn their bodies. The priest takes the dead body and washes it in the Ganges, then a wood fire is built and the body thrown on top. There it is left to burn until nothing but a few charred bones remain. A very gruesome picture.

Upon leaving the burning ghat we passed by a holy man sitting on a bed of spikes. His hair was long, and his body covered with dust. He wore only a loin cloth for clothing. There he sat in the heat of the day under the delusion that by torturing his body he would win merit with the gods.

We left the temple grounds depressed. We had known that Hinduism presented a dark picture, but now we saw how dark the darkness really is. We had believed there was no hope in heathen religions but now we had a picture of the utter hopelessness of this system of religion. We had realized India needed Christ but now we realized as never before that India cannot get along without Christ. Mingled with the depressed feeling there was a swelling of praise and thanksgiving for we knew of a Name who was able to lift even from the depths of this utter darkness. Thank God for the precious name of Jesus who is able. Pray for us.

Yours in his service,

HOLINESS CONVENTIONS IN THE ORIENT: Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Rice.

Accompanied by Rev. and Mrs. E. L. Kilbourne, on March 9th we left Shanghai for Peking, China. This indeed was a new experience for Mrs. Rice and myself, traveling by rail in China. We had a blessed time and felt God's protecting hand upon us continually, and arrived safely in Peking after two days and nights.

The Oriental Missionary Society has a very encouraging work in this city. The pastor of our mission is Rev. Lyu, a trained worker from our Bible Institutes who has been with the Society for a number of years and who is well liked not only by the Chinese but also by the foreigners in Peking. He is continually in demand as a preacher of the gospel on various occasions other than those in connection with his own work. It is in this city of Peking that The Oriental Missionary Society will soon open its third Bible Training Institute in China. Praise the Lord, the work is growing and the objective of our Society of ten Bible Institutes located strategically in the great empire of China is beginning to be realized. God is answering prayer by giving us these Institutes one by one.

After a few days of special meetings in Peking we journeyed on to Seoul, Korea, where our convention was to be held beginning March 18th. We were met at the station by the missionaries, Brother and Sister Woods, Brother and Sister Haines, and Misses Black and Tate and a delegation of students and workers. They gave us an enthusiastic reception indeed.

We had already heard of the marvelous work which The Oriental Missionary Society had built up in this place during the past twenty years but no statement that we had heard had exaggerated what we actually found. Approximately six hundred, or more, were out to the early five o'clock prayer meetings which the writer led and the Spirit-filled Koreans took hold of our hearts and won our affections immediately, as they would anyone privileged to come in touch with them in their services. Brother F. J. Briggs was the special speaker of the Convention and God spoke to all of our hearts through his splendid messages. We were greatly impressed with the deep devotion and spirituality of the Koreans, and especially their prayerfulness. Before entering into conversation with one another they would bow their heads in prayer. They must first talk to Jesus before talking with each other. I am sure we would all be spared a lot if we always patterned after them in this respect.

During the Convention it was our joy to receive into the Society Rev. Robert Chung, whom I formerly knew at Asbury and who is one of the most noted evangelists in Korea. God is wonderfully blessing Brother Chung's ministry and we are glad to have him unite his vision and burden with ours.

The attendance was splendid throughout the Convention, and in some of the day services there were more than a thousand present. May God bless the Koreans in our prayer.

Our second convention was at Tokyo, Japan, under the leadership of Rev. Juji Nakada, one of the co-founders of The Oriental Missionary Society in Japan. What a leader and general of the people and assemblies is this wonderful native Japanese preacher! Brother Nakada has certainly been raised up of God to lead his people out of a spiritual wilderness into a land of Canaan. God has wonderfully honored this man by placing him in charge not only of this great tabernacle and Bible School work but also by giving him the responsibility of heading the Japanese Holiness Church of The Oriental Missionary Society. The crowds are so large during the conventions that they have outgrown the frame tabernacle building so that a large tent is erected on the grounds of the O. M. S. Bible Institute seating 4200 people. If the members of the churches at home could have visited this wonderful convention and seen the enthusiasm shown in the genuine interest in getting souls saved there would not be any lack of funds in carrying on the work in these ripened mission fields. Easter morning Brother Nakada in his sermon stated that recently there had been a bone of Buddha (about as big as a pea) found in Siam and the same had just recently been received in Japan by some of the Buddhist priests and that they were looking for a place to put it so that they might worship it. Brother Nakada added that he was so glad there were none of the bones of Jesus lying around for people to make a fuss over, but that his Saviour was RISEN. Glory! Hallelujah!

The Oriental Missionary Society Japanese Holiness Church has five or six hundred preaching stations in Japan alone. We thank God that he ever called Brother Cowman and Brother Kilbourne and Brother Nakada to start this wonderful salvation work thirty years ago. And the end is not yet!

Our third convention was at Canton, China. Our party was given a very warm welcome by our missionaries there, Brother E. R. Munroe, Brother and Sister G. G. Phillips, Brother and Sister O. W. French, Brother and Sister Larsen and Sister Clarke, and also the Chinese workers and students. They all met us at the boat with drums and horns, and being Chinese also had their fire crackers. This work of our Society was started some twenty-eight years ago and was run by Brother and Sister Munroe until a year or so ago when Brother Munroe amalgamated his work with that of The Oriental Missionary Society. We have splendid missionaries at this place; and also we were greatly impressed with the native workers and student body. We fell in love with Brother Munroe and were delighted to visit this work of which we had heard favorably for many years. There are four mission stations in the city, and they are real feeders to the school. In three of the missions there are services held every night, with the exception of Saturday night. The day services of the convention were held in the chapel on the compound and the evening services were in these various missions, all of which were crowded to the door every night. Brother Woods was the special speaker at this convention, and never have we heard him preach better. The work in South China is growing very rapidly and the trustees took steps to enlarge the work immediately in the way of larger buildings and properties.

Our fourth convention is now in progress at Shanghai. We will report more fully on this later. God is wonderfully blessing the services and is graciously pouring out his Spirit upon the missionaries and native workers as they have gathered in from the various sections, some coming from Peking, others from Nanking and others from the mission stations in Shanghai and various places.

Mrs. Rice and I feel greatly indebted to Brother and Sister Kilbourne who have accompanied us to these various conventions, for all of their kindnesses. They certainly do know the Orient and are wonderful missionaries. We are returning to the United States, sailing from Shanghai, May 2nd, on the Chichibu Maru, a large ocean liner of the N. Y. K. Line, and we are expecting to arrive in Los Angeles, May 23rd, D. V.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN.

Evangeline Reams, of Columbus, Ohio, founder of the Friends' Rescue Home of that city, has just assisted in a special gospel campaign in the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Coldwater, Mich. God did wonderfully bless his "handmaiden" during the two weeks of the meetings, and in blessing her he greatly blessed his people. Conviction for sins and sin was deep, so much so that some feeling their need rushed to the "mourners bench" and were "Delivered on the sunny banks of sweet deliverance." Precious souls were blessed from many places round about, for people were in attendance forty miles distant. C. G. Finney used to say: "Big preaching causes the people to praise the preacher; good preaching causes the people to praise the Lord." Thank God for the good preaching of the great gospel that Sister Reams does. The Lord helps her to carry the day for him. George Fox, the mighty Quaker, so often records in his journal this statement: "The Lord's glorious truth rode triumphant over all opposition." I say, AMEN!

Daniel Garfield Hodgkin, Pastor.

NEW ALBANY, PENNSYLVANIA.

New Albany M. E. Church has just been blessed with a very gracious revival under the leadership of the Rev. Warren C. McIntire, of Wilmore, Ky. This church was in sore need of a spiritual awakening, and many conditions that existed within the church made it a very difficult situation. But the battle was pressed and during the last week, of the two weeks' meeting, great victories were won. Thirty-one seekers came to the altar and went away with a new song in their hearts, giving glad testimony of what God had done for them in saving or sanctifying them. This was a real Holy Ghost revival where the people prayed through to God in the old-fashioned way. Many made covenant with God to maintain family altars in their homes morning and evening, many others making covenant with God to observe private devotion both morning and evening. Brother McIntire is God's man under this particular hour. He is a man of prayer, and he preaches under the anointing of the Spirit, and he should be kept busy doing God's work in God's way. Pastors or churches wanting a real revival will do well to see this man of God. We praise God for those who have been saved and sanctified, and for the good that has come to the church and town.

Wm. D. Hall, Pastor.

Let us live the life of daily faithfulness, and we shall rejoice as those who find great spoil! The years shall only clear our vision and show us more glorious things.—W. L. Watkinson.

As I tramped about with my friend, Rev. J. L. Piercy, and our guide, looking over these grounds, with Jeremiah's prophecy in mind, I rejoiced that God was keeping his word to his chosen people right before our eyes. We cannot understand how it is that any one who claims to believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, can doubt that God will restore Israel to Palestine.

The Women Can if They Will.

The women of this country have about the same number of ballots that the men have. If they will rally their splendid forces against the powers of evil that would break down our prohibition laws, they can hit old John Barleycorn a blow from which he will never recover.

The time for the forces of Prohibition to unite themselves and deliver their protest so that it will be effective, is before the two great political parties hold their conventions and nominate their candidates for President of the nation. There ought to be such an arousal among the people, such active and energetic organization, such a union of all the forces for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, that they will be able to speak with authority to the politicians.

There is no class of people who know better which side of their bread is buttered than the politicians, and they like the buttered side. What they need is to be made to understand that this nation does not intend to elect a wet president; does not intend to have the Eighteenth Amendment removed from the constitution, and does not intend to be dictated by the liquor oligarchy.

The W. C. T. U. is rendering splendid service; there are other organizations of men and women who are rallying under the Prohibition Banner. May their numbers increase by tens and hundreds of thousands. It appears now that Raskob, who is undertaking to dictate the policy of the Democratic Party, and split it over Prohibition, has been riding two horses. There is a bit of uncertainty whether he is at heart a republican or a democrat. He and his allies certainly did lead the democrats to inglorious defeat the last presidential election. It now seems that the men and women who stand for the highest interests of the people, have determined to turn Raskob's prancing steeds tail to tail, with their heads in opposite directions and lay the whip to them. That would leave Mr. Raskob, as he deserves to be left, not only on foot, but wallowing in the mire of his own low selfishness.

If there ever was a time when the noble women of this country, from the palaces of the wealthy to the cabins of the poor, should rally under the white banner of righteousness for the overthrow and trampling under foot of the liquor traffic, the arch enemy of God and humanity, that time is now.

THE REVELATION OF THE TRINITY.

Text: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5:18.

It will be well for us to remember that in the unfolding of the great plan of redemption, it was divine wisdom that the fullness of the Trinity should be revealed in the following order:

- I. The Father.
- II. The Son.
- III. The Holy Spirit.

The revelation of the Father was, in a remarkable sense, a preparation for the revelation of the Son. The Father revealed himself to the prophets and revealed to them his plan and purpose for the revelation of his Son. The prophets, in their teachings, prepared the Hebrew Church for the coming of the Son. When Jesus came he bore witness to the inspiration and trustworthiness of the prophecies concerning himself. He also set his approval upon the whole of the Old Testament Scriptures, as they then existed, the Scriptures we have and believe today, and he, in a most remarkable way, revealed the Father. We never could have had any correct understanding of God, the Father, had not Jesus come and given us a revelation of him. It was Jesus who taught us to say, "Our Father, who art in heaven." It was Jesus who taught us that, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." It was Jesus who forgave the woman who was being dragged to be stoned to death for fearful sin and said to her, "Go, and sin no more." It was Jesus who spoke peace and gave assurance to a dying thief that he should be with him in Paradise the very day of their death upon the Cross, and added to all this, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." What a marvelous revelation Jesus gave of the God of the Universe! We never could have had any accurate conception of God had not Jesus come. In fact, Jesus taught that "No man knoweth the Father save the Son and he to whom the Son will reveal him." He said, "No man cometh to the Father but by me."

It was our Lord Jesus Christ who prepared the church for the coming of the Holy Spirit. Jesus in the flesh was comparatively local throughout his life ministry upon the earth. His life in the flesh was circumscribed to a very small part of the world's geography. It was in part because of this fact that he said, "It is expedient," that is, "better for you" that I go away.

The ministry of Jesus was full of teaching with reference to the Holy Spirit, his Person, his equal in honor and power with the Father and the Son, and in his concern and work in the salvation of men. The Holy Spirit was to be world-wide in his presence and influence. He was to touch men everywhere at the same time. The coming of the Holy Spirit was the climax of revelation. It was one of the greatest epochs in the history of God's dealings with men. Man was created for God. Sin brought separation. The coming of the Holy Spirit to indwell men was a marvelous restoration of communion and fellowship between men and the blessed Trinity.

It is an interesting fact that each person of the Trinity reveals the other person of the Trinity, that is, while we had the revelation of the Father before we had the revelation of the Son, and never could have had any correct understanding of the Father if the Son had not come and revealed him, even so we shall not be able to have anything like a correct comprehension of the Lord Jesus Christ without the coming of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit reveals, explains, exalts and glorifies the Lord Jesus Christ. The Apostle evidently has this in mind when he says, "No man calleth Jesus Lord but by the Holy Spirit." The Holy Spirit exalts Jesus high over all. Those persons who have been baptized by the Holy Ghost are entirely safe from any of the shallow conceptions or false teachings of Unitarianism. They are fixed forever in their abiding faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Those who have received the Holy Spirit have gotten such a revelation of Jesus that they have no trouble in believing in the Virgin Birth, the Godhead, the sinless life, the absolute truth of the teachings of Jesus and the atoning merit of his suffering, of his triumphant, bodily resurrection, and his existence and intercessions at the right hand of the Father, his power to forgive sins, to cleanse and sanctify souls. The baptism with the Holy Spirit is a tremendous epoch in the history of a child of God and wonderfully confirms and establishes the faith of those who receive him in his in-coming, cleansing, and abiding.

How wonderful it is that the third Person of the Trinity, One and equal with the Father, should come to abide, to comfort, illuminate, and empower the child of God for service. We can think of nothing more marvelous in the scheme of redemption than that God, from whom we were separated by sin, should separate us from sin through the merit of our blessed Lord and Savior and come to indwell us. With what diligence, humility, self-examination, and earnestness we should pray, wait, long for and receive the Holy Spirit, and having received him how humbly we should walk in obedience to his blessed guidance.

There is this that should be remembered carefully. The Holy Spirit will never guide us into any teaching or action out of harmony with the plain teachings of the Word of God. This should be a final test in all impressions and leadings and if we should be impressed or feel led to say or do anything that contradicts the Word of God, as taught in Old Testament and New Testament Scriptures, we must conclude at once that it is not the leading or impression of the Holy Spirit. He is always and absolutely true to the Scriptures and the teaching of Jesus.

In the Epistle to the Ephesians, from which we have selected our text, we find constant reference to the Holy Spirit, his presence and his holy offices in the Church of God and the individual child of God. It is in this Epistle that we learn that we are "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." It is here we are taught that through Christ we have "access by one Spirit unto the Father" and "are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:20, 21, 22. It is in this wonderful Epistle that the Apostle gives us a description of the result of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, saying, "For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth, proving what is acceptable unto the Lord."

Immediately following the Text, in which we are commanded, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit," the Apostle goes on showing the result of such filling. He says, "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord, giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." How blessed is such an experience. What more could we ask than that the great scheme of redemption provides for the forgiveness of all our transgressions, the cleansing away of all our unrighteousness, and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit to bear witness to the truth of God's Word, to the Deity and saving and sanctifying power of the Lord Jesus Christ? Then, let us see to it that we be filled with the Spirit, that we be intoxicated with the indwelling and empowering of the Holy Spirit, who shall bring into us the spirit of the Lord Jesus, who shall make us more and more like the blessed Christ, ever remembering that the spirit of Christ is the spirit of holy courage, that would bear witness to the truth and who knew it meant the cruelty of the Cross, and a spirit of forgiveness and pity that could pardon and pray for those who nailed him there. The indwelling of the Holy Spirit means that we shall become wonderfully Christlike in our absolute faith in the Eternal Father, his Word and blessedly submissive to his will, and, at the same time, greatly concerned for the salvation of the people, always bearing about with us an attitude of pity, humility and mercy and love, even for our enemies. O that we may know what it means to be filled with, comforted and empowered by, the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

The Federal Council of Churches.

We publish in this issue of THE HERALD an article by Bishop Warren A. Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., on the above subject. It is rather lengthy, but well worth reading. We have never believed that there was any need for this organization in the religious life of our nation. We believe it is time that all of the religious denominations of the country should repudiate this Federal Council of Churches and refuse it any sort of support or recognition.

There is a fine fraternal spirit existing among the Protestant churches of our country, and it should be preserved and cultivated. Each denomination, however, will know how to attend to its own affairs and should co-operate with all good work for the salvation of souls and the general good of society. We think it would be a fine thing for the churches, in an official way, to notify the Federal Council to keep off of the denominational grass of all the Protestant churches of our nation. Do not fail to read Bishop Candler's article. We take it from that very excellent church paper, The Alabama Christian Advocate. H. C. M.

Paul's Superlative.

Dr. M. P. Hunt has just published a book of sermons. Rev. M. P. Hunt, a Baptist minister, pastor of one of the Baptist churches in Louisville, is well known throughout Kentucky as one of the most devout, honest, earnest, fearful and fruitful men in the state. He has been preaching for almost a half century. In every question involving right and wrong you will always know where to find M. P. Hunt. He is not only on the right side, but a courageous and aggressive soldier for righteousness. I have known him intimately for more than thirty years and count him among my best friends. His new book contains eleven sermons and are quite interesting. The book is bound in very attractive style, good paper, clear print and strong meat, served with plain earnestness. The price of the book is $1.00, and can be had of The Pentecostal Publishing Co., Louisville, Ky.

TRY THE SPIRITS.

REV. HENRY T. SCHOLL, D. D.

HE caption is reproduced from the A. V. of 1 John 4:1. For "try," we have "prove," in the R. V. The Greek verb thus translated has five other renderings in the A. V., and one of these is "examine." If the examination is satisfactory, the teacher is approved on test. If the teaching does not accord with the sure word of prophecy, the teachers are normally disapproved on test. Unfortunately "many false prophets are gone out into the world."

In THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD of March 11, 1931, reference is made to a half-hour sermon, wherein auditors were urged to "Rise up in your might, meet the problems of life, and be victor!" Nothing about sin, or repentance for sin, or pardon for sin, or the new birth by the Holy Spirit! Nothing of salvation from sin through Christ, here and now.

Editor Morrison has referred repeatedly to the widespread decadence of the Methodist ministry, who accept a godless evolution, and are not minded to preach and profess "Jesus as Lord."

One of the most popular ministerial broadcasters of today asserted that his individual divinity differed from that of Jesus Christ in degree only; and that he himself is of like nature with Jesus Christ, he himself being an ocean-fed pool, and Jesus the ocean itself. He also affirmed that we get rid of Christ by our worship of him, and that Christ neither claims nor desires worship. This does not accord with what Jesus says of himself in John 5:22-23, and what is said of him in Heb. 1:6. Nor does it harmonize with the reported fact that Jesus Christ, very God and very Man, repeatedly accepted worship from various individuals. The broadcaster aforesaid has, apparently, no use for the blood atonement, and seems to think and to teach that man can be self-evolved from the pollution and power of sin into an existence of Christlike divinity. It is presumable that he would be ready to endorse the creed bulletined in front of our local universal church, Middletown, N. Y., "Salvation by Character."

As I read and interpret Scripture, Jesus Christ came "to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 19:10. It was for a perishing world that he made his blood atonement, bearing our sins in his own body on the tree. John 3:16; 1 Peter 2:24. "Without the shedding of blood, there is no remission." Heb. 9:20.

"Dead in trespasses and in sins" are we by nature; spiritually without strength, helpless and hopeless. Eph. 2:1-12; Rom. 5:6. Our understanding was darkened, and our heart desperately wicked; and we were children of wrath, like all the unregenerate. Eph. 4:18; Jer. 17:9. Jesus is willing to save, and able to save unto the uttermost all who come unto God through him. Heb. 7:25. In no other name under heaven is salvation possible. Acts 4:12. Till he saves, we are condemned, and are under his wrath. John 3:18, 36. He saves by grace through faith. Eph. 2:8, 9. Saving faith worketh by love. Gal. 5:6. Love links to Christ, and fulfils the law. 1 John 2:3-5; Rom. 13:10. Loveless righteousness profits naught. 1 Cor. 13:1-3. Veritable love gives evidence of the indwelling of Deity, and the indwelling of Deity is our worthwhile hope of glory. 1 John 16; 5:11-12; Col. 2:27. If Christ is in us we are new creatures. We have been graced with the new birth, birth of water and of the Spirit; and have begun a steadfast life pursuit of that holiness without which no man shall see the Lord. 2 Cor. 5:17; John 3:1-7; Heb. 12:14.

Prohibition's Great Allies.

The unified movement for the support of prohibition, eagerly anticipated by those who stand for the enforcement of the law, has now been effected. The plans and personnel of the organization will give great encouragement to the friends of the dry law. Its two-fold purpose is to unify the allies of prohibition in a nation-wide plan to educate and inspire the American people on this vital issue. Beginning with the youth of the country, a comprehensive program is outlined for their organization into state bodies under their own presidents and staffs. These will undertake "Field Day" operations beginning next September. Simultaneously, the campaigners, a group of nationally known prohibition speakers, will cover the country through "Flying Squads" who will speak in fifteen hundred mass meetings in key cities. They hope to reach two million people with their message and to stimulate the work of local temperance organizations. Back of these aggressive campaigners is the Allied Business Men, a group of the business leaders who support the Eighteenth Amendment. This body will initiate a comprehensive nationwide advertising and publicity campaign and in other ways seek to take the prohibition question to the American people.

The new organization of supporters of prohibition is nonpolitical, interdenominational, and national in its personnel and includes many well-known business men and women. While inviting the co-operation of prohibition groups, it has no official relationship with these societies. Its one purpose is to secure the enforcement of the prohibition laws. It believes in the Eighteenth Amendment and wants to see it given a fair chance to succeed. Defining the spirit of the present campaign Dr. Daniel Poling, one of the vigorous defenders of the dry laws, said:

"The leaders of the Allied Forces do not believe that 'All of God's children' are on one side of this issue. They know too that there are other issues. They recognize an honest, deep-seated difference of opinion. But they do believe that prohibition is a national issue and must be treated accordingly. They are unequivocally for the Eighteenth Amendment. They believe that the great majority of the American people are with them. It is their purpose to assist in giving this majority reasons for its faith and a fully organized medium of expression—locally and nationally."

This new united campaign is a war measure. Leaders in all sections of the country realize that unless law enforcement is presented to the American people both educationally and with persuasive logic, this great social reform is in danger of going down to defeat. It must be defended against the propaganda of the wets and protected against the inertia of its friends. The military strategy of unified command will win the day for the Allies of Prohibition, as it did for the Allies in the World War.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Believing that a Divinely-called, wholly-sanctified, well-equipped, Spirit-filled ministry is one of the greatest needs of our times, and for all time to come, I am glad to make a donation for the upbuilding of the Asbury Theological Seminary at Wilmore, Ky.

For this great work, I promise to give $..... per year for five years, first installment due September 1, 1931. I will join all who are helping in this good work in prayer for the blessing of the Lord to rest upon it.

ON GUARD.

Uncle Alex came out on the back piazza with his newspaper and was just going to seat himself in one of his arm chairs when a very large spider, weaving its web among the vines, attracted his attention.

He went closer to look at it, and presently called Neddie, who was playing in the yard, "Neddie, come and see this huge spider."

"I can't come now, Uncle Alex," replied Neddie. "I'm on duty."

Uncle Alex stopped looking at the spider and looked at Neddie. He had a paper soldier cap on, carrying a toy gun, was gravely passing up and down before his tent, which was pitched on the grass under the big cherry tree. Will Ramsey and two or three other boys were in the adjoining meadow galloping along on sticks, and flourishing wooden swords. There was probably a battle going on, though the cows chewing their cuds under the trees didn't seem to be frightened.

"What are you doing?" asked Uncle Alex.

"I'm a sentinel on guard," said Neddie.

"Can't you come over here just a minute if I watch the tent?"

"No indeed!" answered Neddie, decidedly. "Soldiers mustn't go away a second when they are on duty."

"Well, well," said Uncle Alex, seeming quite amused as he sat down to his paper.

Toward the close of the afternoon when the tent was deserted and the boys were playing something else at the other side of the house, Neddie's mother came out on the porch, carrying a small basket.

She looked hastily around and then called, "Neddie, Neddie, where are you?"

"Here, Mother!" he shouted, bounding around the corner of the house and up the steps.

"I want you to go over to the store and get me two pounds of sugar and a half pound of raisins," said the mother, adding: "Now don't be long. I am making something good for supper, and I want those things as soon as possible."

About ten minutes after Neddie had gone, Uncle Alex started to the post office. When he reached the little brook which had to be crossed to get to the village, he saw Neddie standing on the bridge throwing pebbles into the water.

"Hello, Neddie!" he said. "I thought you were on duty."

"No, sir; Mother sent me to the store."

"I thought I heard her giving you a commission which was to be executed with promptness and dispatch; when you could not be tempted away from duty a moment, I wonder, rather, to see you standing here."

Neddie, with a puzzled expression, looked steadily in his uncle's face for a moment or two, and then, turning his steps toward the village, was off in a flash.

Uncle Alex was standing on the post office steps, reading a letter, when he happened to see Neddie come out of the grocery store with his basket and walk rapidly homeward. Some little boys on the other side of the street also spied him, and, running over, surrounded him; evidently wanting him to stop with them a little while. In a very good natured way, Neddie declined their invitation, and kept on his way. He realized that he was on duty.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I read this story and decided to pass it on to the children who enjoy page ten in The Herald.

A Little Girl Who Got Mad With Her Mama.

Dorothy came in later one evening and said: "Mama, may I go to see Mary Virginia?" Mama said, "No, darling, it is too late. When daddy comes he will want to see his little girl." She went to cook supper and Dorothy went to the big gate out in the wheat field. The dog followed her. The wheat was so high she soon got lost and could not find her way back. She cried, but no one heard her. She had no supper to eat, no bed to sleep on and went to sleep in the wheat and the dog lay down by her. When daddy came in, he asked for his little girl. Mama said, "She asked to go to see Mary Virginia and I told her it was too late." They hunted everywhere, but couldn't find her. It was dark and some men decided to hunt for her. They took guns and said if they found her dead they would shoot once, and if they found her alive they would shoot twice. They went different ways. At last one man heard a dog growl; he went and found the little girl asleep and the dog by her side. The dog growled so he was afraid to go near. So he shot his gun twice. Here came the other men; another man came but the dog would not let him touch her. When daddy came, he took his little girl and the dog followed, wagging his tail. When they reached home, mama had cried herself sick. The little girl said, "I'll never be bad any more." Daddy gave the dog a good supper.

Moral: Children, obey your parents."

I enjoy The Herald. Several of the Herald family have written me such nice letters and a number of tracts which I enjoy in my lonely hours. Dorothy Smith, in New York, is such a Christian girl. Her mother is dead. Blessings on Bro. Morrison and The Herald.

B. F. Copeland.

922 N. 14th St., Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you move over and let a Missouri girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am seventeen years old, five feet, three inches tall and weigh one hundred and six pounds. My birthday is August 30. Have I a twin? I am a happy member of the Missionary Baptist Church at Silverdale. I have only read a few *Pentecostal Herald*s, but I have found it the most interesting paper I ever read and I am glad to know there are so many Christian girls and boys in this circle. I enjoy the good stories and pray for all and ask the same favor from you. I want to hear from every Christian boy and girl, man or woman and like old people's advice. I'll close hoping Mr. W. B. is gone to church, and wishing Dr. and Mrs. Morrison and all the readers all peace, love and joy. Send snapshots so I can start a Christian album.

Mildred Bailey.

Rt. 1, Hornersville, Mo.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am thirteen years of age. I go to Sunday school nearly every Sunday. I go to Christian Mill school. I am in the sixth grade. I get all A's on my report card. I am not a Christian but I want all of the cousins to pray for me. I will answer all the letters I receive. Tell all of my cousins to write to me.

Rachel Warner.

Rt. 3, Nicholasville, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let an Alabama girl in with your happy band of cousins? This is my first letter to your cousins' corner. I enjoy reading all the cousins' letters. I live on a farm and I like it. I try to go to Sunday school every Sunday. I am sixteen years old and weigh one hundred and thirty-one pounds. Who has my name and birthday, Dec. 21? I would like to have some girls and boys my age to write to me.

Mary Sue Howard.

Mt. Sterling, Ala.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Can a Wisconsin girl join your happy band of boys and girls? Though I may be rather old, but have seen letters from older women and men than myself. I am twenty-eight years old. I am five and one-half feet tall, heavy, dark, bobbed hair, light complexion and dress plain but becomingly. I am fond of reading, sewing, embroidering and would love to travel, if possible, and fond of good games and movies and swimming. But many young folks are overdoing it. Will the cousins please pray for me as I have backslid. I was saved and had an outpouring of the Holy Spirit while at Hallefujah camp at Oregon, Wis., but have no holiness church here. Everything is so worldly in this part of the country. There are several false teachings in full swing but holiness is hard to get. I am a Baptist. I have read The Pentecostal Herald for two years and find it a good paper. Would be glad to hear from some of the cousins.

Amelia E. Quinn.

131 Chestnut St., Fon du Lac, Wis.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Here I come again. Wonder if you can find space in your circle for me. Since I last wrote, most two years ago, I have made two grades in school. I cannot read anything in The Herald as well as page ten and I do like to read. I am now a real heartfelt Christian and do enjoy going to church and Sunday school. My school is out now and was a bit glad for had been going so long it seemed. It is chicken time and we are fixing to set our incubator, then mother and I will be kept busy. We set it twice last spring and how I did enjoy seeing after it. I do love to work with poultry. I will be eleven August 7. Have I a twin? If so, write to me. Will be in the fifth grade at school next year. My first name begins with P and ends with A, and has seven letters. Who can guess it? Will say it is an odd name, also an old name. I can't hardly wait to get to read the letters on page ten. Do hope everybody enjoys the good pieces of The Herald like we all do. Mother and daddy both read everything in it. The sermons are so good, and as mother's health has been so bad the past two years she doesn't get to go to church any and the good pieces are such food for her soul. Want to ask the prayers of the readers that mother might be restored to her health again if it can be God's will for we need her so bad. She is just able to be up and down now from a severe week's siege of flu, and its bad effects. Would be glad to hear from some of you cousins my age. Will try and answer all who write.

Jeannette Uffelman.

Erin, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a girl from Illinois join your happy band of boys and girls? I have light hair, blue eyes and fair complexion. My father takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. I am a member of the M. E. Church, and my father is superintendent of the Sunday school. Our pastor is Rev. E. Connitt. I have been to Asbury College, as my oldest sister attended there. I will answer all letters received from boys or girls. I hope to see this letter in print as it is my first, and I hope Mr. W. B. has gone fishing when this letter arrives. I am thirteen years old; my birthday is August 4. I am in the eighth grade.

Mildred Leonard.

1216 So. 12th St., Mt. Vernon, Ill.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Would you allow me a letter among the interesting letters that are written to page ten of The Herald? The Herald certainly has been a source of strength and comfort to me in my efforts to please my Saviour. I wish everybody could read this good paper. I believe, with no discredit to other good religious papers, The Pentecostal Herald is one of the best papers in circulation. It has no rival in that of condemning evil of every kind in the political, ecclesiastical and social world. Boys and girls, let's do our part in giving this unique paper a wider circulation. Since my subscribing for The Herald the last time, I have been reading every article with no exceptions. The most joyful life to live is the Christian life; although many are deluded with the idea that there is no pleasure in being a Christian. Not long since I was in conversation with a young man who stated that he did not think that there is any joy in living a righteous life. He is just one among the thousands of young people whom Satan has deluded. There is nothing that affords a person quite so much peace and contentment as to know that God's smiles of approval are on his life. In the lonely wee hours of the night he is conscious of an unseen Presence, and how consoling this is. The one who is ready for the future life is best prepared to enjoy the present life. It gives me pleasure to know that pure blood flows through my veins. I have no habits that I would

Heralds of a Passion.

By REV. CHARLES L. GOODELL.

This is a plea for the souls of men. The author maintains that everything great in life is a passion, and religion being a life, must be impassioned.

It is a great book. Send $1.00 to Rev. C. R. Crowe, 2725 Victor Place, Louisville, Ky., and get a copy.

be ashamed to tell anyone. With love to all who are interested in the good old Pentecostal Herald.

Ray Daniel.

Rt. 1, Mooresville, N. C.

Dear Aunt Bettie: As this is my second letter to The Herald I hope to see it in print because I didn't see the other one. Can any one guess my middle name? It begins with M and ends with A, and has seven letters in it. I am eleven years old. My birthday is January 2. I was born in 1920. Have I a twin? If so, write to me and I will answer all letters. I go to Warrensburg High School. I am in the fourth grade. My teacher's name is Miss Mildred Diana Jones. I go to Whittensburg Sunday school. My father sings for preachers; he is a Christian. I have one sister and two brothers. I have one half-sister and three half-brothers, and one of them is dead. I hope Mr. W. B. has gone out for a walk when this letter arrives.

Margaret M. Sauceman.

Rt. 3, Mosheim, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: May I join your happy band of girls and boys? My name is Katherine Gray. This is my first letter to The Herald. I enjoy reading page ten. My birthday is the 9th of March. I am seven years old. I don't take The Herald but grandpa does. I go to Ore Bank school. I am in the fourth grade. Miss Nell Easterly is my teacher. My hair is black, my eyes are dark brown and I have dark complexion. I am visiting my little aunt and saw The Herald, and I hope to see this letter in print. Guess my first name. It starts with M and ends with it, and has eight letters in it. If any one can guess it write to me and I will answer. I guess your name to be Jean. Am I right?

M. Katherine Gray.

Rt. 3, Mosheim, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you please open your door wide enough for a Kentucky girl to slip in long enough to get acquainted with your happy band of boys and girls? I do not take The Herald but a friend of mine does and once in a while I get it to read. I like to read page ten. I am fifteen years old, weigh one hundred and ten pounds, have blond hair, light complexion, and am five feet tall. My birthday is Dec. 10. Have I a twin? This is my first letter to The Herald and I hope to see it in print. I will answer all letters I receive and I hope that is several. Guess my middle name. It begins with M and ends in D, and has seven letters in it.

Lois M. Peery.

Rt. 3, Clinton, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I've been a silent reader of your dear old paper for some time and certainly do enjoy reading it especially page ten. It does me so much good to see how many young people have a testimony for Jesus, and to hear them tell what he has done for them. In one's youth is the time to seek salvation, as when you get older and your heart grows harder the Devil gets such a good hold on you. It is hard to get rid of him, as he is such a cunning old fox, but whatever comes up look ever to Jesus, he'll carry you through. Don't let evil companions come between you and your Savior, the way I did in my youth, and forget your Christ. When I forgot Jesus the Devil dragged me very low in sin. For years I followed Satan and received nothing for my labor but grief and woe, but a little less than two years ago when I was still down deep in sin with a wrecked body and no friends and only near relatives left, and being a cripple for years your earthly friends soon forsake you, but Jesus will never leave you nor forsake you. He followed me all through life, but for all I did not listen to his pleading, but now I am bound to tell what he did for me and what he is doing for me now. He keeps me on the firing line every day—trying to lead some one—a poor sinner, out of this awful hell. And he can do the same for us all if we let him lead. I cannot thank him enough for his mercy he shows to us when we are so low in the depths of sin. ## FALLEN ASLEEP

CARLTON.

On April 3rd, just twelve days before her 72nd birthday, Mrs. Annie Carlton passed to her reward; interment was made in the Miakka cemetery, Rev. Champion officiating, assisted by several others.

Mother had been sick for quite a while and suffered a great deal in spite of all that could be done for her by physicians and loved ones. Her days of suffering were made sweet by the presence of the Holy Spirit, who comforted her and enabled her to rejoice and count it joy to bear her cross for Christ. She often spoke of God's goodness to her, and wanted us to sing, "Must Jesus bear the cross alone." She bade farewell to her loved ones without a murmur, and asked that we meet her in the better world; leaving for our inheritance a bright testimony and a good example of faith and trust in God.

Mother was born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Albritton on April 15, 1859; and was joined in marriage to P. J. Carlton, Sept. 21, 1883. To this union were born seven children, six of whom still live. She joined the Baptist Church at about the age of twenty and later transferred her membership to the Methodist Church with the rest of the family.

So closes the earthly pilgrimage of a faithful wife, a loving mother, a fond grandmother, and a faithful Christian.

NICHOLS.

Sarah Emeline Nichols was born June 22, 1866. Was married to T. C. Nichols, Jan. 1, 1899. She professed religion at the age of 18 years and lived a true Christian life until March 31, 1931, at 8 P. M., when she went to Christ whom she loved and served with all her heart. She was sick only a few days, but bore her suffering with great patience. She was ever ready to speak kind words to her friends as they stood by her bedside and tried to comfort her. She said she was ready to go. She left a host of friends and relatives, and will be missed by all who knew her, for her's was a character that is not easily forgotten. She leaves an aged husband.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is still;
A place is vacant in our heart
That never can be filled.
But as she could no longer stay,
To cheer us with her love,
We hope to meet her some sweet day
In that beautiful home above.
Her Husband.

Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he will strengthen thine heart: wait, I say on the Lord. Psal. 27:14.

LANDER COLLEGE.

After years of successful work at Williamston the college accepted a generous offer from Greenwood and moved to that city in 1904. Dr. Lander's death called his son-in-law, Dr. John O. Willson, to the presidency. He greatly enlarged the college. Upon Dr. Willson's death in 1923 the enlargement of the college continued under Dr. B. Rhett Turnipseed. In 1927 Dr. R. H. Bennett was called to the presidency and the progress of the college has steadily continued. Valuable additions have been made to the faculty. More than the necessary half million dollars endowment required for standard colleges has been paid in or pledged. The buildings have been renovated and refurnished, the campus beautified and enlarged by the purchase of 45 acres, making a total of 75, and the number of students has steadily increased, reaching last year the high water mark of 401.

The standard of the college and its excellent work is widely recognized. A number of graduate Lander students are enjoying university fellowships. The university faculties speak in high terms of the preparation of Lander students.

The new courses of study in methods, classes in the different departments and teacher training in the department of education, and other normal courses in the theory and observation of teaching are all widely in demand. It has been found necessary to limit the number of students taking these courses.

The college continues its prominent place in supplying many teachers. Although many college graduates are without position this year, nearly the entire Lander graduating class of last June have secured places, possibly all that wished them. The college is close to the head of the list of all the colleges in the state in the number of teachers furnished by it to the state.

Lander is a college with a character. Its fine home and Christian atmosphere is widely known. The term "Lander girl" stands for gracious Christian womanhood.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson XII.—June 21, 1931.

Subject.—The Sin of Causing Others to Stumble. Romans 14:23-23.

Golden Text.—It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth. Rom. 14:21.

Time.—A. D. 58.

Place.—Corinth.

Introduction.—It was a delicate task to deal with the church at Rome in Paul's day. Like many other churches of that particular period, that church was composed of converts from both Judaism and heathen religions. Both classes had their peculiar tendencies and prejudices. Those coming out of paganism had a tendency to respect meats that had been offered to idols in sacrifice; while the converted Jews found it difficult to believe that one could be a Christian and eat the flesh of animals that the Jewish law termed unclean. Each class must have charity for the other, and be careful to eat nothing that would lead a weak brother to sin against his conscience. If the Jew could eat meat that had been offered to an idol, knowing that the idol was nothing, and do his soul no harm, the same might not be true with his Gentile brother. Therefore, by eating such meat the Jew must not lead his Gentile brother to eat of it against his conscience. Nor must the Gentile brother judge harshly his Jewish brother if he refused to eat the flesh of what he called unclean animals.

This lesson is of broad application, and needs to be applied to many things in modern conduct. It is termed a Temperance Lesson; but the Apostle Paul was hardly thinking of the subject of intoxicating liquors when he wrote it. Still, it may be applied to such drinks, and to many other things. Most of these will come out clearly in our criticism of the text, and need not be discussed as a separate introduction.

Comments on the Lesson.

13. Let us not therefore judge one another any more.—Paul approaches this wise admonition with due caution. He was wise in matters of psychology. The first verse in the chapter is a sort of opening wedge to the strictures of the lesson: "Him that is weak in the faith, receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations." It may be well to discuss certain delicate biblical questions, but not before ignorant, weak brethren, lest they fail to understand and be led astray. The fourth verse is good: "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth." We may not always understand our brethren; but if they are true to God, he will handle them. It is none of our business.

The apostle was using great wisdom when he said: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." They were having trouble concerning the sabbath and other so-called holy days. The Jews said that they should observe the seventh day of the week; but from the fact that Christ rose from the dead on the first day of the week, the Christians were observing that day. Paul wants them to know that the mere matter of a day amounts to nothing. From this he argues for liberty in eating meats.

Here is a passage that is nearly always misused: "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." Most of us refer that to our influence over one another; but the eighth verse tells us that, "whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord." Paul is placing human responsibility upon the very highest ground. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Therefore, as we read in the first verse of our lesson, let "no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way."

14. I know that there is nothing unclean of itself.—Paul seems to have been completely delivered from the bindings of the Mosaic law concerning the flesh of unclean animals, as soon as he became a Christian; but Peter had some trouble in that regard. But, notwithstanding Paul's clear knowledge of the subject, he displays charity for others who are weak. Here is a principle that must stand forever: "To him that esteemeth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." One must not do violence to his own conscience; nor must another force him to do so. There can scarcely be a greater national sin than to force one into war, and make him kill men against his own conscience. Truly, one had better suffer himself to be shot than to be thus driven into battle against his fellow-men. Certainly God will require his blood at the hands of the nation that commits this crime.

15. If thy brother be grieved with thy meat.—The word grieved here is very strong. Judged by the context, it seems to indicate that the weak brother is being led astray by one's eating certain questionable foods that had been sacrificed to idols. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.—May I broaden the scope of the text just a little? Will you preachers and laymen who boast of your liberty to smoke and chew tobacco, look into the faces of the little boys whom you are leading into the cigarette habit and on to final damnation? The great JUDGMENT DAY is coming; and you must face the issue at that bar. May God have mercy on you. No one can stop his influence over others; but he can so live as to make his influence a blessing and not a curse.

16. Let not your good be evil spoken of.—If you are a good man, so conduct yourself that others will have confidence in you.

17. The Kingdom of God.—Some are having trouble about this word kingdom. Remember that it is used in several different senses in the Bible, and maybe you will have less trouble. The word sleep is sometimes used in the sense of death in the Bible; and some who are too narrow to see that fact are troubled, and are giving others trouble about it. I suppose the word kingdom in this text means about all that pertains to the salvation of our souls. Salvation does not consist in what one eats; but he may be a good Christian and eat beef, mutton, pork, venison, or python flesh. When men are saved from sin, they are righteous in heart and life, are at peace with God and man, and have joy in the Holy Ghost. If they are thus, they may live on locusts and wild honey, and go to heaven when they are done with this world.

19. This verse is simply splendid. I think it means about this: Quit fussing about little things; but agree on things that are essential to salvation. That does not mean that the church is to do away with her creeds; but it does mean that we are to quit fussing about such minor matters as the mode of baptism and the keeping of Saturday for Sunday—and a lot of other quibbles.

20. For meat destroy not the work of God.—The apostle is dealing especially with the question of food; but I judge it is perfectly justifiable for one to apply his teaching to all the affairs of life. Maybe we can get a clear interpretation of the teaching if we turn upon it the light of 1 Cor. 10:31: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." If one lives by that rule, he can never go wrong, unless his head is wrong. Religion and good sense should guide one. All things are pure.—Do not lose sight of the fact that Paul is writing about food. He is trying to break down the old Jewish law that considered certain kinds of meat pure and certain kinds impure—ceremonially unclean. That old rule had passed away forever. One must follow an enlightened conscience.

21. Study this verse carefully. Weigh its teachings, and apply it to your life. If one's indulgence in any questionable thing causes his brother, his fellow man, to stumble, or fall into sin, or to become spiritually weak, he must refrain from that thing. For this reason many conscientious Christians dare not attend moving picture shows; and they do right. They are shunning the very appearance of evil, lest their influence should do harm to weak souls. One might take a drink of wine, and receive no personal injury; but his act might lead some weak brother into drunkenness, as it has often done. To put it plainly, I am my brother's keeper, and must answer to God for my influence upon him.

22. Hast thou faith?—I think we shall do better if we take the Revised Version here. It is not a question in that version; but rendered thus: "The faith which thou hast, have thou to thyself before God." That is a literal translation from the Greek. Paul does not question one's having faith in God, but makes it a personal matter. The next clause is good. If one knows he is right, and acts in accord with his enlightened conscience, he does not condemn himself for what he does.

23. He that doubteth is damned if he eat.—I am persuaded that the word damned is too strong here. It should be condemned. The apostle, if I understand him, is trying to say that it is wrong to engage in any sort of questionable conduct. It is equivalent to the command to shun all appearance of evil. In any course of conduct, if a question mark arises as to the rightness of it, one must stop, or meet trouble.

This is a great lesson. I have found no little difficulty in writing these notes, fearing that I might injure some weak soul, and thereby do exactly what the apostle is warning me not to do. Now I say with him: "Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind."

Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul. O my God, I trust in Thee. Psalm 25:1-2.

"A NEW APPROACH TO CHRISTIAN UNITY." By Charles Ewing Brown, D.D. The Gospel Trumpet Co. 205 pages. $1.25, plus postage.

If interested in this important subject here is a book worth reading. The author makes a real contribution. The book is correctly named. The approach is not only new but sane and one that has in it a tremendous appeal. In my judgment this work will speed up the day of the coming of the unity for which Christ prayed. In my day the Christian world has moved a long way toward Christian unity, and while there is still a long road ahead God's people are surely, if slowly moving in the right direction. Our author exhibits that he is both a student and a thinker. His basis of union the New Testament without addition or subtraction will ultimately carry the day.

Gladly do I own that book has made a real contribution to my life as a minister. The subject so vital to our Lord has new interest for his humble follower. Part of the ground the author covers was, to this reviewer, new and needs to be read again before either agreeing or dissenting; but on the whole his positions are invulnerable.

It is to be hoped the book may have the very large reading it merits. The subject has a first place in the heart of our Lord and the author treats it in a way that will help all who desire to see Christ's prayer for unity answered. If any buy and read this book because of what is here said, this reviewer will have accomplished his purpose.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Collier Street Mission in Pittsburgh, Pa., has recently had a good meeting under the leadership of Rev. Samuel Thomas, converted Jew. Difficulties which had hitherto hindered the work, were removed, and the work established on a firm basis. Those who have been praying for this work will be glad to know that God has visited the place.

Rev. James V. Reid, 2912 Meadowbrook Drive, Ft. Worth, Texas, had planned to go to South America before June 1, but due to some delays in preparations he will not be able to get away before the first of September. For this reason he will have July and August open to assist in revival or camp meeting work. Bro. Reid has a positive, effectual, evangelistic message, which, combined with his outstanding musical ability, gives his work a strong appeal, especially to young people.

F. R. Barnes: "Rev. Warren G. McIntire, of Wilmore, Ky., conducted a meeting in Clarksburg, Md., from April 13 to May 3, the two Methodist churches uniting. Doubt, unbelief and opposition made the meeting difficult, with meager results for the Kingdom, nevertheless, twenty-five souls sought and found pardon for their sins, several were reclaimed, six believers sanctified, while others were strengthened and helped. All who received the Word found that Brother McIntire's messages brought them light and understanding, unknown previously. We are grateful for this man of God, and for his fearless preaching which has better equipped us for service here, and a preparation to meet Him 'over there.'"

Guy W. Green, layman of Kansas City, Mo., held special services for the 43rd Avenue Presbyterian Church of Gary, Ind., May 19 to 27. More than forty persons made profession of faith in Christ and will be received into fellowship at a specially arranged ceremony in June. Many of them are parents who are coming with their children. The fact that "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform" was never more strikingly illustrated than during this meeting. Mr. Green spoke on "Loyalty" at a men's dinner. Two men who heard the address told a third, who was not present, about it. This third man, a prominent citizen, whom the church long has endeavored to interest in Christ and his work, thought over what he had heard, made decision, and will be received with the big class of converts.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

M. S.: "Pray that my mother's knee may be healed of rheumatism."

Please to pray for my family to be saved. Pray for an orphan girl who needs the Lord.

Mrs. A. S.: "Pray for my husband who is dangerously ill. There is no hope except from the Lord. He believes in divine healing and has faith to believe the Lord will undertake for him."

PAUL'S SUPERLATIVE.

Baptist Observer says of Dr. M. P. Hunt's book, "Paul's Superlative": "This new book sure burns with fervor and glows with useful, helpful sermons, and each sermon is a soul-stirring message." The book sells for $1.00 and may be purchased from The Pentecostal Publishing Co., Louisville, Ky.

And sorrow o'er thee roll;
Fear not—dear child of God—be true
And keep thy faith secure,
For God is nigh, his love for thee
Forever doth endure.

No storm so wild, nor sorrow deep,
No anguish of the soul,
Can come into thy daily life
But his power can control.
No sin can make the soul so ill,
That his blood cannot cure;
And thou canst never go beyond
His love which doth endure.

Then weary child 'mid sorrows great,
Beset by pain and woe;
Who in life's furious conflict,
Must meet with angry foe;
Go forth to valiant warfare
With faith steadfast and sure;
Assured that thou canst conquer
Through him who doth endure.

Then when life's toils are over,
And time shall pass away,
When God shall call his children
Into Eternal Day.
There, free from sin and sorrow,
With soul serene and pure,
Thy praise shall be forever
To Him who doth endure.

THRIFT.

Lora S. LaMance.

Thrift is looking ahead. Thrift is laying something by for a rainy day. It is spending a little less than one makes, and putting by the balance as an investment or capital. It is learning not to spend money on trifles.

Bankers have a saying that it is the first thousand dollars that counts. It is. It is the hardest to save. One has the most temptation to spend his money for eats, for candy and soft drinks, neckties and hats, taxi rides and pretty nothings, picture shows every night and all that sort of thing. Once get the habit of putting something by, and it becomes easier.

Thrift means to not waste. It is wasteful to put every dollar into clothes. Get a few really good clothes, look neat and keep neat. That does not mean extravagance.

The two most wasteful habits of Americans are drinking and smoking. Instead of spending money for tobacco that hurts the nerves and heart, how much wiser it would be to put that money into good books and improve the mind.

Not one good word can be said for drinking. Alcohol is a poison that hurts body, brain and soul. It is impossible to use wine, beer or whiskey without injury. Experience proves this, science proves it, and industry acknowledges it, when trade after trade will not allow a drinking man to be employed in factories or round-houses.

It is no longer considered "smart" to break Uncle Sam's laws by drinking. The coming generation will obey the laws and save their money at the same time.

IN MEMORIAM.

I saw the old warrior in his casket, his hair, made white by the snows of many winters; he was resting now after a thousand battles in which he had been in deadly combat with whiskey and the saloon, gambling and the underworld; infidelity and its propagandists; Rome and its Popes; Antichrist and the Beasts; Evolution and its godlessness; modernism and its skepticism; sin and its hellishness.

I went to the grave after the crowd had gone home and saw them covering up the casket with mother earth and they worked hard, but I said there lies a man whose soul you cannot bury, a casket cannot contain him, nor can six feet of earth hold him. By ten thousand sermons he has preached, by the songs and hymns he has written and sung throughout the nation, and which are being sung around the globe;

by his revivals in which thousands have been won to Christ; by the books which he has written and which have been read throughout the world; by his preaching sons, and the sons and daughters of others whom he helped train to preach and evangelize in the homeland and on the foreign fields; by his testimony for the Word of God, the cleansing blood, the sanctifying power, the glorious hope of the Second Advent, and the bliss of immortality, the soul of L. L. Pickett marches on.

Adopted son of Kentucky soil, he lived to bless her with his prayers and protect her with his Gospel Sword! Son of Methodism, he bowed at her altars and swore eternal allegiance to her doctrines. Preacher, Evangelist, Singer, Writer, Warrior—L. L. Pickett preaches on, sings on, prays on and fights on, though he has lately changed from the church militant to the Church Triumphant.

PREACH THE TRUTH IN LOVE.

By The Editor.

The inactive man is quite likely to be a croaker. He has nothing to do but to find fault with those who are doing something, and at faultfinding he becomes an expert. The man whose heart is full of eager love, and whose hands are full of earnest work for Christ and his fellow-men, has no time to devote to the accusation and abuse of his brethren.

Some men seem to be unable to take a charitable view of their fellows or conditions and people about them. If they preach on holiness, it is more of a denunciation of those who do not agree with their views, than it is a glorious setting forth of Christ as the great Savior from all sin, and the charm and blessing of the experience of sanctification. If they preach on missions, it is not so much an exposition of the teachings of Christ on the subject, or information with regard to the field, and the great progress of the work, and the best methods to be used in helping it forward, as it is a tirade against the people because they have not done more for the cause of missions.

The man preaches best and with greatest results, who has a faith in Jesus and his power, which gives him a spirit with something of hopeful cheerfulness in it. His Lord is so able to save, his Lord is so willing to save, his Lord is so mighty to save to the uttermost, that he delights to preach about his Lord; he glories in Jesus and in his power to save, and his heart is warm and his face aglow with expectation of gracious manifestations from God. He believes for victory and, as a result, has victory and feels in his heart the power and joy of victory.

Let us cheer up, undertake great things, believe for great things, and go forward with great zeal. I have noticed that it is men of small faith and little activity who are prone to doubt, and scold, and accuse. The soul-winner is rejoicing over the great blessings that have come, and his faith is strong for greater blessings and he goes onward rejoicing on his way with holy zeal and glowing faith. The need about him is so great, God's resources are so unlimited, and his faith is so full, that he can but expect to see gracious results and so he goes forward seeing them. Nothing discourages him. What if there are devils? Jesus can cast them out. What if there are great sinners? Many a poor fallen creature has been mightily saved and made a glorious witness for Jesus. What if the congregations are small and the tent leaks, and the wind blows the lights out, and the wicked laugh? His faith claims the salvation of a barefoot boy and he prays with a holy glow in his heart that that boy may become a minister of the gospel, or missionary to some foreign field and he doubts not but that one convert will bring a multitude to Jesus.

Oh for a great, glowing, triumphant faith; for a heart on fire with love, for a zeal that

OUR FIFTY CENT PROPOSITION!

From July first issue, to January first, we will send THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD to new subscribers for FIFTY CENTS. It is to be hoped that no old subscriber will take advantage of this generous offer. This proposition is for new subscribers, only. We have found this a good way of introducing THE HERALD into new homes, and that those who get acquainted with it by this means often become permanent members of THE HERALD Family.

This also affords an opportunity to those who have found THE HERALD a great blessing, to send it to others. They frequently send us long lists of names and addresses, with the fifty cents to cover the expense of the paper going to preachers, relatives and friends for six months, for this very small sum.

There is no question but we have reached a crisis in the history of this nation. The forces of evil are many and are united as never before for the breaking down of law, for the sowing of the seeds of all evil, for drunkenness, profanity, infidelity, riot and wickedness of every sort.

The first issue in July will be a strong Prohibition Number. It will be an array of important facts that should be broadcasted throughout the land. We hope that the friends of Prohibition will order large numbers of these papers to sow down in their community. Let those who love God and humanity and stand for sobriety, peace and happiness among men, and for full salvation through faith in Christ, take advantage of this proposition and plant THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in thousands of new homes. If you wish sample copies or suggestions of help in this work, write to J. H. Pritchard, our business manager, and he will be glad to give you any information and assistance.

Faithfully yours,
H. C. Morrison.

cannot be quenched, for a joy that prevails, and teaches other hearts that are hungering and thirsting after righteousness and arouses other souls to press into the holy of holies, that they may find him who can save to the uttermost. Let us fix our hearts on the word of God, and pray and sing until we come to genuinely love our fellows, and believe for them, and expect them to become saved and sanctified, and honored instruments in the hands of God to bring other souls into the household of faith.

The Restoration of Israel to Palestine No. VII.

Praise and bless God that I am living now, and beholding with my own eyes, the fulfillment of prophecies made long before the birth of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It stirs my heart with genuine joy and gratitude to God that right now when many men claiming to be Christians, are attacking the Bible, and seeking to destroy the faith of the people in its inspiration, prophecy is being fulfilled with such accuracy that those of us who believe the blessed Book of eternal truth, can rejoice in the presence of our enemies without a shadow of doubt with regard to the God of the Bible, and the Bible as the word of God.

There never was a time when the Lord's people should give themselves more diligently to the study of the Scriptures, than at the present time. There never was a time when the enemies of God and humanity were more bold and determined in their attack upon the foundations of the Christian faith. The distressing feature of the situation is the fact that a very dangerous brand of infidelity has invaded the church, fortified itself in church schools, has gone boldly into the pulpits of the church, and with pompous pride and insolent sarcasm, hurls its vile skepticism into the faces of God's people.

Go to your Bibles, and to your knees. Rejoice in the Lord; bear your testimony, speak out, and refuse to keep silent. God is moving among men; if only we will study the Book, believe in the Christ, and fellowship with the Holy Ghost, our faith will be unshaken by the attacks of Satan and all of his hosts.

Many years ago, long before the World War, I was reading prophecy, learning something of the work of the Zionist Movement, and preaching on the restoration of Israel to Palestine, and their spiritual awakening, and the marvelous blessing pledged to be poured out upon them. A friend of mine, eloquent preacher, and noted Doctor of Divinity, looked upon me with pity. In many sermons he told how impossible it was for Israel to be restored. Pointed to the fact of the lack of water, and insisted that there was nothing left in Palestine to support a people, or make the habitation of any number of people a possibility. His ridicule of me was not the least embarrassing. When God says a thing I let it go at that. It is not a question with me how he will keep his promise. All I wish to know is his promise. I will trust him to do the keeping.

When my friend to whom I refer was rejoicing in the barrenness of Palestine, and the lack of water in Jerusalem, and the many other hindrances to the fulfillment of prophecy with reference to the restoration of the Jews, he had no idea of the billions of wealth lying in the bed of the Dead Sea. He did not know that the River Jordan would be dammed and be furnishing light, heat and power to the people. I think at the present he would be a bit more cautious in his eloquent statements about the impossibility of the restoration of Israel. He had much to say about Turkish possession. How little he knew how soon the Turks would march out of Jerusalem and Palestine.

We shall not continue these chapters, but we trust that the readers of this paper will make a careful study of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, with reference to the dispersion and restoration of Israel, and be constantly on the watch for our blessed Lord and Saviour as he appears again and again in prophecy. In conclusion we shall give you a beautiful quotation from Jeremiah, 32nd chapter, verses 37 to 44:

Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in

A BASKET OF FRAGMENTS.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

Let me in this article pass on to my readers a few things which may illustrate, enforce and magnify some of the great truths of Redemption.

I. THE JUDGMENT.

The late Dr. Daniel Curry of New York, was well known as a man of clear and strong mental powers which had been subjected to a lifelong course of severe discipline. It would have been difficult to find any one less inclined to accept alleged facts which seemed to partake of a supernatural or preternatural character. He was conservative in his religious views, and very guarded in his expression of religious experience. At an advanced age he was prostrated by a serious illness, and lay upon what he knew was to be his dying bed. Some days before his death the late Dr. Sanford Hunt called to see him, and in the course of conversation Dr. Curry mentioned to him that he had been greatly strengthened and comforted by a remarkable dream, which he proceeded to relate without further comment, beyond the fact that it had afforded him help and comfort to an extent which he could find no words to describe.

It seems in his dream he had found himself as one who had awakened after death in the world of spirits, and that he was nearing the gate of heaven in hope of gaining admittance and finding there his eternal home. On nearing the gate a very grave and solemn personage, in the character of keeper of the gate, appeared before him and began to ask him a series of searching questions:

"Who are you, and why are you here?"

"I am Daniel Curry of New York, and have come here hoping to gain admission to heaven."

"Have you always been a good man?"

"No, I must confess that I have not; I have committed many sins."

"Are you a Christian?"

"Yes, I trust that I am."

"Have you been faithful to God ever since you first professed to be a Christian?"

"No, I cannot say that I have; I have too often been unfaithful."

Other searching questions followed, all bringing out more clearly the failure of the applicant, until overwhelmed with utter shame he hung his head with a deep feeling of sorrow and remorse. His case seemed hopeless. His record had been one of sin and failure, and he could enter no plea in his own behalf. At this supreme moment a radiant form of another Personage appeared beside the keeper of the gate, whom the despairing child of earth at once recognized as no other than the glorified Savior of sinners. "I have undertaken for Daniel Curry," spake the mighty Friend of sinners, and at once the keeper stood aside, the gate opened before him, and heaven was his to enter and enjoy. At this point the sleeper awoke and found himself in a state of profound emotion, but so strengthened and filled with comfort, and so assured of the divine presence and help, that he could find no words when relating the incident to express his feelings.

II. THE RIVER OF SALVATION.

When Sir Samuel Baker was making explorations in the region of the Nile, he chanced to pitch his tent one evening upon the dry sands of a dry bed of a large river. The heat was stifling, and the surrounding hills and valleys looked as if no drop of water had fallen for years. About midnight, Sir Samuel was aroused from sleep by his Arab guard calling out in great alarm, "The river! the river!" He sprang from his cot, and hearing the rush and roar of an approaching

COUNSELS ON HOLINESS.

By Wesley.

"How many," says Wesley, "take holiness and harmlessness to mean one and the same thing! whereas, were a man as harmless as a post he might be as far from holiness as heaven from earth."

This perfection is not one which renders the atonement no longer necessary, as if the soul had once for all received the full advantage of the cleansing blood; but it is rather the perfection of faith in the perpetual efficacy of the atonement; a habit of repose upon it; an ever "coming" to Christ as "to the living stone;" a "living and believing;" so as to realize the apostolic experience, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself for me;" and thus singing from a pure heart "Every moment, Lord, I have The merit of Thy death."

John Wesley, on being asked what should be done to keep Methodism alive after his death, replied—

"Preach our doctrines, inculcate experience, urge practice, enforce discipline. If you preach doctrines only, the people will be antinomians; if you preach experience only, they will become enthusiasts—(by this he meant fanatic); if you preach practice only, they will become Pharisees; and if you preach all these and do not enforce discipline, Methodism will be like a highly cultivated garden, without a fence, exposed to the ravages of the wild boar of the forest."

flood, knew that the rains had suddenly burst upon the mountains, and that the dry sands would soon be swept by a rushing torrent. He had barely time to escape before the flood was upon him. Having gained a safe place on the bank of the stream, he again lay down to sleep, and when he awoke next morning, he found that the whole scene had been transformed. The birds were singing in the trees overhead, the people were rejoicing in their huts and fields, and a broad river twelve or fifteen feet deep was flowing quietly in its banks. The Arab peasants began at once to take advantage of the coming of the river, by opening channels along which the water might flow into their little fields. No one among them seemed depressed by the thought that the river might not stay. It had come for the whole season. They trusted the ordinary course of nature without a moment's hesitation. They rejoiced in the presence of the river, and yet each one knew that to make its waters available for his own little field, it would be necessary for him to open a channel in which the water might flow from the river to the field for which it was needed.

III. SINAI AND CALVARY.

On Sabbath, 12th, January, 1840, Dr. Alexander Duff, the eminent missionary, addressed a beautiful letter from "the top of Mount Sinai," to his little daughter in Edinburgh. He was up before sunrise on that "naked granite peak," afar in the lonely desert; but he was the same prayerful and loving father still. On his knees he prayed that the law might be his schoolmaster, to lead him to Christ, and in his letter he added—"Oh may we all find refuge from the thunders of Sinai beneath the shadow of the Cross of Calvary!"

Dr. Duff did not wait long on the top of Sinai, however—a day, not more. He only made a visit there, not a dwelling-place. It would have been impossible for him to have remained long there. He could not have lived. "To him," says his biographer, Dr. George Smith, "the desolation and the barrenness around marked the blighting influences of sin, the hopeless state of man under the law which condemns." In desire he turned to the mount in Jerusalem, where the great Sacrifice for sin was offered, and Heaven was opened for the Pentecostal effusion which is yet to bless the whole earth."

IV. A PRAYER HYMN.

"Come, Wisdom, Power, and Grace Divine,
Come, Jesus, in Thy name to join

A happy chosen band;
Who fain would prove Thine utmost will,
And all Thy righteous laws fulfil,
In love's benign command.

"Whate'er Thou dost on one bestow,
Let each the double blessing know;
Let each the common burden bear;
In comforts and in griefs agree;
And wrestle for his friends with Thee,
In all the omnipotence of prayer."

V. SOUND DOCTRINE.

Joseph Cook once said: "Wherever I find a man holding three specific doctrines I expect a revival through his labors. What are these doctrines? The necessity of immediate repentance, the atonement as held by the evangelical churches, the supreme religious authority of God's word. Whenever I find a man in whom these doctrines are not a creed, but a life, I usually find a revival going on in a slow or swift way. I solemnly believe that it is the divine will that we should teach the necessity of the new birth in this life, the necessity of the atonement in its biblical form, and the authority of God's word in precisely the terms and tone in which the Bible teaches these truths. Wherever I find a man doubtful on either of these highest matters I usually find a torpid church, or one that may, perhaps, be drifting into disintegration or into some foppish liberalism adapted to the wants of an easy-going age. Such an organization may be called a church, indeed, but it is really little more than a clubhouse."

VI. PRAYER AND A REVIVAL.

We need more of the old faith that will bring us to our knees in mighty faith prevailing intercessory prayer. Bishop Fowler, many years ago, told the following story:

"Cooper Crews was pastor of our church at Springfield, Ill. He awoke one summer to find his church declining. He was sore distressed and prayed much, fearing he had outlived his call. One summer Sabbath night, in the midst of the harvest time, he announced to a little congregation a prayer meeting for Monday morning at sunrise, for the revival of God's work and the conversion of sinners. Then he gave that night to agonizing prayer. A little before daylight his burden left him, and he fell asleep on a lounge in his study. He awoke to see the first beams of the morning sun. Looking down into the churchyard, he saw that it was full of people, and the church was full of people, and the street was full of teams. Men as far as nine miles away from the church had awakened in the middle of the night alarmed, fearing that the judgment day was coming, took their teams, and drove to the church with their families, to see if they could find God and mercy. Brother Crews said, 'We went into the church and opened the prayer meeting; we closed it that night at eleven o'clock with twenty-eight conversions, as the beginning of a sweeping revival.' Brothers, if we will consecrate ourselves to God without reserve, and cling to God, taking no denial, he will honor our faith and bless us."

For less than 1c a week you can get some of the most spiritual helps on the Sunday School Lesson. It is Arnold's Commentary, which we are closing out at 50c.

The springs of vital happiness demand no pilgrimage. The sad at heart need not go on uncertain journeys. The springs are in God the Father, and therefore they are as near as any one of God's children.—J. H. Jowett.

THIS, THAT, AND THE OTHER.

Thomas C. Henderson.

THE TRUE EVANGELIST IS A TRUE MISSIONARY,

WHETHER he labors in America or Timbuctoo. He is sent of God on a special mission—to convert the unconverted and to build up the Kingdom of God. The home missionary organizations of our churches do not list the evangelist as one of their workers, though he is the truest of the true home mission workers. Funds raised for home missions are not given to support the evangelist, and he has not asked for it, but certain it is that money could not be better invested than in the type of missionary work which is done in the revival effort which aims at the saving of the lost. The evangelist himself has well-nigh lost this idea of his own work. Many evangelists have become nothing more than denominational propagandists or the agents of a sect or movement, their first task must not be a sectarian one, though they are usually appreciated in proportion as they serve denominational ends. The true evangel of Christ must be superdenominational, indeed, almost non-denominational. His passion must be to proclaim the whole Gospel of Christ and to save men. For a generation past the evangelists have found enough work to keep them busy by accepting calls from churches, missions and other regularly organized meetings. This has been convenient for both the evangelist and those who wanted his services, but it has become a snare to the evangelist. He has come to depend on these churches, missions, camp meetings and the like for his work, and of course has molded his ministry to serve their program and tastes. Instead of being an unfettered voice of God, he is often nothing more than the voice of the church or movement with which he is connected. He preaches to please his church or movement, when perhaps he should be the voice of God against the errors of his crowd. Many evangelists are obsessed with the idea that to be "safe and sane" in the eyes of church leaders is the one thing most greatly to be desired. They aim at drawing the largest crowds possible and at doing nothing to disturb the church which employs them. Popularity has ensnared them. However there have been many evangelists who have lived, labored and sacrificed at the call of God, totally disregarding the applause or the criticisms of all. They have made no bid for patronage from high or low. They have kept alive the rugged evangelistic truths of the Bible. They have been the champions of Christian spirituality. Sometimes they have been called fanatics by the churches, and the world has thought them fools. At the vision of needy places they have gone without hesitancy. Their families shared their sacrifices as they went about preaching, praying, pleading with and for men for whom Christ died. If churches called them, they labored with them; but in halls, schoolhouses, tents, on the streets, on the commons, or in the forests they burned themselves out for the salvation of men. They are the truest of true home missionaries. When will the churches see that it is a sin to tie up millions of precious dollars in so-called sacred architecture and in unused equipment which should be used in direct evangelistic work?

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Is reaping a sickening harvest of moral wreckage and of lost moral leadership as a result of her action of a few years ago in purging her discipline of the ban on dancing, card-playing, theater-going and such things. That action was taken to please the worldly folk in the church and it was a direct insult to the pious and spiritual people. The world at large interpreted that action as a moral retreat by the church, and the worldlings in the church interpreted it as a doing away with the church's prohibition and condemnation of these sins, and they are going the limit in their indulgence in them. It is perfect nonsense for Methodist preachers to pretend that the position of the church is the same as formerly on these sins. Nobody thinks that the Methodist Church is against these popular sins. The silence of her Bishops, District Superintendents and preachers with the common practice of her lay leaders demonstrates that she is sold out to the world. Some few preachers lift their voice against these sins, but they are given the lie by those who write for the church press, and especially by those who lead the young people of the church. Card-playing, dancing, theater-going and cigarette-smoking are vastly more indulged in by Methodists than are prayer meetings. Who dare deny that? Not in ten years have I read one line against the popular sins of the day from the pen of any one or all of the Bishops. Indeed, some of the Bishops tacitly endorse these destructive evils, and rumor has it that some Bishops and many preachers indulge in them. The Epworth League pledge is a sad joke with the youth of the church. Both faculty and students of Methodist Universities indulge without restraint in public dancing, card playing, cigarette smoking and theater going. Why in the world should we give our money to support church schools which directly contribute to the moral decay of our youth, when there is a Taylor, an Asbury, a Fletcher, a Greenville, a Marion, an Olivet and other such schools which are truly Christian? Methodism and her leaders will have to face a very solemn judgment day about all this. There are ruined young women, rotted young men, shadowed homes and lives wrecked by shame and moral tragedy within the borders of the church traceable directly to the laxness and silence of the church in regard to social evil. The vigor and valor of the workers in the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church is not matched by the moral clarity and vigor of the body of the church, and unless a very radical revival comes to the church it will be useless to look to Methodism for any pronounced moral and spiritual leadership. Methodism greatly needs to bring back her mourners' bench.

ONE MINUTE SERMON.

BETHEL COOK.

PERSECUTION.

Text.—"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5:10.

In the early Christian Church persecution was rife. Men and women were subjected to all kinds of tortures and afflictions, because of their stand for righteousness and Christ.

Men stood out against unrighteousness and gladly suffered for Christ's sake and the Master called them blessed.

We do not hear of persecution in these days. And we may well ask the reason.

Is it because the world has changed in its attitude toward aggressive Christians, or is it because Christians are no longer aggressive against sin?

I am inclined to believe the latter is true. Better be blessed than complacently safe.

The best investment you ever made—Arnold's Commentary on the S. S. Lesson for 50c. Think of it, less than 1c per week for the best S. S. Lesson material on the market!

Hints For Camp Meeting Goers.

E. E. SHELHAMER.

THE writer does not pretend to know all that is to be known, but after attending camp meetings for more than forty years, he has learned a few things that may be helpful to others who attend.

1. Get ready. Begin days or even weeks beforehand to lay aside just such things as you will need—rubbers, umbrella, heavy coat, fan, soap, wash-cloths, hand mirror, writing paper, pins, pencils, your Bible, and various utensils for camping, should you do your own cooking.

2. Prepare for the best and for the worst. As soon as you arrive, dig a ditch around your tent and put your suitcases, trunks, or bed on sticks or stones so as to keep them dry underneath in case of a sudden rain. Let plenty of sunshine and fresh air in, so that nothing molds or mildews. Stretch a rope or wire high up from pole to pole in your tent where you can hang clothing.

3. Plan to "stay through." Do not let the cares or cattle at home get you uneasy. Someone will care for these things when you are dead. Suppose you practice death for ten days and die out to all earthly things. Do not let the devil or anyone run you off the ground before you receive a great uplift. Do not look back—remember Lot's wife.

4. Do not get tempted. It may be that your tent or room is right in the sun or near a crying baby. Now be careful! Don't complain and threaten to leave. God may have permitted this to develop patience in you, or in a special way make you a blessing—an inspiration to some struggling soul. If so, the trials will be worth infinitely more than if everything were according to your liking. Perhaps a crisis has come in your life unexpectedly and you cannot afford to fail.

5. Enter quickly into the spirit of the meeting. Do not sit back, but come up near the front; sing, and pray, with all your might and thus head off discouragement and homesickness. Do not allow yourself to get tried if you are not asked to sing a solo or lead meetings, but pitch in and assist those who are already in the lead. It will not be long till they will see your worth, if you have any worth seeing.

6. Do not nurse your likes or dislikes. There are all kinds of people at a camp meeting, yourself included. It is barely possible that the preacher or pilgrim whose ways you dislike may do you more real good than the one who just suits you; so do not praise one or run down another. If you talk too much you may prejudice a soul against the very one who could help him most.

7. Do not parade or sit around. It is an awful habit to promenade or sit in your doorway and visit or look wise. Better form a prayer band and have stated seasons for reading and praying—only do not interrupt a meeting already in progress. When the altar call is given, do not find an excuse to leave, but be resourceful and invite someone to Jesus. Pitch in and help all you can at the altar. Here is a wide field, for there are not many at it.

8. Do not cast away your confidence. If the preaching is very searching and a flood of new light comes, hold fast to what you have and press forward for more. It is not always best to rush to the altar the first time you get under conviction. Some things can be settled in your room or out in the woods. Of course, if you have acted in such an ugly way as to

THE NATURE OF SIN.

Rev. G. W. Hanners.

Text: "Sin is the transgression of the Law." 1 John 3:4.

IT is evident to most anyone who will take the time to study present conditions, that multitudes of people have lost the consciousness of sin and when this becomes true the dreadful fact of sin becomes more real and apparent in crime, etc. Sin has furnished the biggest problem in the universe, both for God and man. In an effort to discover the nature of sin, we would say that it is not "An error of mortal mind" as some of our friends would have us believe, but it is a dreadful and tragic disease that enters into our heart, spreading uncleanness and death throughout our entire being. Sin does not necessarily mean immorality and crime, which in the minds of many seems to constitute sin. Adam and Eve did not commit immorality or crime in our meaning of those terms, but they were ejected from Paradise. They died as God promised they would and brought suffering and sorrow upon themselves and opened the gates of hell and death. Yet they had been created perfect but fell through disobedience to God's command. Let us then proceed in trying to discover what sin really is, and its nature.

THE NATURE OF SIN.

One of the shortest and best definitions given of sin is found in the text, "Sin is the transgression of the law." It is well for us to remember that God is the great Lawgiver and he gives them in love and mercy, for if we obey his commands, then the result is peace, joy, and life, but if we transgress or break them, then death, sorrow and hell will inevitably follow. Suppose we take Eve as an illustration. God told our first parents that they might freely eat of every tree of the garden but one, and if they ate of that they would surely die. Sometime after that, according to the third chapter of Genesis, the Devil got into conversation with Eve through the serpent and probably said, "This is a beautiful garden. What wonderful fruit you have here! You must greatly enjoy it."

"Yes," said Eve, "we may eat of all the trees but one, but God says if we partake of that, we shall surely die."

The serpent said, "You will not die." The Devil contradicted God, but the Bible declares that he is a liar and the father of it, so it did not harm him to lie to Eve. Furthermore, he told her that instead of dying, it would make her wise and independent, for she would be like God. This appealed to Eve and so she said in spite of what God had said, "I am going to listen to the Devil and partake." So Eve raised the arm of rebellion against God and became an ally to the arch enemy of God and man. Here we see the nature of sin. It is rebellion against God.

In the second place, sin is selfishness. God made us to fellowship with him and find our happiness in him. Transgression disturbs our whole being and in our desires to become independent of God, we become self-centered and all our powers and possessions become instruments of idolatry. Therefore, multitudes refuse to have God in their hearts and homes today because they say they can get along very well without God; their chief law is their own will and desires; they are a god unto themselves. Hence the nature of sin is selfishness.

In the third place, sin is hell in the heart and life. When sin comes to fruition, it produces both death and hell which are inseparable. We see this illustrated toward Christ. Hell inspired the malice in the hearts of the Scribes and Pharisees and they conspired his betrayal and death, and when Jesus gave himself into their hands they inflicted upon him, who was guilty of no sin, every insult and indignity and suffering that the Devil and hell could devise. They spit upon him, reviled him, beat him, drove nails into his feet and thrust a spear into his side. Look on that scene and you see hell manifest on earth. Sin is producing hell on earth now. Look at Russia, for an example; or take the revolt at Joliet prison some weeks ago. Listen to a newspaper account: "The shouting and din had been terrific for two hours. The convicts were like maniacs. They cursed and screamed and ran about like animals." There you have a bird's eye picture of hell on earth and some light on what hell is like. The nature of sin, then, is threefold—rebellion against God, selfishness and hell in the heart.

KINDS OF SIN.

For convenience, let us try to classify sin. God has no such classification. He does not divide them into big sins and little sins, into black lies and white lies, but to him, all sin is a breaking of his law. There is the sin of commission. In this instance, there is the defiant attitude toward God. The sinner with an uplifted fist says, "I will do it anyway, whether it is right or wrong. I will gratify my desires, regardless of the laws of God or man." Suppose we select the law relative to the Sabbath day as an illustration. God has given us six-sevenths of the time to make a living; this would seem to be a liberal provision, but thousands say I want Sunday as a day for pleasure or money-making instead of a day for rest and worship. So in spite of the depression, over eighty thousand people spent their money to see one ball game in New York City some weeks ago. Thousands of churchmembers take the Sabbath as a day for visiting and pleasure instead of worship. This is the sin of commission.

The sin of omission. James declares (4:17) "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Here the sinner is not so defiant as in the first case, but in effect he declares that God demands too much of him. He is like the man in the parable of the talents who, having one talent, went and hid it in the ground, because he said his master was a hard man. But the master commanded that the talent be taken from him and that this servant be cast into outer darkness. We say we know that God wants us to be free from sin but that is impossible in this life. God wants us to win souls, but that is an impossible task. God wants us to have family worship, but we are so busy. We say God is too hard and is requiring the impossible; that we know our abilities better than God and so we do nothing.

Thought-sins. Many sin in thought but do not put it into deed, because they fear the law or penalty. Jesus said one did not have to kill a person to be guilty of murder, but if we hated our brother in our heart, without a cause, we are in God's sight guilty of murder. If we lust after an individual in our heart to commit the sin of adultery, before God, we are guilty.

Sins of the flesh. The Prodigal's sin illustrates the sins of the flesh—adultery, fornication, uncleanness, idolatry, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like. These were the sins of the far country.

Sins of the spirit. The elder son reveals the sins of the spirit. He sinned, though he remained at home. Jealousy, envy, malice, greed, covetousness—all sins of the spirit take more people into far countries than the sins of lust, passion and appetite. Far countries are not always a question of geography, but of attitude. In principle, all these types of sin are one—a breaking of God's law.

REMEDY.

There is but one remedy for sin, that is, the atoning blood of Christ applied to our hearts by faith, when we have repented and confessed our sins. Try to hide or excuse sin and it will be like a fire in our bones, as in the case of David. But blessed is the man whose transgression is forgiven and, whose sin is covered. Arthur Dinsdale never found peace in the Scarlet Letter until after seven years, he confessed and repented of his sins. The Greeks represented the furies as pursuing men and women over land and sea until the guilty repented and confessed and atoned for their sin. The powers of darkness and hell are making every effort to perfect a world rebellion against God at the present time in using those agencies that will mold public opinion and thought to break God's commandments. May I suggest some of these agencies: (1) There is evolution that is being taught in many of our high schools and higher institutions of learning, that teaches our children that they are evolved from a tadpole or monkey or snake instead of a creation of God.

(2) Public Press. It would be within reason to say that at least nine-tenths of our great metropolitan papers, which help to mold public opinion, are anti-Sabbath; that by argument and editorial and ridicule, they are seeking to encourage a continental Sabbath, where sports and all kinds of worldly amusement may thrive unhindered. So it is argued that we live in a new day and the commandments are out of date, so we will have a referendum upon the matter and if any community wants to vote the Sabbath out of business, let them do it. But God cannot be voted out of the universe so easily, and his law relative to the Sabbath has never been abrogated. When men and women persist in voting him out of the world, he sends his flood, as in the days of Noah, and votes the world out; or he sends fire and brimstone and destroys, as in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah.

(3) The movies are a potent agency to mold public opinion. It is estimated that 20 millions attend them daily, in America. When we know of the immorality and crime and sin portrayed on the screen, the ridicule that is heaped upon purity and truth, and the premium that is put upon vice, then we may have some concept as to the extent of the rebellion that is being fomented in human hearts against God and his law.

INFIDELS IN PULPIT.

There are many preachers in large pulpits and positions of power and influence in many denominations who are destroying the faith of the hearers and weakening the influence of the Church by preaching their infidelity relative to the deity of Christ, Virgin birth, sin, immortality, resurrection and hell. If Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll were enemies of God and the church, these men are arch enemies, for they are within the church and yet they are preaching falsehoods almost identical with those preached by infidels outside the church. These agencies cannot help but have a mighty influence in ushering in hell here upon the earth.

There is only one of two possibilities before us—a world-wide revival or world-wide revolution and anarchy. God has been speaking to all the world in earthquake and flood, drought, famine, and depression. It was only a revival that saved England in Wesley's day. God sent Jonah to the wicked city of Nineveh to declare, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed." From the king down to the meanest subject they heeded the warning of Jonah and repented in sackcloth and ashes and God spared Nineveh for more than a hundred years. Every real Christian ought to pray and work for a worldwide revival, for that alone will meet our present difficulties. It will be world anarchy or a world revival. We need to gird on the whole armor of God, for death will soon come when we cannot work.

Ho, For Indian Spring Camp Meeting!

Indian Spring camp meeting begins on Thursday, August 6, closing August 16. Rev. Joseph H. Smith, Rev. John Paul and Rev. H. C. Morrison are the special preachers for the meeting. Charlie D. Tillman will have charge of the singing. Mr. R. F. Burden, the beloved president, will have charge of the platform and carry the banner of full salvation. Let the readers of THE HERALD of Georgia and other southern states who attend this meeting, take notice, begin to pray, mark the date and get ready to come. If there ever was a time when the people should give some time to the culture of their souls, to prayer and the work of salvation, that time is now. May God grant a great blessing to the hosts of Indian Spring the coming camp.

Yours for a gracious victory,
H. C. MORRISON.

Dr. Beverley Carradine.

Dr. Beverley Carradine, the flaming evangelist, eloquent preacher, voluminous author and charming writer, who like a brilliant meteor flashed over the nation a generation ago, passed away at a sanitarium at Western Springs, Illinois, April 23. He had been confined in the sanitarium for about fifteen years. He was one of the greatest preachers that America has ever produced. Thousands of souls in the past generation have bowed at the altar as the result of his pulpit efforts. His name was a household word in the past generation. Many men in the pulpit have excelled in some one excellent quality but he seemed to be so well rounded as to excel in all qualities of excellence. Many of the past generation will read this with sorrowful interest. The Christian Witness treasures his memory as its leading contributor for many years. Thousands will remember him as their spiritual father, who led them into the "Fulness of the blessing." He was 83 years of age at the time of his decease. He was born on the Altermont plantation, near Yazoo, Mississippi, and was a veteran of the Confederate Army having served with the cavalry in the civil war. He was pastor in New Orleans and St. Louis pulpits of the Methodist Church, South. We remember reading his wonderful sermon against the Louisiana Lottery and which had much to do with the suppression of that iniquity. His church at New Orleans sent him on a vacation to Europe, which resulted in his wonderful book written about his trip to Palestine, which will ever remain a classic of Palestine travel. In 1891 he left the pastorate to enter evangelism with its larger field of opportunity, although as pastor his success at St. Louis was a marvel. To know him was to love him and he had many friends. He leaves one son and five daughters. He was buried at Vicksburg, Mississippi.—Christian Witness.

Commencement at Chicago Evangelistic Institute.

The twenty-first year of the history of Chicago Evangelistic Institute was celebrated with the graduation exercises on the evening of June third. It marked the closing of a year which in many respects was one of the best in the history of the institution. Forty-three degrees and diplomas were conferred upon a group of students who are stalwart in character and talent, and who give promise of useful service to the church and the Kingdom of Christ.

The Institute, now a Bible College, is prepared in faculty and equipment to give a four years' course covering majors in Religious Education, Missions and Evangelism. There are chairs of instruction in the more important fields related to the Bible, History, Social Science, Music and other subjects essential to well-rounded training. A pre-seminary course is offered to college graduates leading to the Master of Arts degree in the theological majors. Three colleges were represented among the graduates under this head the present year.

Central Holiness Camp Meeting.

The holiness camp meeting at Wilmore, Ky., will begin one week earlier than usual in order to accommodate Rev. Tilden H. Gaddis and his singers, the Misses Mosers. It will begin Thursday, July 16, and close July 26, covering third and fourth Sundays in July. Brother Gaddis and singers have been employed, Dr. Morrison will assist in the preaching and a number of other ministers will be present to help. Let all the friends who can possibly do so, arrange to be present. The grounds will be in fine condition and we are looking forward to a gracious time.

The binding is an extra fine genuine Levant Morocco, leather lined to edge, silk sewed. A beautiful small grain, stamped in gold, overlapping edges. It is exceedingly flexible.

The paper is a very white, opaque, thin India which makes the Bible thin and light; at the same time, it is very durable.

The type is a large, clear special self-proclaiming that reads like long primer. The names of the books are printed on the corner of the pages, making it easy to turn to them; the chapter numbers are in figures.

The helps are 40,000 center column references with dates at the head of each column, one of the most comprehensive and complete concordances of 160 pages, 80 pages of other valuable helps, including maps in colors.

It is red under gold edges, has the silk headband and marker, thickness is 1 inch, size is 5x7, weight is 22 ozs.

We have been selling Bibles for 30 years and this comes nearer being the most ideal than anything we have offered to our customers. The binding is handsome and durable, and the most pleasing thing about the book is that it lies perfectly flat in the hand anywhere it is opened. This is a book you will fall in love with.

The regular net price of it is $8.50. We have tried for years to have manufactured the finest and most attractive Bible that could be made, and at the same time sell it at the low price of $5.00. There is danger even in preparing for the Lord's coming. The practical preparation consists, first, of a full entering into fellowship with him in our own spiritual life, then getting out of ourselves and living for the help of others and the preparation of the world for his coming.—A. B. Simpson.

HINTS FOR CAMP MEETING GOERS.

cause others to wonder, then it will restore confidence and perhaps be necessary for you to seek in public. If you have not been kind and victorious on every line, then do not pretend or cover up, but make all haste to get right and thus recover lost ground. Remember this, there is a difference between conviction and condemnation. New light will produce conviction, but ought not to produce condemnation. It is when you trifle, excuse yourself, and reject new light, that you get under guilt and condemnation.

9. Bear with the weak and ignorant. If God has given you superior light or grace, do not act important. Do not think you must rant about it and force others to see and do exactly as you do. If your leadings are of God, let him fight your battles and give you an opportunity to deliver your soul. Don't force your way in at a half-open door, but wait the opportune time and then in a humble way speak of God's dealings with you. Sooner or later there will be fruitage in proportion to your eye God's glory.

10. The camp will be just what you and others make it. If you go largely for an outing, or to see and be seen, you will hinder rather than help. But if you follow some of the above suggestions you will return home, perhaps tired and dusty, but with the satisfaction that you grew in grace and were made a blessing to others. God grant that this may be so.

Atheism's Advance Among Students

GEORGE T. B. DAVIS.

A tragic situation exists today in the universities, colleges, and schools of the United States and Canada. During the past few years infidelity, agnosticism and atheism have been making rapid gains in many of our educational institutions, with the result that multitudes of students are wavering in their faith, or have fully renounced their former beliefs.

The student publication of the University of Toronto recently declared that a majority of the students were "practical atheists." A person connected with a large boys college in an Eastern state said a few weeks ago that most of the boys in the school were infidels or atheists. Forty girls in a single society in a leading college in the South declared their disbelief in God. Such conditions are fast becoming typical rather than exceptional.

A certain atheistic association is securing the names of students in colleges and schools, and sending them their pernicious soul-destroying literature. Shall we sit idly by and allow our young men and women and boys and girls—the flower of our lands—to be lured to destruction and not lift a finger in their defense? God forbid!

In the Word of God we read that "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." So in this hour of crisis in the schools of our lands a significant campaign has just been inaugurated to help in checking atheism in the colleges, and in seeking to win the students to a saving knowledge of Christ. The new movement is known as "The Million Testaments Campaign for Students in the United States and Canada." The aim is to present, carefully and prayerfully, a million attractive New Testaments to the students in the universities, colleges and schools of both countries, and to have the Word watered by such a mighty volume of believing prayer, that revivals will sweep through hundreds of schools and colleges, and that thousands and tens of thousands of students will be born again into the Kingdom of God.

In speaking to a group of men in Philadelphia, Rev. R. R. (Bob) Jones, president of the Bob Jones College, deeply stirred them by his portrayal of the infidel and atheistic conditions existing in the schools of the United States at the present time. In the course of his address he told how large numbers of young men and women from godly homes are having their faith in God wrecked by the atmosphere and teaching of many of our schools. He said:

"Some time ago I spoke to a great Southern audience. I pictured the atheistic drift in the educational life of America. A man sat on a front seat and followed my every word with an expression of agony I have rarely seen on a human face.

"When the service was over his pastor said to me, 'Did you see that man who looked like the incarnation of agony? He sat in the front seat today. He is a member of my church. He is one of the truest Christians I have ever known. He is on my board. He had one daughter. She was a beautiful child. She grew up in the Sunday school and church. She finished high school.

"He sent her off to a certain college. At the end of nine months she came home with her faith shattered. She laughed at God and the old-time religion. She broke the hearts of her father and mother. They wept over her. They prayed over her. It availed nothing. At last they chided her. She rushed upstairs, stood in front of a mirror, took a gun and blew out her brains."

FACTS FROM THE FIRING LINE.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."—Hos. 4:6.

Prohibition has wrought miracles of moral, social and economic redemption, but thousands of dries do not know it. Every pastor is urged to reprint the following Fact in the Church Calendar, or read it from the pulpit to offset the destructive wet propaganda which appears in many of the secular newspapers. A new Fact appears in this place in each issue.

"The Massachusetts Bureau of Labor Statistics showed in 1905 (wet) that 84 per cent of all criminals under conviction in correctional institutions of that state owed the conditions which induced the crime to intemperate habits."

"Some time ago in a city in the great Northwest, we were conducting a revival campaign in a large tabernacle. One night I dismissed the crowd and started out of the building. A feeble old man came down the aisle and took me by the hand. 'I would like to speak to you a minute, Brother Bob,' said the old man, with a trembling voice.

"'All right,' I replied, 'I will be glad to talk with you.' He looked at me a minute and then said, 'Let me get where I can prop against the wall, for I am feeble and old and tremble in the knees.' We walked down the aisle toward the door, and he leaned his old stooped shoulders against the wall.

"'Brother Bob,' he began, 'I am an old superannuated minister of the Gospel. I came to the great Northwest as a missionary. It has been nearly sixty years now since I arrived in this country. When I came here I brought my bride. Oh, how happy we were! We were young and everything was beautiful. We were happy in God's work.

"'After I began my ministry here in the Northwest it occurred to us that my denomination had no school anywhere in this section of the country. We preachers had a conference. We said, 'We must build us a church school so we can educate our own children.' We perfected the plan. I subscribed a hundred dollars a year. You know I never made over a thousand dollars a year preaching. My dear sweet wife made her pledge, and though she wasn't strong physically, she did her own washing and saved the money to give to the school. We never had but one child. He was a boy.'

"The old man's face lighted as he continued, 'He was a great boy, bright, clean, obedient, Christian. He graduated from high school with honors. We were proud of him. He was president of the young people's society in my church. He prayed in public. Everybody said he was an ideal preacher.

"The day came when he was to go to college. It was the happiest day of my life. Wife and I stood on the front step and kissed our darling boy good-by. We both cried. We didn't cry because we were sad. We cried because we were proud of our boy. He looked so manly and clean as he went out the gate, and his shoulders were so broad and he was so erect. That night wife and I got ready to retire. We knelt together by the bed to say our prayers. I put my arm around her, and she put her little frail arm around me, and I prayed a prayer something like this: 'Our Father, we thank thee that we have a safe place to educate our boy. We don't have to worry about him. He is all right. He is in a Christian school, and we know he will come back to us as good as he was when he left us.'

"Then the old man straightened up, threw his shoulders back like a soldier on parade, his eyes flashed fire, and he set his jaw. 'Brother Bob, while I had been preaching to my country churches, the devil had been sowing tares in that college. A skeptic had got in the Science Department. At the end of four years my boy came home with his degree, but he came home an atheist, laughing at my religion, at the gospel I preach, and at the faith of his mother. My son is a middle-aged man now, but he is a drunken, atheistic bum. Brilliantly educated, he writes letters to the papers and signs these letters 'Atheist,' and laughs at the gospel I have preached for sixty years, and makes fun of his old mother's faith.

"'Brother Bob, wife and I are old. You are a young man. Go up and down this country and tell this story, and warn the people that the educational drift of this nation is atheistic. Tell the people to awake or this nation is gone.'"

One of the chief features of the campaign for students is a plan to enlist as quickly as possible 100,000 people to pray daily for revival and for the students. Neat prayer cards will be sent free of cost, postpaid, for distribution in churches, Bible schools, and the like. You can render splendid service by sending for 10, 50, 100, 500 or more of these prayer cards to put in the hands of praying people in their church or community or city. A stirring leaflet entitled "Three College Ship-Wrecks" has also been issued, and supplies will be sent free of cost, along with the prayer cards, upon request to the Million Testaments Campaign for Students, 1505 Race Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Some weeks ago in an English periodical Rev. Samuel Chadwick, Principal of Cliff College, made a striking and significant statement regarding the power of intercessory prayer. He said: "The fervent supplication of one soul moved of God is an immeasurable force." Will not each one who reads these lines pray fervently day by day for an outpouring of God's spirit upon our lands and upon the students, and for God's blessing upon this new movement to bring back to the Lord the students who have lost their faith, and to lead multitudes into the glorious light of the gospel?

If God's children throughout the United States and Canada will pray fervently day by day, who can estimate the far-reaching influence of their intercession in opening the windows of Heaven and transforming the spiritual atmosphere of our educational institutions? Is it too much to expect that in answer to nation-wide united prayer, and through the widespread distribution of the Word of God, real spiritual awakenings will be witnessed among the students during the coming school year?

---GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD---

TRAVEL LETTER—IN CAIRO, EGYPT.

Tilden H. Gaddis.

Dear Herald Family:

After a blessed farewell from Jerusalem, with many new made friends at the depot to see us off, and Mr. Shelly of the Chamber of Commerce reminding us that Jesus will soon stand on Olivet again, we crossed the land of Samson and the wilderness beyond it to Cairo, the great city of North Africa.

A good tonic for restless nerves is to mix with the slow moving Egyptians in the land of color, where there is no order or system. They awaken to speed, however, to serve a traveller for good U. S. dollars. To them, all Americans are "Good Man"—"Plenty Money." Why hurry? Their ancestors have been doing the same thing for 5,000 years, and will likely continue for another 5,000 if the world stands, and the ages would not move any faster even if they did; and really, if one is living for time, that is a good philosophy. Nervous people like ourselves would never build Pyramids, which stand as monuments to the labors of 100,000 slaves working for 30 years. The names of these obscure and forgotten workmen are not engraved thereon, yet "Their work lives on" more permanent than some achievements of men of more fame. We had as well spend our time building Pyramids as eating and drinking and playing and forgetting; for after all, as the fool saith, "There is no God in my life", then we had best build well for time, and Pyramids last longer than pleasure.

We enter Cairo with its open, flapping-curtained busses, as awkward looking as the camels which they are honking out of the way; odd carriages drawn by half-starved horses; cow carts on which appears to be the whole family, or the whole neighborhood, furnishings and all; its black-robed funeral processions weeping and flinging arms, overloaded donkeys, veiled women with funny little brass cylinders over the nose, and some with a face full of jewelry and coins; its peddlers with goat skins full of lemonade, its street salesmen who ask five dollars for an article and finally accept a nickel; bazaar salesmen who are determined you shall visit their emporiums to see what beautiful goods are manufactured in this land of the Nile; pilgrims starting for Mecca, a juggler, a caravan from the desert, armies of dragomen with enough clothes on to keep a family warm through an Alaskan winter; hotel loafers in wicker chairs adorning the front; swarming bootblacks; one little Arab not over seven years old was in the train working with all his might on my shoes before I was aware of his presence; my shoes dust-covered from the desert needed his service and when finished, like a little soldier, he saluted and was delighted with a half piaster.

At the Zoo, the crowds, as usual, are at the monkey cages. We find elephants performing for the delighted natives and then holding out his trunk for "baksheesh", which he faithfully gave to his master. Both man and beast are beggars here. My camel boy beside begging me (The rich American) to bring him and the camel to U. S. where he was sure we (he, I, and the camel) could gain a fortune selling rides, kept informing me that he received no part of what I paid the owner of this gangling brute which the Arabs say is made of the scraps left after all other animals were finished, and to ride one for any length of time proves they are not built for comfort or speed. To mount, Mr. Camel gets on his knees, then up comes the rear till you nearly go over his head. The front rises next flinging you to the rear of the saddle with a vengeance. By this time you are accustomed to being pitched backward and forward and do not mind the last uprising of the rear, which puts you on the level and ready for the jerky motion of locomotion which you finally get into the swing of. We thought of Rebekah's long journey to Abraham's home, but the hardships of the way were relieved by the comfort of the faithful servant Eliezer reminding her of the love, wealth and happiness that awaited her on seeing Isaac face to face. So if your pilgrimage to Heaven at times seems rough as a camel ride, just draw encouragement from the faithful Holy Ghost who reminds us that once inside the golden gate, it will be so glorious and eternally joyful in the presence of Jesus that the toils of the road will seem nothing. So let us endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

Cairo is full of extremes and moods, camels and fine autos contesting for the road. You swelter in the sun and shiver in the shade, bare-legged, ragged peasants beside gay-dressed sports as smart as a New Yorker on Broadway. Old Cairo is dirty and drab; New Cairo bright and modern, queer shaped craft sailing by palatial Nile steamers, fine modern trains and depots and yet cars crammed full and roof of train alive with humanity.

The people of Egypt are interesting. Their great skirts, like sails, ought to help them along when the wind is in their favor. And they are religious. Of fifteen million population fourteen million are Mohammedans. A Moslem in Cairo can worship at a different Mosque every day in the year and have some left as nearly 400 raise their minarets to the sky. But you don't need go to these temples to see them pray, for they are down on their knees prostrating themselves on trains, docks, in shops, oblivious to surroundings with faces toward Mecca, never missing a movement in the form.

Out at the Virgin's tree, where Joseph and Mary rested on their flight into Egypt, we climbed up on a limb for a picture, when the caretaker came running and rebuking and ordering us down, declaring we had defiled its holy limbs, especially since we had our shoes on; but we remained for another snap to be sure of a good one by the which time he was actually pulling us down. The Catholics who own the grounds have, as you would know, erected a chapel here and then leased the sight-seeing rites to a Moslem who charges 25 cents to see, which does not include the right to climb the tree or a leaf for a souvenir. It is a sycamore tree, such as Zachæus climbed to see Jesus. We are reminded that it was while the parents sought safety here, the innocents were slaughtered in Jerusalem; but while thousands of infants gave their lives to save his, the infant Jesus finally gave his life to redeem them.

Also it is wonderful that this land of the Pharaohs, where God built the Hebrew nation and then oppressed them with bondage and brickyards, hid a leader in a basket among bulrushes at the edge of the Nile, should later protect the king of the Jews. Also it was the East that gave the light to us, then lost it themselves. We owe it to them; the debt is old and should be paid with interest. A great Obelisk, built 2430 B. C., in shade of which Jeremiah is supposed to have written Lamentations, marks the border of the Land of Goshen. An impressive monument—"The Awakening of Egypt"—commemorates the strike for independence, and today in this rich land where good farm land watered by the Nile, sells for $1500 per acre the king is receiving some twelve million dollars, a great salary.

The Sphinx revealed by recent excavations as a great wingless couchant lion with the royal head of a Pharaoh, is a gray-headed old fellow, 72 feet long, 160 feet high and still a mystery.

The Egyptian Museum is a real treasure house of Royal Mummies, also relics from the tomb of King Tut, who certainly left a valuable contribution to the knowledge of the past. The curse of the gods seems to follow to the death, those who disturbed the remains and possessions of this rich old monarch.

A great industrial Exposition at Cairo gave us opportunity to learn much of the industries and business of the nation.

Our spiritual fellowship in Egypt was with the Pentecostal School and Mission. Rev. Joseph Said, a sanctified Egyptian, called at our hotel the morning after our arrival offering his service as friend and guide, and to him we are indebted for such a pleasant and profitable visit. Rev. Doney, the Canadian Superintendent of this work, and other missionaries, received us kindly asking that we remain for a campaign which was impossible. A door of opportunity is open here, as well as to a number of other stations in the Valley of the Nile. A school of 300 pupils and an orphanage of 700 are in connection with this work, which ministers to many, and God is blessing them.

DINING WITH DUNAWAY.

Rev. Allie Irick.

It would require almost a lifetime to meet so many outstanding ministers and workers in one city and in one home, as was illustrated in the above suggested instance.

The place of this gathering was in the beautiful little city of Decatur, Ga., the home of Rev. C. M. Dunaway, close to the historic city of Atlanta, with her great commercial center, business blocks, colleges, universities, beautiful drives and attractive homes. This is a typical southern home—large, airy, restful, commodious and convenient. How our God has blessed this household with comfort and convenience for their tired feet, wearied bodies and enquiring minds, and, above all, sweet rest and joy for their souls. How important that all our pastors, evangelists and workers should have good, comfortable, happy homes for life's short day.

Rev. C. M. Dunaway is one of the outstanding holiness evangelists of America; one who has stood true to God and holiness for over thirty years. One who has preached all over the nation. He has held revivals in most every town and city in Georgia. He has held over fifty-seven revivals in Atlanta.

Aside from the Dunaway family, we had that peerless preacher, life-long friend, the incomparable editor and veteran of the Holiness Movement, Dr. Henry Clay Morrison, with his snow-white locks, his beaming face and tender voice. There he sits to bless us, lift us, inspire us, encourage us and to make us love his adorable Lord. Then comes that sweet singer, Charlie Tillman, who has been singing the gospel of full and free salvation for forty years. Next comes Rev. Oscar Hudson, District Superintendent of the Nazarene Church, in Georgia, and his noble wife, Rev. Mrs. Nettie Hudson, pastor First Church of the Nazarene in Atlanta. Then Prof. L. C. Messer, one of the leading song evangelists of the United States, and Mr. Padgett, a leading business man of Atlanta, who stands foursquare for Bible holiness, then two young ladies, song evangelists, from Pennsylvania and Ohio, and lastly your scribe. My, what a company! What a time we had at that long, beautiful dining table. How we enjoyed the hospitality of the Dunaway family and home. Our hearts rejoiced over the fellowship of that illustrious group of holy men and women.

The occasion of this gathering was on this wise: Dr. Morrison was holding a revival with the People's Tabernacle, and Rev. Charlie Dunaway was in the midst of a gracious meeting with St. John Methodist Church of the city; Evangelist Allie Irick and Prof. L. C. Messer were witnessing a wonderful revival campaign with First Church of the Nazarene in Atlanta. I recalled the first time I ever met Dr. Morrison, over thirty years ago, away back in old Texas, at Bonham, where he was holding a revival along full salvation lines in an old tobacco barn, and the fire was falling. We drove eighteen miles through mud and rough roads in a covered wagon to hear that prince of preachers preach the gospel of holiness. The first time we ever met or heard Charlie Tillman was at Memphis, more than twenty-five years ago.

The happy occasion above mentioned enriched my soul, my ministry and my future for God and the cause of Christian holiness. We did so much enjoy our stay and service in the great old historic city of Atlanta. The church urged our return for another engagement, which we hope to be able to enjoy again within the next year.

With love for all, and malice toward none, we feel more like pressing the battle for God and souls to the very gates of the enemy. God bless dear Dr. Morrison, keep Tillman "histing" the tunes, Messer making melody, Padgett pushing on for the hilltops of glory, the Hudsons pressing on to higher heights, and Dunaways for the delectable mountains of God, with Irick ever reaching on to things nobler and more lofty. Amen and Amen.

MISSIONARYING IN THE PHILIPPINES.

If there is one place where opportunity for missionary work is greater than another it must be in the Philippine Islands. If there is one place where the harvest is more plenteous than in another it must be in the islands also. Truly the "Isles await thy law."

The public schools which the United States Government has given the people have opened their minds and prepared them for the reception of the Gospel. As yet the church of Rome has many of them shackled but many have broken these shackles and come into a knowledge of a vital evangelical Christianity. The prospects for the future of the Protestant Church are most encouraging. The schools present a tremendous challenge to the evangelical forces of Christianity. They are educating the youth and giving them a taste of culture, a taste of a higher type of living and unless they are brought into a personal experience of God and are given the very best that the church has to offer, they are going to drift into worldliness and fall into the sins so common in other countries.

My work is district evangelism. I travel by auto, by ox cart, by carabao sled and on foot as I visit the work and help the deaconesses, supplying them with literature, giving suggestion and helping in many ways. It is so encouraging to see with what eagerness the people listen to the message and take it for just what it says. Theirs is a simple childlike faith that takes God at his word.

Last week we held our Daily Vacation Bible School Institute. Eighty-five young men and women came in with their beds rolled up under their arms, so that they could study and learn how to go out and teach their little brothers and sisters. These mats were spread out on the floor and if you could have looked into the two dormitories late at night you would have seen the institutors sleeping soundly.

At five thirty the next morning they were up and ready for breakfast by six, then for study until seven when their day's program began. They worked earnestly for ten days to prepare themselves for the days just ahead of them. Their sole purpose was service for there was no remuneration and they were paying their own board while attending the institute. Next Monday these same young people will be scattered out over the district in twenty-one schools leading the children in songs, games and Bible study. Some of these teachers are themselves products of the Daily Vacation Bible Schools and they appreciate the value of them.

Those days of the institute were not just bare study and grind for Christ was present to enrich and bless every session. His presence was felt as the different ones took turns in leading the evening devotions. He was present at the morning devotions, he was present in the classes. Their comprehension of the truth is often much greater than we think. One evening recently Maria sat helping me mend stockings. "Maria," I asked, "What do your people think of you being a Christian and a member of our church?"

"Well," she answered, "When I go home they ask me many questions and sometimes I can't answer them. One day the priest asked me why I go to that church when I used to march in the processions with them. I told him that that was before I had God inside me, and I didn't know any better then. He said I had been baptized in his church, and I told him that Jesus said that unless we were baptized with the Spirit that comes from him the other baptism was no good."

As we sat and mended and talked I learned that Maria, though quite new in the faith, has a clear understanding of what it means to be a Christian and she is living out her understanding of it day after day in our home. Day after day we have just such evidence that God is working in the hearts of his brown children. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely:

And they shall be my people, and I will be their God:

And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them:

And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.

Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul.

For thus saith the Lord; like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them.

And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord.

Let me suggest to our readers that you get your Bibles, turn to the 33rd chapter of Jeremiah, read the 19th, 20th and 21st verses of that chapter, and then read the 25th, and 26th verses of the same chapter. You will find that God has made the most positive pledge that he could utter, not only, that he will restore Israel, but that the throne of David shall have a King, and that King will be, no doubt, the King of all kings. Read your Bibles. Believe what you read. Praise God. Rejoice in him. Have no fear but that he will keep his word, and move forward in this skeptical age, with an unshaken faith in the Word of God, and an unhesitating trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, the glorified Son of God, to forgive all your sins, sanctify you wholly, and give to you the indwelling, abiding, Holy Ghost to comfort you in your soul, and empower you for service.

THE END

If This is Old Age.

The dates recorded in the Bible and the calendar tell the truth on me. I have never tried to conceal my age. I am an old man, and I can say truthfully it is fine to be old. I do not regret it, and I am not ashamed of it. I am enjoying my old age immensely. I am conscious of something, shall I say, some one within me, that is wonderfully young. No doubt this inner man is the real man, the man of immortal youth. The soul of me can never grow old. The house in which I dwell may turn gray, decay and fall, but what of it? Its fall will be a wonderful release. What a transformation! What an enlargement! Then I shall become a citizen of the universe, and go up to worship at the feet of my Redeemer, and begin the exploration of the countless planets that roll in beautiful order under the sway of the scepter of the King of kings and Lord of lords.

To tell the plain truth, I would like to live some years yet. You see I am deeply interested in this Theological Seminary enterprise. I vision a great school—an army of Spirit-filled young preachers going out from it winning millions of souls from sin to Christ. Ah, that is something to live and labor for.

This Seminary matter seems to have put new life into me. I was up at half past five this morning, into a cold bath, a bite of breakfast, and here I am more than two miles from home on the street car, in THE HERALD office writing this stuff about the young man inside of this old body, at half past seven o'clock A. M.

I wonder if Phelps, of The Michigan Christian Advocate, is up yet? I doubt it. It is a question in my mind whether Smith of the Nashville Christian Advocate is up and at his desk so early. He is giving the Church a great paper and the Church ought to support it well. Phelps, editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate, is a most interesting and lovable man. Some papers are almost exactly alike; to read one issue is about enough for six months. Not so with Phelps. You read him this week, you do not know what will appear in his paper next week. There is pep in that editor.

Getting back to the matter of my age. I founded THE HERALD something more than forty-three years ago, and have been its editor ever since. I suppose there are few editors of the secular or religious press living who have been pushing the pen on the same paper for forty-three years without a break. Thinking of my soul some nights ago I wrote this poem I am giving you. Poor poetry, perhaps, but blessed truth:

I AM A SOUL.

I have a body, but I am a soul.

This cage which doth my spirit hold—

This house of flesh in which I dwell

Is my tenement, it is not my soul.

This frail shell in which I now reside,

This decaying material which you behold,

This mortal part cannot abide,
But this visible is not my soul.

The soul which dwells within

Is with immortal life endowed;

Inbreathed of God, it cannot die,

It can never wear a shroud.

Upon the cruel cross of Calvary,

The Christ has conquered death for me;

I will not, cannot die, but rise from death

To be clothed upon with immortality.

My years are swiftly passing by,

Upon this life soon I must loose my hold;

Then to the grave you may commit the empty shell,

But be assured you will not inter my soul.

Then, like a captive bird, from iron cage set free,

My soul, redeemed from sin by love of Christ, shall rise

Swift as thought upon the wings of faith and love,

I'll find my eternal dwelling place beyond the skies.

There with the angels and the saints,

Until brightest stars to cinders turn,

We'll worship our Redeemer, Christ,

Till flaming suns shall cease to burn.

High Points in Asbury College Commencement.

THE Holiness Convention leading up to Commencement Exercises, was opened May 27 by a sermon from President L. R. Akers. This was followed by sermons from Commander S. L. Brengle, of the Salvation Army, H. C. Morrison, an address by the president of Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., this by an address by Dr. H. M. Shuman, president of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. Commissioner Brengle preached a number of times with most gracious results. H. C. Morrison preached the Baccalaureate sermon Sabbath morning. Dr. Shuman preached Sunday afternoon, followed by a great address by Dr. Clarence True Wilson, Sunday evening. One of the outstanding addresses was made by Harold Paul Sloan, a champion of Bible truth, Dr. V. C. Curtis, of Mississippi, brought a good message. He is highly appreciated by the people who gather at Asbury College.

There were a number of interesting exercises given by the various schools of the college. One of the outstanding occasions was the Class Address by Dr. James Winford Hunt, president of McMurry College, Abilene, Tex. This was Dr. Hunt's first visit and he captured the people head and heart. He is an unusual man, full of wit and wisdom, an eloquent preacher of great power. The people of Wilmore will want to hear him again.

There were 105 A. B. graduates, a splendid class of young people, and a number from various departments of the school. There were seventeen who received the degree of B. D. from the School of Theology, all of whom experience the blessing of perfect love.

The degree of D. D. was conferred upon Rev. Crandall, pastor of Boulevard Methodist Church, Binghamton, N. Y. He is a man of great power as a preacher of the gospel, and much beloved by his brethren. This degree was also given to Rev. Warren G. McIntire, formerly of Los Angeles, Calif., also upon Rev. O. H. Callis, one of Asbury's worthy sons, and Rev. J. C. McPheeters, pastor of Glide Memorial Church, San Francisco, Calif. His ministry is being greatly blessed in that religious center. The degree of LL.D., was conferred upon Dr. J. W. Hunt, of Abilene, Tex., and Dr. Harold Paul Sloan, of Haddonfield, N. J.

There was a very large attendance of parents and friends of the graduates of the various schools, and we heard many remarking that it was one of the best Commencements ever had at Asbury College. There were a number of young people visiting at the Commencement who are planning to attend school next year, and many reservations have been made for next year, school beginning September 22.

We were very happy to have Evangelist Butts with us, who is a member of our Board, and a man honored of the Lord as a soul winner. We were happy indeed, to have C. W. Ruth present, and to find him looking so well. He seems to be blooming out afresh. Rev. Clarence True Wilson, D. D., Washington, D. C., gave a tremendous address on Prohibition, mingled with some excellent things on full salvation. His devotion to the great work of Asbury, his fidelity and faithfulness are highly appreciated. Through some years of acquaintance I am coming to regard him as one of the most interesting and excellent men with whom I have met in a lifetime. I had hoped to lay down the presidency of the Board of Trustees, but the brethren insisted that I should remain, and I was re-elected. Dr. Wilson was elected vice president of the Board and will be ready to ably assist the president in the duties of that office.

The banner of full salvation waves over Asbury College. Nearly every member of the graduating class of 105 young people witnessed to the sanctifying power of the precious blood of Christ. They are going out as spiritual salt and light into a world that greatly needs the influence of real Christian life.

In my travels I am surprised at the very large number of people who have their faces turned toward Asbury as the school of first choice for the place of education for their children. The coming school year promises to be a trying one; financial conditions are presenting a serious problem to many young people in the matter of how they are going to meet the expenses of the coming college year. There are many parents who have a great desire to educate their children, but the financial question is a bit difficult to solve. The coming college year Asbury will need the sympathy and assistance of its alumni, now numbering more than a thousand, and of all of its friends. Those who know of prospective students should write to the president of Asbury College, Dr. L. R. Akers, Wilmore, Ky., at once.

A friend called our attention to an editorial which appeared in The Louisville Times just after Commencement at Asbury College. This is written on the editor's initiative without any knowledge of the authorities at Asbury. It is quite interesting and reveals the fact that, under the blessing of God, Asbury College is commanding nation-wide attention.

DID YOU ATTEND A NATIONAL COLLEGE?

"If you went to college in Wilmore, Ky., Sweetbriar, Va., Yellow Springs, Ohio, Lexington, Va., or South Bend, Ind., you attended a national college.

"If you went to Princeton you attended a 'sectional place of learning.'

"Harvard, Vassar, Bryn Mawr, Williams, Amherst, Goucher are very good 'interscholastic institutions,' whatever that may mean to you, but Antioch, Asbury and Sweetbriar, in the order in which they are here mentioned, are the leading national colleges.

"This is learned from a report of C. R. Foster, Assistant Professor of Education at Rutgers University, and Paul S. Dwyer, Associate Professor of Education at Antioch.

"By 'national college' is meant a college whose students represent at least three-fourths of the States and nine geographic districts recognized by the Federal Census Bureau, and of whose student body not more than thirty per cent are from the State in which the institution is situated.

"So, before pluming yourself upon having been educated at a national seat of learning be careful.

"You may speak, ignorantly, and boastfully of your provincial alma mater, in the presence of someone who was educated at Asbury College, Antioch, the University of Notre Dame, Sweetbriar, Yale, Wellesley, or another in the list of the ten really national colleges.

"You may be up-stage when you should be down-stage.

"But for you there may be this consolation, Harvard and Princeton are not 'national.' But neither is Hampden-Sydney. And Hampden-Sydney can tell you that the proportion of its alumni who are in Who's Who In America is greater than that of any other American college. You may get a really good education at a provincial seat of learning, if you try."

Think of the fishing net giving the men the most amazing manifestation of Jesus they had seen! Ah, so it is when he is in the business! The common daily work shall bring glorious revelations of his presence and power. How often has the shop, the office, the kitchen been lit up with the proofs of his wisdom and goodness!—Mark Guy Pearse.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all of its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

Prohibition Number

The first issue in July we are to bring out a rousing PROHIBITION NUMBER of THE HERALD. The nation is stirred on this vital question, and you will want your friends to get this number, so get to work at once, send in their names so they will receive this issue which will be full of facts and figures about Prohibition.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD sent for the next six months. And don't forget to pray that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

BAD HABITS.

Bad habits never make you great,
Nor noble, good and wise;
They never lead you to success,
Nor help you upward rise;
But down the hill of life they pull
To failure's lowest depths,
Where multitudes have found themselves

By slow or rapid steps.

Bad habits rob you of your health
And take away your strength;
They sap the vitals of your life
And make you fall at length
A victim to disease and death
Long years before your time,
And keep you from the course of life
That leads to heights sublime.

Bad habits often dull the mind
So you cannot retain The truths you may strive hard to learn,

The knowledge you should gain;
And maybe run you wild and mad,
Make you a moral wreck,
When otherwise you could have stood
Upon life's highest deck.

Some men are in asylum walls
To while away their days,
Who could have filled a useful place
Of honor, trust and praise,
Because they gave themselves to sin
And habits that were bad,
And now regret what they have lost—
The prize they might have had.

Bad habits gather one by one,
Increasing all the while,
As they must have associates
In spite of all their guile;
And thus a man may be a slave
To passion and to lust,
Unfit to fill his place in life
Of honor and of trust.

No doubt the criminal often starts
By forming habits bad
Back in the plastic years of life
When he was but a lad;
And when he could have been a man,
Bright as the morning star,
He only fills a loathsome place
Behind some prison bar.

Rev. Walter E. Isenhour,
Cherryville, N. C.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am a little girl eleven years old, in the seventh grade. I go to Draketown school. My teacher is Miss Callis Allgood. I like her for a teacher very much. I go to Sunday school at Draketown, too. I live in the red hills of old Georgia. My father is a farmer, and of course I like to live here because we raise so many different things. We raise lots of apples, peaches, grapes, and a lot of other fruits. Well, this is the first time I have written to this magazine, so I am afraid I am writing too much but first I want to tell you what I do for most of my pastime. I read most every story I find, and I enjoy reading any of them. Now next I want to tell you how I look. I have brown hair and gray eyes, and I weigh about sixty-eight pounds. My teacher said that she would give the one in my class a prize that received the most letters from the boys and girls in the different states, and I will promise that I will answer every letter that I receive from them and tell them all about these old red hills of Georgia.

Helen Hutcherson, Temple, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: How I love the dear editor of The Herald and his good wife. I feel as though I can't do without your paper either for it is spiritual food for the soul and I read it from cover to cover. We are having one of the most glorious revivals I have ever witnessed in Trinity Methodist Church of our city with Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Henderson preaching. Cousins, if you have never heard them you have missed one-half of your Christian life. I was gloriously saved last Monday night in his meeting and I praise the Lord with all of my heart today. Cousins, each and everyone of you that give your hearts to God, I want you to write to me for that is the only way to live. This life makes me so happy that I want to sing and testify for my Savior when I can. I belong to Centenary M. E. Church and we have a preacher filled with the Spirit of God. He is Rev. George Dalrymple. Mrs. Dalrymple is a gift of God too, for she sings the gospel hymns so beautifully and gives the sweetest testimonies. We have the good Methodist prayer meeting too, and I thank God for that. Every cousin write and tell me of your Christian experience.

Victoria Hulien.

1613 Dewey St., New Albany, Ind.

Dear Aunt Bettie: This is my first letter to The Herald and would like to see it in print. I have black hair, brown eyes and fair complexion, am five feet tall, weigh ninety-seven and one half pounds. My birthday is June 9. Who can guess my age, it is between eight and sixteen years? I like to swing and play basket ball, fish and all outdoor sports. Most of all my sports is reading. I go to Draketown Junior High School and enjoy all my work. Most of all, I like my note-book work. I am in the seventh grade. My teacher's name is Miss Callis Allgood. She said she would give a prize to the one who receives the most letters in our class. So I want all of you boys and girls to write me, as I would like to win. I will answer all letters received.

Semantha Cochran,
Rt. 2, Temple, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: It is positively grand of you to give a page in The Herald for the chatter of this optimistic band of girls and boys. At least I hope they are all optimistic. I hope there is not a pessimist among them, for what's the use? "Smile and the world smiles with you." If everything does not go your way just remember, "Into each life some rain must fall, some day must be dark and dreary." If your task seems hard, "Just buckle right in with a bit of a grin on your face," and "start in to sing as you tackle the thing." You'll feel better when you're through, don't you know? Life is not all roses, but I'm in love with the present, I have fond memories of the past, and I have bright hopes for the future.

Cousins, what are your ambitions for the future? Mine? Why, really I've so many I am afraid I won't realize half of them, but anyway it doesn't hurt to work and hope and dream. First, I want to finish college. I would like to be an artist. I just revel in Nature's beautiful scenery. I would like to paint the scenes as I see them. I would like to be a writer too. I'm fond of letting my imagination wander, then framing a story. I enjoyed theme writing when I was in high school. I am afraid I won't ever be a literary genius so I will just write for my own pleasure. My greatest ambition is to be a good musician. If I can only reach my dreams in music I shall be satisfied and how! I like to read too. I devour good books ravenously. Just give me a good book and a cozy nook, and I ask no more of the world for a spell. We don't have Aladdin's magic lamp, but we have books through which we can associate with the celebrities of the ages. Say, cousins, I'll exchange letters and snapshots with you. Let's get acquainted. I'm a young girl in my early twenties. I have black hair that curls a bit, I am five feet and four inches tall and slim. Thanks for the chat.

Leta Perrycraft, Decide, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a young mother join your happy band? I am saved and sanctified, praise the Lord. I have three children and love them dearly. I have laid them on the altar and ask God to save them and use them for his glory. My baby is a boy three years old May 24. Says he is going to preach when he gets big like daddy. My husband is a local preacher. We are asking God to call him out this year and use him to win many souls. Aunt Bettie, we need a great soul-saving revival in our community. We have many souls in our church who testify that they are saved and on their way to heaven, and they will hardly enter the church. Won't come to prayer service, never send their children to Sunday school, and will take sides with the biggest devil in town. When they are called on to pray they hardly mention the church or community, but pray for widows, prisoners, and things that will never bring about a revival. God pity this place. Please pray for us that God will help a few faithful people to pray down a revival.

Mrs. L. B. W.

Dear Aunt Bettie: This is the first time I have written to your page, but am sure I am going to feel at home with you. How many of you like to read? I do for one, but am now most interested in my school work. I attend school at Draketown Junior High. I like school just fine, especially spelling. Our winter sport is playing basket ball and summer sports are fishing and horseback riding. Would like very much to hear from all of you, I want some new pen pals. I am thirteen years old, my birthday is Jan. 28. Who has my birthday? Will try to answer all letters received.

Sara Goldin,
Draketown, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a little North Carolina girl join your happy band of boys and girls? This is my first letter to The Herald. My aunt takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. I go to Sunday school every Sunday I can. My teacher is Mrs. H. E. Carter. I like her fine. I am ten years old. My birthday is January 24. I have blue eyes and brown hair. Pauline Cook, I guess your name to be Marie. Louise Savage, I guess your name to be Mary. I hope Mr. W. B. is out rabbit hunting when this letter arrives. I am in the fourth grade. I go to Sandy Ridge school. If I guess those names right write to me. I will answer all letters I receive. Love to all the cousins and Aunt Bettie.

Naomi Priddy,

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Washington girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am a little girl nine years old, have blue eyes, and light brown hair. I go to Sunday school and church every Sunday. I have one brother. I am in the fourth grade in school. My grandma takes The Herald. I enjoy reading page ten. This is my first letter to The Herald. I would like to see this letter come out in The Herald.

Bonnie Jean Bailey,
Ritzville, Wash.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I would like to join your happy band of boys and girls. I am a boy of sixteen years. I have black hair, black eyes and fair complexion. I am five feet and five inches tall, and weigh 129 pounds. I am a Junior in High School. I live on the farm and like farm life. I go to the Y. A. I. High School. I want all of the cousins to write to me as I enjoy receiving letters, I will answer all the letters I receive. I want some correspondents through The Herald. I think The Herald is the best paper in the world. I enjoy going to school and expect to go this year. As this is my first letter I will close for this time. Please print this as I want to surprise my parents.

Willie H. Liffew,
Forbus, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I hail from the state of Virginia. I take The Pentecostal Herald and enjoy reading it, especially the cousins' letters. I have written once before, but guess my letter got lost. I am a member of Sunday school and church, attend services regular and enjoy doing my bit to help Christianity. As I was standing on a hillside the other night about dusk enjoying the beauties of nature, my attention was drawn heavenward; there I beheld the moon shining and a few small stars beginning to peep through the celestial sky. As I continued to gaze upward I could see more stars coming through very rapidly and the ones I saw at first were getting larger and brighter. At last the heavens were practically covered with lights. I was reminded of the Christian life. When one begins to live a Christian life, he begins doing little acts of kindness and by continuing to do them will at last be a beautiful Christian character to behold. I will guess some of your names. Minnie Bernice Taylor, Frances Evelyn Gibson, Mildred Ester Henderson, Naomi Lester Pierson, Warren Hite Smith and Orville Vennett England. If I guessed right let me know. Can you guess my middle name? It begins with I and ends with A, and has three letters. Edna England, I would like to know the answer to your two questions. Who can answer this? What one verse in the Bible has all of the letters of the alphabet except J? What two chapters in the Bible are alike? I will give a little surprise to the ones who answer correctly.

Heralds of a Passion.

By REV. CHARLES L. GOODELL.

This is a plea for the souls of men. The author maintains that everything great in life is a passion, and religion being a life, must be impassioned. It is a great book. Send $1.00 to Rev. C. R. Crowe, 2725 Victor Place, Louisville, Ky., and get a copy.

Mabel Love,

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Green county girl join your happy band of boys and girls? This is my first letter to The Herald and hope to see it in print. I go to Warrensburg High School. I am in the fourth grade, I like my teacher very well, her name is Mildred Jones. I was eleven years old January 2, 1931. I like to go to Sunday school fine. I go to Whittemburg Church, Northern Methodist Church. Our pastor is Jake Read. My father is a singing master; he sings for preachers. I have two brothers and one sister. My first name is Margaret. Can you guess what my middle name is? It begins with M and ends with S. I guess one name that started with F and ended with S, Frances. Am I right? If any one can guess my middle name write and I will answer. Margaret M. Sauceman.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a little Tennessee girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am twelve years old. I have blue eyes, brown hair and light complexion. My birthday is June 18, 1931. I enjoy reading page ten very much. I wrote once before but I did not see my letter in print. My mother is dead and I live with my grandmother and grandfather is a preacher. My father lives at Stewart, Tenn., in Huston county. He is a mail carrier. I go to school every day and I am in the sixth grade. My teacher's name is Miss Bertha Vanhook. Who can guess my middle name? It starts with an R and ends with an A, and has six letters in it. Well, I guess I had better close as my letter is getting long. Hope to see my letter in print.

Dear Aunt Bettie: May I recommend to the girls, who write or read page ten of The Herald, a most interesting, instructive and valuable book. I am a boy, but yet to me the reading of the book, "Beautiful Girlhood," was very interesting and animating. I wish that myriad of girls and mothers could have this unique book in their possession. There are many perplexing problems, relative to girlhood, serenely and beautifully discussed by the author, of which every girl ought to have some knowledge. Miss(?) Hale, the author, has a serene knowledge of the nature of girls as well as being aware of their need. Every chapter of this book has within it a great and helpful lesson. Girls, her method of writing will, I am certain, intrigue your interest. It is imperative that we read clean and wholesome literature. There is so much written that doesn't appeal to or stimulate our best nature and ideals that we must be very cautious in the selection of our reading matter. Many a young girl has gone wrong and brought disgrace on herself and home just because of the lack of proper training and advice as she passed through the mazy path of girlhood. Girls, get this book, read it, lend it to your friends, and when you want to give your girl friend a gift think of Beautiful Girlhood, for it will be appreciated. This book can be had through The Pentecostal Publishing Company. I enjoy reading your letters, Mattie McCulley, your letter was fine.

FALLEN ASLEEP

JOHNSON.

W. A. Johnson was born in Catawba Parish, La., August 3, 1851, and departed this life April 25, 1931. He was united in marriage to Miss Annie H. Campbell, Nov. 6, 1878; to this union eleven children were born. He was converted in 1885, afterward was sanctified and united with the Free Methodist Church in 1886. On October 6, 1909 his horse ran away and he was thrown from the buggy and one of his hips was badly hurt, so that he was incapable of active life. He suffered much, but was patient through it all.

He remained a true member of the Free Methodist Church until the end came. My wife visited him a few days before his death, and he told her if they never met again on this earth they would meet in heaven. Wife asked him if his way was clear, and he said, "I have a through ticket, all paid for, and I am waiting, praise the Lord."

He was a faithful husband, a loving father, a good neighbor, a loyal citizen and an earnest Christian. He leaves a devoted wife and six daughters, twenty-two grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn his loss. He has gone to his eternal reward, and our loss is his gain.

David Day.

"MADE NIGH BY THE BLOOD."

I do not like the blood-sprinkled way,
Of which the Bible so plainly speaks;

I would rather work my way to heaven
Than go by the way you seek.

I think I can find an easier way
To reach the heavenly home.

I will try to work and pray and give,
My money will surely atone.

The gold of earth can never buy
A place in the home above.

There is only one way to enter heaven,
By faith in the Savior's blood.

Now listen, if you reject God's Son,
You can never with Jesus dwell.

You will have to spend eternity
With the rich man down in hell.

Oh, then trust the precious blood of Christ,
And you will know your sins forgiven.

Then you will praise the Christ of God
Who alone is the way to heaven.

MODESTY AND FREEDOM; OR, IMMORALITY AND SLAVERY—WHICH?

Mrs. Claud Mingledorff.

"Oh women, women, thou who uncoverest thy nakedness and enticest strong men with thy cunning smiles; how often would I have covered thy fair neck and limbs and adorned thee with virtue, modesty and purity,—and ye would not.

Behold, toil and slavery await you.
For I say unto you, women shall not always be free when modest apparel is exchanged for nakedness and virtue for immorality." Read Matt. 23:37-39.

Women of America, who love liberty and freedom, will you stop for a moment and let us reason together? Danger signals are warning us that danger is ahead. Let us open our eyes to behold them and take warning.

Several years ago one signal was given us when a multitude of godless women shocked American modesty by making bare their limbs to the knees. Then soon as the first shock was over great numbers of Christian women followed the example. We can easily see what the result has been. Modesty now seems to be a thing of the past.

At the time mentioned above, while I was in Choonchun, Korea, I made the prophecy that if women continued to follow such styles the time would come in America when they would appear in public with no more clothes on than the barbarians of Africa wear. My prophecy was fulfilled sooner than I had expected. We have only to turn our eyes to the bathing beaches and moving picture shows to see it. There are multitudes of women in this so-called Christian nation who seem to delight in exposing their nude forms to the public. What a shame! Who could have dreamed, a score of years ago, that American womanhood would ever stoop so low as to become drunkards, cigarette suckers and advocates of immorality!

We have laws to protect women from being trapped by vile men, but why don't we have laws to protect men who want to be decent?

I am now ready to make another prophecy which may be fulfilled sooner than we might expect:—If American women do not repent and turn back to paths of virtue and modesty, we have dark days awaiting us closely related to those of China and Africa, and instead of liberty and freedom we will be the servants and slaves of man who is the head of the woman and whom God has told us to obey. Men have never respected immoral women and never will.

Our hope is in the godly women who will "Come out from among them and be separate," and form a union pledging themselves to dress in "modest apparel" and put forth every effort possible to drive out of every community immodest apparel and immoral conduct.

To be sure we will be weak in number in beginning, but God promises that "In our weakness is his strength made perfect." We may expect to meet with opposition and persecution on every hand, but let us "Be strong and very courageous." Let us cry out against bathing beaches, dances, cigarettes, whiskey, petting parties, theaters, picture shows and everything else that is connected with immodesty and immorality.

The glory of American womanhood has largely disappeared and the public is looking upon her shame. Her hair, which the Bible calls her glory, 1 Cor. 11:15, has been shorn, and her nakedness, which is her shame, Rev. 3:18; 16:15; Isa. 47:3; Ex. 32:25, has appeared. Oh women, who call yourselves Christians, what are we going to do about it? Can't we get together and design costumes suitable for godly women to wear, instead of having to follow the styles which have been made by the Devil himself? Most of us have followed these styles to our shame, but let us repent and determine to do it no longer. We may find it difficult to break away suddenly, but we can do it sooner or later if we unite our forces. We can take Jesus as our captain and he will stand by us as long as we are fighting to uphold the standards he has set for us. "Who is on the Lord's side? Let him come unto me." Ex. 32:25-35.

I would like to have the names and addresses of all who are heartily opposed to the evils mentioned above and are willing to become a member of an organization to fight against them. Immorality is making such headway in this land that we need to train our children to beware of certain danger signals if we expect them to develop into pure men and women. Address me Douglas, Ga.

For less than 1c a week you can get some of the most spiritual helps on the Sunday School Lesson. It is Arnold's Commentary, which we are closing out at 50c.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson XIII.—June 28, 1931.

Subject.—Review: Jesus the world's Savior: Suffering and Sovereignty.

Reading Lesson.—1 Cor. 15:10-20.

Golden Text.—For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.. John 3:16.

"Jesus the World's Savior." That is "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," concerning the world's salvation; "for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Perhaps the word "must" more properly has the sense of can.

Human salvation is costly. Jesus Christ could become the world's Savior only through the deepest suffering. "It took a broken-hearted Jesus to redeem a lost world; and it will take a broken-hearted Church to deliver his message of salvation to a lost world." The Jewish rulers uttered a tremendous truth when they said: "He saved others; himself he cannot save." Maybe they did not know it, but they were repeating one of his own statements: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it." There is a tremendous statement concerning the Christ in Hebrews 2:10: "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." Perhaps the ninth verse of this chapter may take us a bit deeper into the mystery of the sufferings of our Lord: "We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." I am persuaded that Jesus was referring to this when he said in his high-priestly prayer in John 17: "And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one." His was the glory of suffering for the salvation of lost men, or, perchance, the deeper glory of being willing to suffer. He had an infinite glory with the Father "before the world was"; but he emptied himself of this, and took upon himself the glory that led through Gethsemane and Pilate's hall and to the cross of Calvary. The worth of our service in the salvation of lost men is commensurate with our Gethsemanes and our crosses. In his Philippian letter St. Paul longs to enter into the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ; and in the epistle to the Colossians he exclaims: "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church." (R. V.). Social service, no matter how good it may be—no matter how much it may be needed, can never save men. It takes broken-hearted men, who are themselves saved from sin, to lead lost men to Jesus Christ.

It is Christ-like to feed the hungry and clothe the naked; it is worthy of all praise to run nurseries in which little ones are cared for while their poor mothers toil for daily bread; it is splendid to furnish playgrounds for little children who must otherwise be imprisoned within their humble homes, or play unprotected on the streets—yes, there are many good things that can be done, and should be done to comfort the poor and the afflicted; but when we substitute these things for salvation through the atoning blood of Calvary's Lamb, we make a failure and bring reproach upon the Cross. Why is it that so many institutional churches soon lose their spiritual life and power? Why not follow George Mueller and Pandita Ramabai, and keep Jesus Christ to the front all the time? There is no other way to do this thing.

As I sit here in the heart of a great city writing this article, my thoughts flow apace. All around me are cults and isms that are fairly rampant in their efforts to put something else in the place of the blood of Christ. Just a little way off is a modernistic Methodist pastor who denies the inspiration of the Bible. He laughs at the virgin birth of Jesus, and does not believe in his Deity, or his blood atonement. Yonder is a beautiful Hindu temple, erected by the deluded followers of one Mrs. Eddy. They call it a Christian Science church, and in their blasphemy call Jesus Christ a "Scientist." Around the corner we find a gang of redhot Mormons clamoring for Joe Smith and the Book of Mormon. Yonder is a band of Russellites who are crazy in their mad rush after their old dead adulterous leader. And on and on it goes; while only one in five of the city's population belongs to any religious body whatever; and not more than one in ten ever enters any sort of place of worship. Yonder sits a costly stone edifice in the heart of an elite center. They term it one of the leading churches in the city. The pastor's salary is some six thousand a year and a fine parsonage for his family. He boasts of having nearly two thousand members; but by actual count his Sunday morning congregation seldom numbers more than one hundred, while the Sunday evening congregation usually runs from twenty-five to forty. When asked where the others were, the beloved(?) pastor did not seem to know or to care. He had a fat salary, plenty of fine cigars to smoke, all the air he could breathe, and was gloriously happy.

Is Jesus Christ the Savior of the world? Did he suffer and die for that purpose? Yes; all that is true, gloriously true; but something is wrong with us who claim to be his saved followers. We are living in the times of the dispensation of the Holy Ghost, but know little about the power and glory of this dispensation. When Jesus was about to go to the cross, referring to the gift of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, he said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my Father." But the church has lost the vision. She is living a pre-Pentecostal experience. Surely Jesus meant what he said in John 16:7-11. If he did not go away, the Holy Spirit would not come to the church in his baptismal office; but in going away he would send him to the church; and through the church he (the Spirit) would convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment—condemnation. Alas! How we have missed it. The Holy Ghost is the forgotten person in the Divine Trinity; although the church can do absolutely nothing about HIM. He is Christ's vicegerent in the church, and in the world. The church can have no power to win men without him. "The salvation of the world awaits the sanctification of the church." There is no alternative: The church must receive him in his baptismal office, or the world must perish forever.

Is Jesus the Savior of the world? He died for that express purpose; but John says of the Jews: "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." Jesus himself told the Jews: "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." He wept over Jerusalem with a broken heart, and cried in anguish: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even so a hen gathered her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Jesus Christ is potentially the Savior of the world—of all men without any exception; but he does not save men until they come to him by faith in his blood for salvation. We must never lose sight of this blessed fact. Salvation through the blood is the world's only hope.

Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world; but Protestantism, that sets forth the only form of doctrine that can save men, is shrinking and retreating; while nearly every false ism and cult are aggressive and gaining ground. What is the matter? Is there any hope for lost men? There is one hope, and only one: A Repetition of Pentecost. There is not so much as a semblance of hope in any other direction. We are calling for more money, finer church buildings, institutional churches, well equipped hospitals, greater institutions for higher learning, better education; but the entire conglomerated mass will only damn the world, unless the church goes down on her knees and cries and tarries for the Holy Ghost. When shall we begin? We can well afford to swap all of these institutions for one more Pentecost. The church once lived and prospered without any of them; and she can do so again; but she can neither live nor prosper without the Holy Ghost in his baptismal office. Jesus came to reveal to men the Father. The Holy Ghost came to reveal in us the living Christ—the Christ formed in us the hope of glory.

With Dr. Clarence True Wilson, I would like to join any group that will pray until the Spirit is poured out upon the church once more. Thus, and only thus, can Jesus Christ, the world's Savior, be glorified in the salvation of this lost world.

STUDENTS AND FACULTY OF ASBURY HIGH SCHOOL, 1930-1931.

ASBURY HIGH SCHOOL.

(Formerly Bethel Academy)

The High School department of Asbury College has just closed a very successful school year. There were eighteen states, the District of Columbia, Mexico and Brazil represented in the student body, as well as ten different denominations. The school is cosmopolitan and holds strictly to the truth, that "Godliness is profitable unto all things," and that regeneration and sanctification are the works of the Holy Spirit and essential to a life of Godliness.

The purpose of this department of Asbury College is to prepare students to enter the Freshman class of standard colleges and to give young people in their formative period an opportunity to complete a fully accredited High School course under Christian instruction in a definite Holiness School—a school where young people are trained to do service in many callings in life, taught to be honest and upright, and to have reverence for God and things sacred—a school where students are not only led to a saving knowledge of Christ but established in the doctrine and experience of Holiness and at the same time may have a chance to obtain the best intellectual growth possible. Its graduates are known for their piety and scholarly attainment.

There were thirty graduates this year; their ages varied from seventeen into the thirties. The average age was about twenty-two. This is characteristic of Asbury High School for it gives older students who did not have a chance to finish their High School in their teens to come here and feel right at home while completing a high school course.

Here is a letter from a mature man of the present graduating class which seems fitting to be inserted.

How a Mature Man Feels in Asbury High School.

"As a man of mature years and one who had spent eighteen years in public service, since the time of leaving school and that of entering again, I wish to express my appreciation for such a high school as A. H. S. Here a man of my age may feel perfectly at home in the class rooms with students who are many years younger. The spirit of Christ which prevails in the hearts of the young as well as the old makes us feel that we are one large family with mutual interests and ideals.

"I had no intentions or desire of ever completing four years of high school until I received a call from my Lord and Master to prepare for his service. One of the greatest helps in Asbury High School to one of advanced years is the sympathetic encouragement of the faculty. They realize that one who has been out of school for many years cannot learn as readily as one who has continued his pursuit of knowledge with unbroken continuity from his youth up. They are always ready and willing to make special efforts to help backward students. The unselfish lives of service to man and devotion to God, which the faculty live, make an impression upon the minds and hearts of those whom they serve which time cannot dim. They not only know how to instruct in gaining knowledge from text books, but also are capable of helping seekers to find Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior. So long as a school of this nature endures, no one need think he or she is too old to complete high school."

Ira Goldstein.

Recognition: Asbury High School is recognized as A (SA) in the high schools of Kentucky and is a member of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, insuring recognition of its credits in the public high schools of the country and the admission of its graduates into the approved Colleges of the Association.

Any further information desired, please write Prof. Geo. B. Burkholder, Principal of Asbury High School, Wilmore, Ky.

IN MEMORIAM.

I saw the old warrior in his casket, his hair, made white by the snows of many winters; he was resting now after a thousand battles in which he had been in deadly combat with whiskey and the saloon, gambling and the underworld; infidelity and its propagandists; Rome and its Popes; Antichrist and the Beasts; Evolution and its godlessness; modernism and its skepticism; sin and its hellishness.

I went to the grave after the crowd had gone home and saw them covering up the casket with mother earth and they worked hard, but I said there lies a man whose soul you cannot bury, a casket cannot contain him, nor can six feet of earth hold him. By ten thousand sermons he has preached, by the songs and hymns he has written and sung throughout the nation, and which are being sung around the globe;

by his revivals in which thousands have been won to Christ; by the books which he has written and which have been read throughout the world; by his preaching sons, and the sons and daughters of others whom he helped train to preach and evangelize in the homeland and on the foreign fields; by his testimony for the Word of God, the cleansing blood, the sanctifying power, the glorious hope of the Second Advent, and the bliss of immortality, the soul of L. L. Pickett marches on.

Adopted son of Kentucky soil, he lived to bless her with his prayers and protect her with his Gospel Sword! Son of Methodism, he bowed at her altars and swore eternal allegiance to her doctrines. Preacher, Evangelist, Singer, Writer, Warrior—L. L. Pickett preaches on, sings on, prays on and fights on, though he has lately changed from the church militant to the Church Triumphant.

GEORGE W. RIDOUT.

THE JEWEL OF CONSISTENCY.

By The Editor.

IT is certainly inconsistent with a state of Christian holiness that one should be extravagant and wasteful in dress, food, or anything pertaining to one's personal life. This does not mean that one should not have healthful and delicious food. God has given us many good things to eat of which we should partake with joy; and, it is certainly not unchristian or inconsistent to wear neat and comfortable clothing, to live in good, healthful houses and to travel as comfortably as we may, without too much expense; but we should also live in the practice of intelligent economy, never with complaint, ever with gratitude, not forgetting the many about us who are in need of the kindly hand of charity.

To waste money in unnecessary food or gaudy and improper clothing for mere show and finery of residence, simply for the gratification of personal pride, is certainly not in harmony with the spirit of true holiness. There are too many suffering about us everywhere for the real necessities of life for any Christian to foolishly waste the blessing of the Lord upon himself.

Where is the community in which some struggling widow, with her dependent little children about her knees, may not be found. A very small amount of money would suffice to cheer their hearts, add to their comfort, and give them courage in the battle of life. A basket of vegetables or nice tender beefsteak, a good book, a comfortable garment to a child; many little things are wasted or squandered upon ourselves that certainly would contribute nothing to our health or usefulness, that may be used for the benefit of others, that would please the Lord and not be wasted in its reflex influence upon our own Christian spirit and the building up of our characters.

Those who set out to gratify their own wishes and whims have undertaken an endless task. Upon the gratification of one wish, half a dozen more spring up and so it goes through the years and through life. A larger house, more ample grounds, more fashionable equipage, more servants, more money, more musical instruments, the latest improvement in a thousand expensive things, until it becomes a race with the rich and reckless, the Spirit is grieved, the divine fire dies out of the heart, the spiritual life is choked out by the cares of this world and the desire of those things which will never satisfy the soul.

Saint Paul had won a great victory when he was able to say: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content." This statement is a worthy companion of that other, "Godliness with contentment is great gain." The only contented and happy people in the world are those who are not seeking contentment in mere material possessions, but have schooled themselves to do without many things that they once imagined

WESLEY ON INSPIRATION.

"I beg leave to give a short, clear, strong argument for the divine inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. The Bible must be the invention of good men or angels, bad men or devils, or of GOD.

1. It could not be the invention of good men or angels, for they neither would nor could make a book and tell lies all the time they were writing it, saying "Thus saith the Lord," when it was their own invention.

2. It could not be the invention of bad men or devils, for they could not make a book which commands all duty, forbids all sins, and condemns their own souls to hell for all eternity.

3. Therefore I draw the conclusion that the Bible must be given by divine inspiration.

—John Wesley.

they needed. They have chastened the body to the advantage and development of the soul. Let us learn to say no, to any rising desire for useless finery. Let us learn to curb the appetite for rich foods which perhaps do not contribute to our healthfulness but only please our palates.

I would not advocate any sort of extremes on these lines, but certainly our spiritual life does not prosper when we pamper the physical body. It is a very easy matter for us to become so interested in visible things that we neglect invisible things. Blessed is the Christian who has a chastened body under good discipline, that yields readily to the government of a sanctified spirit, that obeys the dictates of a will that is under the control of the divine will. The love of the world, an increase in its possessions, and desire to have more of its goods, have quenched the fires of divine love in countless numbers of hearts that once glowed with a blessed sense of Christ's presence.

The times in which we are living are wonderfully materialistic; there are riches on every hand and display. Our neighbors and kinsfolk tear down their old houses and build new ones, they travel in elegant equipage, they wear fine clothing, they have elegant dining rooms, with snowy cloths, and dine well, they have excellent cooks and tastily served fare, gathered from ocean and earth and air. We are in great danger of coming to desire to be like them, to forsake the simple life, to become discontented, to complain at our own condition and given to filling our minds with desires for wealth and to neglect to lay up our treasures in heaven, in order that we may become possessors of things of earth. May God's gracious Spirit warn us, instruct us, and hold us steadily to the things of Christ—the things which are eternal.

It is possible for you to preach a gospel which nobody else can preach. It is possible for you to know Christ as I cannot know him. Hence there is a Gospel according to Matthew, a Gospel according to Paul, and a Gospel according to you. And if you do not mediate Christ and if I do not mediate Christ the world will never get a full witness for Jesus Christ, never!—J. Stuart Holden.

The Statesman vs. The Politician.

IN our published bill of fare at the beginning of this, the 43rd year of the history of this paper, we promised a discussion under the head which appears above this editorial.

The present condition in our country reminds me of an incident which occurred some time ago when I was making a trip in an automobile. Traffic was blocked; something had occurred that stopped the movement of the auto, and there was a long line of cars reaching back some distance. All along the line people were asking what the trouble was at the front. Men were getting out of their cars, walking up and down, calling to each other to know what had blocked traffic. We were so far away from the front it took some time to find out what had occurred to bring about the inconvenient standstill.

Something has blocked the progress of the nation. Many are asking what the trouble is. They are conscious of the fact that they are not moving forward; they are eager to know what the difficulty is, or what the hindrances are. There is a flood of questions and no one seems to be able to give a concrete, satisfactory answer. One of the serious phases of the situation is the fact that the present standstill, or running about in circles without advances, seems to be seriously affecting men on every part of the globe.

The fact is, the world is a big patient, desperately sick, and dangerously restless. Fret and restlessness are always bad for any one. We are sick; it is almost impossible to improve the condition of a patient who is fretting, tossing, refusing to be quiet, and to take proper medicine, nourishment and rest. The sick world refuses to quiet down. It flings away all medicines offered for its healing, violates the rules of moral, spiritual, economic and social health. It runs to all sorts of quacks for, well, no, not so much for health, but for some sort of opiate to quiet its pain while its many diseases, like a poisonous viper, sink their fangs the deeper into his vitals.

A few years ago the world tried bleeding, an old practice, generally supposed to have been out of date, but the world reverted to it when, in a high state of blood pressure, it bled itself white in the World War, but without improvement. The patient became much worse, while old Dr. War's bill for the bleeding is enormous. Doctors' bills are bad enough when the patient gets well, but it is fearful when the patient gets worse. Dr. War takes the sick world by the throat and says, "Pay me that thou owest," and has the power to tax and force payment from the sick world.

The patient seems to be a bit groggy, to some extent, delirious. It is not improbable that, in its search for a remedy for its poor

GOSPEL TRAVELS IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

Peru is a country rich in history. Prescott made it famous with his book on the Conquest. Peru is rich also in oil, mineral, etc., but to one whose visit is confined to the coast or coast-wise towns and cities, Peru is the land of the desert. A certain writer has said:

"When we come to Peru, we find nothing of the palm-fringed beach and, until we cross the Andes, nothing of the lush jungle so characteristic of the tropical northern group. Instead, we are confronted by a desert of such unrelieved aridity that the great city of Chan Chan, built of sand by the prehistoric Chimu, stood intact. Not until 1925 was there sufficient rainfall to wash away the painted arabesques standing out in bold relief upon its high facades and finally to wash away the walls themselves.

"So extensive is this desert area of Peru that of the four or five million acres of land in cultivation 80 per cent is irrigated artificially. Vast as this irrigation system is, with the government bringing approximately 1,500 more acres a year under cultivation, yet in the days of the Incas the same amount of water fertilized three times as much land and supported two and a half times as many people. For Peru, more than any of the other South American republics, has a historical background of antiquity and culture. During the long reign of the Incas a socialistic government was maintained, in which there was little poverty, idleness or crime, in a domain which extended from what is now Quito in Ecuador to Santiago in Chile."

II.

Our ministry in Peru was confined entirely to the Capital City of Lima, of which we have previously written. When we finished our work there we sailed by Grace Line ship, "Santa Maria," from Callao (which is the Port City of Lima) bound for Valparaiso, a voyage of over 2,000 miles, taking six days to make it. The Coast of Peru is one of barren mountains and hills and grassless shores, but its coast is the like of which I have never seen for birds. One morning I saw flying just above the sea birds, birds, birds, so many that one would judge there were millions of them. The whole coast of Peru vibrates to the sound of wings. Here is variety in the birds—the gull, the pelican, the buzzard, but the bird which has made Peru famous and enriched her has been the guanays—the guano bird. The islands upon which these birds live and breed have furnished the guano which has brought countless wealth to Peru. It is said the nitrogen content in guano is thirty-three times greater than the ordinary farm fertilizer. These guanay birds feed on fish which come up from the Antarctic drawn by the Humboldt Current. It has been figured out that the guanays of Peru consume as much fish as the entire catch of the fisheries of the United States

III.

We reached Valparaiso on Monday thus obliging us to spend Sunday on shipboard which we regretted because we could only give one Sunday to Valparaiso. We had an opportunity, however, of preaching on board ship. The night of our arrival we held service at the Presbyterian School and next day began our series of meetings in the Methodist Church, and the third day moving the meetings to the Presbyterian Church.

Coming from Peru to Chili introduces one to great contrasts. The Chilians have been spoken of as the Yankees of South America. They are the most progressive people of this

REVIVAL TIDINGS.

Our meetings in Valparaiso, Chili, were signally blessed of the Lord. The night we arrived we held a meeting in the Presbyterian school and an interest was created which brought most of the adult students to the evangelistic meetings in the churches with the result that a very precious revival broke out in the school and many gave themselves to Christ.

We held two meetings daily—in the afternoon for believers, at night, evangelistic. We divided the time equally between Methodist and Presbyterian churches. In a few days conviction set in and when we made altar calls many came forward for the baptism of the Spirit, for reclamation, and conversion. From the very opening meeting there was evident heart hunger and the Lord gave us special freedom and anointing as we preached the glorious gospel of saving and sanctifying grace.

The sixth and closing day was Sunday, a day of Pentecostal grace. The Presbyterian Church in the morning had a great congregation. We preached on the Baptism of the Spirit. At the close we had a victorious altar service; again at 6:00 P. M. we preached in the same church to a great crowd and a powerful revival meeting followed the message with many forward seeking God for their pentecost, and sinners seeking salvation. This was a visitation of God's power. At 8:30 we preached at the other end of the city in the Methodist Church and closed about 11:00 P. M. with precious victory—sinners saved and God's people anointed.

We praise God for these days in South America; all along the line now we are witnessing wonderful movements of the Spirit; doors are opening on all hands and the fields seem to be white unto harvest.

Later.—After writing the above I went out to preach at the Methodist Church. Felt led to preach from Acts 1:8. The Lord gave gracious liberty in preaching and attended the word with power. When I finished my interpreter, Brother Elfick, broke out in a passionate exhortation; he had hardly finished before a young Methodist preacher came rushing to the altar, then another preacher and soon the altar was filled with people. The young preacher poured out his soul in intense praying for the power of the Spirit; others prayed and the scene was that of an old-time revival meeting. Hallelujah!

G. W. Ridout.

part of the world. Chili has been described as a sword-shaped Republic. It has a coast line of twenty-nine hundred miles with sixty-five ports and the width of the country averages about 167 miles, but it is bounded by the second highest mountain range of the world on the West; on the North by a thousand miles of desert, and on the East by the chilly waters of the Pacific, but these things have produced a hardy race of workers, sailors and soldiers; the struggle for supremacy has made the Chilean people dynamic, hence the nickname "The Yankees of South America." Strange as you go around the city to see such names as O'Higgins, Cochrane, Prat, O'Reilly. These Irishmen helped make Chili history. O'Higgins was one of their greatest soldiers, Cochrane their great Admiral. O'Higgins' father was a barefooted Irish boy in Ballenary County, but he rose to heights unthought of and was Governor of Chili, Viceroy of Peru and at eighty died as the Marquis of Osorno and Baron of Ballenar; his son, Don Ambrosio, became the first Dictator and then the first President of Chili. This country gets such a hold upon foreigners that they live and die here. Many Germans and English, after a generation or two, find themselves naturalized citizens. One man however who failed to take out his naturalization papers was Robinson Crusoe. It was on the Island 400 miles from Valparaiso—now known as Juan Fernandez—in 1704 that a sailor whose name was Alexander Selkirk spent over four years marooned upon this desert island and from his account of things Daniel Defoe wrote that book which has thrilled all boys as they read it—Robinson Crusoe. This same Island is now quite a resort of tourists and famous for its lobsters.

IV.

Valparaiso is a city of a large and varied population. It is five thousand, three hundred miles from New York, and one of the chief ports of Chili. Ships from all parts of the world are to be seen in the spacious harbor. The harbor is a treacherous one, waters are so deep it is hard to find suitable anchorage, and big ships when they do anchor take care to keep steam up and when storms break they make for the sea. Many a storm has hurled ships upon the rocky beach and wise mariners never trust anchor and chain. Many a fine ship got caught in the storm before getting away. The largest sailing ship in the world of years ago was wrecked at Miramar; when they were digging the foundations of one of the big banks they found the remains of a vessel that had been tossed by the storm away inland. Valparaiso is the Port of Santiago, the Capital of Chili, which is reached in from four to five hours by train. All Chili seems to be centralized in this great city of Santiago which has over one million people in it, and is one of the most modern of cities. They are now building skyscrapers there of ten and more stories, which are abnormal heights for this land of earthquakes.

Just at this writing things are shaky in Santiago. The other night the students of the University had a tussle with the police. That strange infection of Revolutionary something has not passed by Chili without leaving some marks and there's an undercurrent of disaffection which keeps the police busy, and the secret agents of the government always on the alert. Nearly every day some one is deported: the other day one hundred were sent out of the country. No one knows what will take place next.

V.

One of the Congressmen attends our meetings. He is a Presbyterian and a loyal supporter of the Government and of Carlos Ibanez, the President of Chili. The other night he arranged an audience with the President for the Protestant preachers, missionaries and prominent men in church work. They were so kind as to invite me to accompany them. They made a presentation of a beautiful Bible and Hymn Book to President Ibanez. The Presidential palace is both old and new. In the old section they have preserved the old Spanish, while the new in its appointments is up-to-date. The President of Chili is an army man; he is a person of very few words, a tall, military looking man of a hard resolute countenance, the kind of man who evidently knows how to rule. They say that he is a man incapable of compromise and no doubt knows his business. Chili is one of the Republics which has not surrendered to the revolutionary spirit as yet, and the general opinion is that President Ibanez is as able a man as can be had for the position. Over in Peru President Leguia lies in prison, a sick man and strange, too, that he is himself in the prison which he built as a model prison. When the Revolution broke out the public were so incensed at the manner Leguia and his sons enriched themselves at public expense that the mob literally tore the President's private residence to pieces and made wrecks of other homes of his ministers. Such a man as Leguia who, for eleven years, lavished in honors and wealth, now as he lingers in prison may say in the language of Shakespeare:

"Farewell, a long farewell to all my greatness!

This is the state of man; today he puts forth The tender leaves of hope, tomorrow blossoms,

And bears his blushing honors thick upon him:

The third day comes a frost, a killing frost."

A most spiritual movement known as The Methodist Pentecostal Church has made the most extraordinary progress in Chili. It began in 1910 under the ministry of Dr. W. C. Hoover, a Methodist missionary. It seems that he had read of the remarkable baptism of the Spirit at Poona, India, in connection with Ramabai's work. He and others sought diligently by prayer and intercessions for the like outpourings of the Spirit, and while he was pastor of the Methodist Church in Valparaiso, his prayers were answered and the Spirit was poured out in pentecostal affusion. His church was filled with pentecostal grace and also filled with people—galleries and all. It was the largest congregation of evangelical Christians in South America. Now invariably with a great revival there will be extravagances, excitements, demonstrations, etc., and these will offend many people. It was so in Wesley's days, in the days of Finney, in the Korean Revival, etc. The Holy Spirit, when he comes, will not suit every taste. Well in this Chilean Revival things happened which were unfortunate and the result was that Brother Hoover left the M. E. Church and ministry and organized the Methodist Pentecostal Church, and it has grown until now it has over fifty churches in the cities of Chili, and everywhere it is the liveliest and most vitally evangelistic church in the land and the whole movement is self-supporting. It has not a single foreign missionary; all its preachers and pastors are Chileans. It attempts no educational work, whatever. It is purely evangelical and evangelistic and its churches and halls are crowded with people and all its members are vital workers. In the city of Santiago it has one congregation of a thousand, another one of fifteen hundred! it has a thousand in one of the Sunday schools. The Methodist and Presbyterian churches with missionary aid and helpers and finances and schools can seldom have 200 in either Sunday school or church. What makes the difference? Not doctrine. The Hoover doctrines are all essentially Methodist. I think it has to be conceded that the Baptism of the Spirit and the Divine Fire will do more to promote the work of God and fill the churches and create enthusiasm than all our educational and social programs. The Oriental Missionary Society in Japan and Korea is another example of what can be done on mission fields when the gospel is preached by native preachers with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

A Tribute to The Beautiful Life of Mary A. Ott.

MARY A. OTT was born at Pomeroy, Ohio, on October 12, 1848, a daughter of the Rev. John Wesley Klein, a German Methodist minister. She received her earliest religious training in the home and in later life was wont to say she could not remember a time when she did not reverence God and pray to him. She was converted in early girlhood, uniting with the church of which her father was pastor and became a fervid worker in all its endeavors.

Her religious fervor was so tense it was her desire to become a deaconess and devote all her time and talents to Christian work, but those early aspirations were never realized. However, during her long and useful life her Christianity was evidenced in spiritual and material benefits to all with whom she came in contact. There is not a greater service one could render than "feed the hungry and clothe the naked"; and from means sometimes scant, Mrs. Ott contributed to those who were less fortunate. Her broad spirit, constant courtesy and willing helpfulness endeared her to people; legions benefited from her generosity who knew not whom to thank except the God who prompted the benefactress. Her modesty was supreme. She never allowed her name to be used in connection with any of her charities, preferring to remain in the background, taking that satisfaction which comes from a serene spirit following a deed well done.

From her store of wealth, which came later in life, Mrs. Ott was a constant donator to worthy causes. In many articles praising this are noted benefactions large and small, but with steadily increasing scope, and there are truly, to quote from a recent tribute, "many widows, orphans and superannuates who will rise up and call her blessed."

All that was necessary for Mrs. Ott to assist the unfortunates was to know of the need. When it was casually mentioned to her there were many superannuates who were having a trying time, she immediately set out to bring relief, and, as a result, for many years these elderly men who had given their lives to the gospel received a check for $100 each Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter. None knew where the check came from, for the only indication of the donor was a small slip bearing the simple wording "from the daughter of a deceased Methodist minister." These checks were not confined to ministers alone, but to widows of those who had passed on. Frequently these checks were augmented by smaller ones. What a glow of satisfaction must have been hers to know of the distress she was relieving! And what a sublime character one must have to relieve anonymously!

It would require many thousands of words to pay fitting tribute to the generosity of this woman of God. Her charities were many and far-reaching, and in Louisville, where she and her husband, the late Henry Ott, began their struggle which was to lead to one of the largest fortunes in Kentucky, she had an especially tender spot. Doubtless this sentiment came from the recollection of early meagre income and the happiness which comes to those, who, with devout hearts and strong purpose, overcome all obstacles. For, let it be known, Mr. and Mrs. Ott began their married life much as other couples, with no material means to speak of. Prompted by the tender memories of early life, Mrs. Ott bestowed on the poor of Louisville comforts in time of need. She made handsome contributions to the old ministers of the German Church, the German Methodist Orphanage, the Highland Presbyterian Church, Union Gospel Mission, in Louisville. In the dead of winter when many families were shivering and with no means to buy coal, she had carloads of food, coal and clothing distributed each year. Physicians and nurses and hospital care were provided for the sick, always anonymously.

More than a score of boys and girls were given new hope and new life by her generosity. She provided money for their education and upon completion of the schooling of the boys, in many instances, set them up in business and saw her unselfishness rewarded by consecrated young men who are now leading business men in such cities as Cleveland, O., and many other large centers.

She had a strong sympathy for orphans and her generous hand was ever out to help the underprivileged. Orphanages which came under her radiance included the Presbyterian Orphanage at Anchorage, and the Kentucky Children's Home. Hundreds of individual cases locked in the heart of this noble woman with death.

It was my privilege to meet Mrs. Ott twelve years ago while pastor of the Crestwood Church; and to receive her son, Mr. Henry L. Ott, and his lovely family into the membership of that Church. The charm of Mrs. Ott will have a lasting memory in my heart because I have never known a woman so utterly unselfish, or one so thoughtful and considerate of others. Trivial little niceties assumed paramount importance with her. She was always bringing sunshine into the life of some unfortunate.

At the time of her son's entrance into my church she was living in Atlantic City and expressed a desire to become a member of the same church with her son, and shortly afterward came to us by letter from the Highland Presbyterian Church of Louisville.

This marked the beginning of her activities with our denomination which have been beneficial beyond expression.

It was directly after the affiliation of Mrs. Ott with our church that her benevolences started. We had a small chapel at Crestwood, much too small for the growing needs of the church, and we began planning for a larger and more pretentious building. Our Board was in session at the church one day when someone looked across the street and wished for an edifice costing approximately $20,000, and to be set on the opposite corner. Mr. Ott became interested, and in turn, his mother. The plans were started and finally the building began to take shape. We became a little more involved than we intended and during the progress of the building I called on Mrs. Ott and old her of the plans, and the limited funds which we commanded. She bade me return and have the architect draw plans for what we thought would be a model church. The church became a reality, but upon completion there was a deficit of $34,000, which puzzled me greatly as I could think of no place the money would come from. I talked to Mr. Ott about it a number of times, but he did not seem so interested as I thought he should. The day of dedication came and I was in a quandary about the deficit. The Bishop delivered the dedicatory address and I called upon Mr. Ott, who had been chairman of the building committee, to say a few words. Imagine my astonishment when he said he was authorized to say an unknown friend had contributed sufficiently to take care of all indebtedness, and that the church was free of any incumbrance. The unknown friend was his lovely mother. Mother and son contributed three-fifths of the funds necessary to build the Crestwood church.

Mrs. Ott also donated the wonderful organ in the church, dedicating it to her grandchildren; and the only evidence of all this liberality is a small plate bearing the names of these two grandchildren, Jack L. and Mary Louise Ott.

The greatest force in the world is true character expressing itself in service. One has only to look at the deeds of Mary A. Ott to find the truth of this. The magnificent Mary A. Ott Memorial building which we will dedicate in a short time is a living, lasting memorial to a life dedicated to service of God. In this building will be relieved pain and suffering every day. Lives will be saved; new lives brought forth; because God has endowed a woman with a generous heart.

Why is it that some are never forgotten while others soon pass from memory? It is the difference in service. The history of the world is studded, as the night is set with stars, with the names of those whose character and service molded the age in which they lived. America testified that Columbus lived. While our Republic stands shall we cease to know the name of Washington. Every star speaks of Herschel, and the footprints of philosophy mark the earnestness of Newton.

We do not associate the name of Moses with the handsome gifted prince of the

"INFALLIBLE PROOFS."

Evangelist L. S. Hoover.

"He showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs." Acts 1:3.

IN the modern religious controversy two great mistakes have been made. Modernists have made the mistake of supposing that Christianity is built upon cunningly devised fables; while fundamentalists have made the mistake of supposing that Christianity's evidences are so self-evident as not to need logical presentation. The need of the hour is correct presentation of Christian evidences under the rule of legal evidence as prescribed by law.

We shall here attempt to show

(1) That Christianity has an array of evidence, scientific, moral and real, which constitutes "Infallible Proof." Infallible proof of the genuineness, authenticity and divine origin of the Bible. Infallible proof of the Divinity of Christ. Infallible proof of the efficacy of Christianity.

We propose to show

(2) That Christianity's evidences, if presented according to legal rules, would be accepted in any court in the land. The legal rule of evidence as prescribed by courts of law requires that evidence usually be presented under three heads:

(1) Documentary evidence. This rule is, that "Every document coming from the proper custody, bearing no marks of forgery on its face, the law presumes to be genuine. It will be accepted as evidence unless it can be successfully impeached.

(2) Testamentary evidence produced by personal testimony, which also becomes documentary in its nature when testimony of deceased persons is introduced.

(3) Real evidence, or evidence that is presented to the consciousness of those present in court. Evidence which may be tested by consciousness.

Aside from this there is what is called "Judicial Notice," or notice which the court takes of established facts of common knowledge, matters of history, etc., noticed without proof.

We wish to present testamentary evidence to show that we have scientific evidence of the truth of the Bible,

(1) In the race's consciousness of sin. Man is a conscience as well as a consciousness. The race's sin is registered, not only in the higher moral realm of conscience, but in the lower scientific realm of psychology, as well. According to experts, "Psychology is the science of consciousness and behavior." At the dregs of life is the reality of human guilt, registered indelibly in the consciousness of the race. Sin is a universal, psychological fact. A psychological fact is a scientific fact, for psychology is science and nothing more. Therefore we assert that the true context of the Bible is the race's consciousness of sin, a scientific fact that establishes beyond question the truth of the Bible assertion, "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

Guilt registered indelibly in the consciousness of the race, is an undeniable scientific fact that proves conclusively that, sin is society's moral fester, the leprosy of the soul, and the plague of the race ever since the fall. This fact is established by a vast amount of evidence gathered from every quarter. The practices of heathen religions, heathen mythology, the testimony of heathen persons obtained by missionaries, as well as the testimony of living thousands; a vast array of facts gathered from these sources all testify that guilt registered indelibly in consciousness, so that it cannot be erased except by Christian redemption, is the universal experience of society in all ages. We present,

(2) Documentary evidence of archeological discoverers. There is so great an array of facts under this head that space forbids reference to more than two standard works. See Dr. Camden Coburn's works and Dr. Melvin Kyle's works. This is received as expert testimony. Suffice to say that nothing in all their discoveries controverts the Bible, while hundreds of discoveries have confirmed its statements.

We also can produce the testimony of scientists of national repute who declare that no fact of nature contradicts the Bible, while hundreds of facts of natural phenomena confirm it. The sulphur bottom whale on exhibition in the museum at Washington, D. C., certainly dispels all doubt about Jonah and the whale. It is 78 feet long and large enough to swallow two men. As I gazed upon it my faith was confirmed.

We next present the findings of expert scholars. The best scholarship in the world exerted on the Bible in the most critical way, fails to impeach the integrity of the Bible documents. See Dr. Nast's book, "Introduction to the Gospel Records." Also Dr. Robertson McNichol's works on the New Testament. Since, therefore, these documents come from the proper custody, bear on their face no marks of forgery, and cannot be successfully impeached, they must be received as genuine and as the testimony of the best scholarship in the world; must be received as scientific evidence of their accuracy. We could furnish also a host of living witnesses composed of some of the best scholars of the twentieth century, who will testify that the gospel records are genuine and authentic.

Having presented this scientific evidence, we make the statement that Judicial notice must be taken of the fact that profane history agrees with the Bible documents and furnishes proof of their accuracy.

Next we present real evidence, and assert that there is a redemptive power associated with the Bible alone, that has been and still may be, tested by the consciousness of all rational persons. A million witnesses can be produced who will testify on oath, if necessary, that the Bible has made the dissolute virtuous, and satisfied the cry of their souls for salvation from the guilt, power and practice of sin.

The supreme proof, however, is the fact that this Book searches us with the power of Omniscience, and also is the power of God unto salvation to every one that meets its conditions. This is infallible proof of its divine origin. It can be proved also from profane history that Christ claimed to be the Messiah or Divine Lord.. The legal document upon which he was condemned before Pilate charges him with claiming to be God. This fact also is susceptible of proof from testamentary evidence of select witnesses to whom the text, Acts 1:3, declares he showed himself alive after his sufferings and death by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days and speaking of things pertaining to the kingdom of God. These witnesses also witnessed his ascension.

Real evidence may be offered to show that his Divinity may be tested by consciousness. Some of us, yea millions of us, Christians know by experience, that the Omniscience of this Christ and his word searched us to our heart's core, as was the case with Nathaniel, and also the woman at the well. Moreover, we have the experience of being saved, and we reason from that to the greater certainty, that it is Christ who saves us from sin, for none but Christ could do that. So then we have the "Infallible proof" of Christ's divinity in our own consciousness, or tested by real evidence. Having this data in our experience delivers from the charge of egotism in pressing our claims, yea, it becomes missionary and claims that the whole world must be thus saved because this Christ said so, and real evidence proves it. We are not relying on cunningly devised fables or mere legends, nor merely the Genesis account, but upon infallible proof receivable as evidence in any court in the world. We rely upon the word, presence and salvation of the living Christ, who said, "In the beginning God created them male and female." And "Ye must be born again."

Infallible proof have we also of the efficacy of Christianity. Judicial notice must be taken of the fact that in early history one man said, "If this thing be of man it will come to naught," but on the contrary has grown from a small nucleus of disciples to a world power for righteousness. It has gone forth as the only true religion worthy of the name. Conquering and to conquer it goes forth in all the might of the Omnipotent God. Its glories shine forth in every nation. Its by-products of civilization and culture are welcomed everywhere. It has not failed; it has not been tried except by a small portion of the world's inhabitants. All who try it, revel in the glory of its salvation from sin and are satisfied. Many who turn from it do not really intend to do so, but are taken captive to sin by surprise attacks of the enemy. Millions would testify to its efficacy in reforming personal and social life when its precepts are obeyed. So we can produce infallible proof of its efficacy.

With this proof before us there is but one thing to do: test it out for ourselves and seek and find a real experience of its salvation. The real efficacy is yet to be seen in the Millennium; and the glory of it cannot be described, but we may have a foretaste of it in our Christian experience. Try it out and see.

A FAITHFUL COP.

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

It is not where we are, nor what our responsibilities may be; it is how we perform that which is committed to our trust that shall count in the end when the Judge of all the earth shall determine whether we have been faithful in our place or not.

The Book declares that "he that is faithful in the least, is faithful also in that which is greatest." The employee who watches the clock too closely is not the one who takes pleasure in doing his duty. No matter what your occupation may be, you can be A1 at it, and thus merit the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Not long since I was reading a story taken from the "London Christian," entitled, "At the Crossing," which shows the fidelity of a faithful cop, and how he lost his life in seeking to rescue others from danger. I give it to our readers with the hope that it may encourage them to be faithful in the discharge of their responsibilities, be they small or great, and that at last, they may have the great Officer of the skies at the crossing, ready to escort them across the dark and turbid stream into the celestial city of unclouded day. The story runs thus:

AT THE CROSSING.

The day was cold, the sharp wind whistled through the high buildings, and the people seemed selfish and irritable. In one of the busiest parts of the crowded city there stood a man whose pleasant words and ready hand to help had made him a blessing to many.

They called him "Policeman!" Thomas Vengern was his name, and he could tell how many years before, when a young man, he realized that change of heart we call regeneration. The joy of salvation being his, he dedicated himself to his Savior, henceforth to be and do everything for him. Therefore the over and above, in all his performance of duty, and his painstaking care and self-denying efforts.

For years he had been a tower of strength to weak and trembling ones, as they sought to cross that dangerous way. Always a bright assuring look, and the right word at the right time. Not few were the prayers he had sent up for young men on whose lips he heard language that told of a depraved heart, and in the coming time of open revelation, many a life will trace back its start to a new career from a word in passing that policeman.

On that cold day he was thinking of his little May, the one sweet child, who had been a bright summer blossom in his happy home. Something in the day reminded him of the morning, more than a year gone, when he left her ill, and heard the loud wheezing on her chest as he went down the stairs. He remembered how she used to sit on his knee, when duty was over, and listen as he told of children he had seen, of narrow escapes, of danger he had saved many from. He recalled the last words he heard her say, "Father, take care of the children today, and tell May all about them when you come home." But she was still and lifeless before he got back, and no bright little eyes looked up for his story.

"I'll tell her, bless her, when I go up yonder," he said, as he raised his hand to stop traffic; and if it passed first across his eyes no one would guess, for he was "Policeman!" and on duty. The crowds were great all day, and but for his vigilance many would have been injured. Yet all went well till just as evening closed in, when a terrible accident occurred. Two vehicles collided and the horses kicked and dashed about in a furious manner. In the rush a lady with a child fell under the horses' feet. Like a flash he heard, "Take care of the children, and tell May when you come home," and in reckless haste he dashed into the danger, seized the child in his strong arm and clutching the distracted mother he placed her on the pavement with the child by her side.

The panic continued but he slighted no chance of saving, while he could, though growing fainter, and almost unable to keep his stand. He thought the blow he received in the side had not been severe, although he knew the horse struck him twice, but now the way was clearer he began to reel. What followed he did not know until he became aware of it as he lay in his own bed.

"It is two days ago, Thomas," said his anxious wife. He slowly remembered, "I saved the child, though; I'll tell May soon," he said.

"Complications, poor fellow; all for the sake of others," said the doctor.

"Unto me," said another voice, for that child saved was to be a savior of many.

"He will die," wailed the wife in her agony. "He that believeth in Me shall never die," said a truer voice.

Days of weakness followed; the policeman knew his task was ended. Sometimes he grew confused in thought, sometimes he talked anxiously of his post of duty.

"Wife, what will they do at the crossing? Some are so fearful." Then he would talk of little May, and the hope of seeing her soon. On the last morning he slept quietly, then all at once he called her, "Ellen, see, the crossing is blocked; they wait for me; my hand is heavy, I cannot raise it to clear the way."

"It's all right, Thomas, some one is there," she said.

Just before he died he became quite conscious, and his thoughtful eyes looked at her.

"I'm waiting to cross now," he said: "not in the noisy streets, but the dark way that leads into light. Jesus guards that crossing. His hand is lifted up to remove the hindrances. When your turn comes he'll lift it again. Look, he raises his hand: I shall be safe, and you. What could we do at that crossing if his hand was not lifted up?"

Fellow Christians, amid the whirl and perplexities of life it is well to remember God's hand is lifted up to guide, as surely as to his people of old (Ezekiel 20:5, 6), and when we stand at that crossing, we need not fear the darkness, but trust the hand that has guided all the way, for it will be lifted up to take us safely to the glory side.

Speaking of the Colored People.

I was just looking out the window at a colored woman in the backyard who is putting out a day's washing. She moves rapidly. She goes up and down on the washboard with rapidity and strength, wrings out a garment, hurries to the clothesline, hangs it out and wheels back to her tub with an agility that is remarkable.

It is impossible to estimate the hard work that is done, cheerfully and honestly, by the uneducated colored women of these United States. Say what you may, there is a multitude of them who are industrious, patient, trustworthy, God-fearing women. You speak to one of them on a religious subject and they respond with an intelligence and joy that is refreshing.

In many instances their friendship and remarkable devotion to the white people who treat them with courteous generosity is most interesting. There is something marvelous about these children of God wrapped up in black; and they are traveling an upward road. Many of this poor class of industrious washerwomen are living in fairly comfortable homes, and are eager for the education of their children, and their children are enjoying fairly good educational advantages.

I am writing this editorial in Miami, Fla. Not far from where we write there is a very excellent school building for colored children. The teachers in this school have met the requirements of the Board of Education.

What we have said of these patient, industrious, hard-working colored women could truthfully be said of a vast army of colored men who are carrying the heavy burden of toil all over this land, with their faces turned toward better things. May God graciously bless and lead them on.

Suffering Multitudes.

In the coal region of Southern Kentucky there are something like 80,000 people in actual need because of the closing down of the coal mines. The owners of the mines are at great disadvantage because of freight rates, and for some time have been unable to make large contracts for coal; the result is, that the miners are out of work and they and their families are in a very precarious condition.

My friend, Rev. H. H. Jones, is doing everything within his power to relieve these people. His labors among them has given him access to them and he is working for the welfare of their souls and bodies. He writes me that he can use any amount of old clothing to advantage. Anything that will do to wear, from babies to elderly men and women, will be accepted. It would be a waste of time to send stuff that can be of no use, but here is an opportunity for our readers to give a helping hand to people in desperate need. Send any clothing you have to Mr. T. O. Dillingham, Nortonville, Ky. Be sure to pay postage or freight on anything you send, as the people at that end of the line have no money with which to pay for the sending of the clothing. Look about your house and find anything that can be used and send it at once. If you have winter clothing, send it now and it will come in most acceptably when the weather turns cold.

Brother Jones has arranged to sell honey at $1.25 for five pounds. I bought some of it and it is excellent. Every pound he sells enables him to make a donation to these needy people. If you have no old clothing, but some tithe, send it to Rev. H. H. Jones, Hopkinsville, Ky. Do something for these people, and in doing so, do something for yourself. Remember that our Lord has said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Faithfully your brother,

H. C. MORRISON.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN.

I have recently held two small meetings in Michigan; both were held under the poorest of conditions. The town in which these churches were located seemed to have entered into a compact not to go to holiness churches. Other evangelists had labored there and all had been treated alike. So-called "Pentecostalism" and "comeoutism" had about ruined all prospects for good, sane Bible holiness. But the meetings were not failures by any means. God blessed the truth and souls sought deliverance. One old lady 92 years old claimed deliverance from tobacco. She had used it ever since she was a girl—others gave up jewelry. One woman took off her wedding ring; some children sought and found Jesus. I shall be glad to hear from any one who wants a seasoned soldier who has been in a multitude of battles and seen thousands seeking God. Address me, 726 John Street, Jackson, Mich.

E. E. Wood.

It is in quiet moments that you really grow. Somewhere in every vexed, feverish day get a little "silent time" for Bible reading and prayer! It will bring heaven down into your heart, and make you strong for living and service.

If You Want Something

Convincing on the tithe, something that tells you what God says about it, send 10c and get a copy of "Will A Man Rob God." It is a splendid little book to hand out to members of your church who do not believe in tithing. We will send one dozen for $1.00.

A TRIBUTE TO THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE

house of Pharaoh, but as the Commander of the Lord's hosts. We admire him because "he chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

The philosophy of Service then is this, "We truly live when we truly serve."

Over the tomb of Christopher Wren in St. Paul's Cathedral are these words, "If you would see his monument look around." These same words could well be inscribed for Mary A. Ott on the buildings in Lexington, Crestwood, and Berea, Ohio.

In the hearts of all of us who were privileged to bask in the sweet radiance of her friendship there is nothing but tender love and reverence. She was earnest of purpose, a loyal friend, a great benefactress; yet an humble Christian following the dictates of a pure spirit. She was serene, contented, happy. The secret? Service to God and humanity! Is not this it?

She always had a great purpose in life—a holy ambition for right achievement. Inspired by great needs, sympathy for all great causes were outstanding factors in the life of Mrs. Ott.

Contact with leaders in churches unconsciously molded and helped strengthen the purpose of her life.

Were I a psychologist, I should like to speak of the power of personality. This has never been fully explained and perhaps never will be. Perhaps the power of personality is only the power of great earnestness and a great love for those to whom one ministers.

True nobleness can come only from faithful service. Mary Ott always believed the greatest thing in the world was service, and dedicated her life to it. The philosophy of service, is an interesting study. Philosophy is knowledge explaining cause and effect. Service is a much larger thing than we sometimes think. Its deepest meaning is to "minister to another." The highest type is voluntary—to do because we love—because we are unselfish—magnanimous. To give meat to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, shelter to the homeless, clothing to the naked; to visit those in prison and minister to the sick, to cheer those less fortunate—this is divinely approved service.

The memory of Mary A. Ott will live even after the handsome buildings have crumbled to dust. Service to humanity never dies. As truly as the beautiful monument overlooking the blue Bosphorus, erected in honor of the 8,000 brave British soldiers of the Crimea stands for heroism; as truly as the great tower near Stirling, in honor of the intrepid Wallace, stands for patriotism; as truly as the Arc de Triumph in Paris stands for victory; as truly as the glorious Taj Mahal in India stands for love—so truly do the Crestwood Methodist Church, the Berea School for Orphans, and the Good Samaritan Hospital, stand for heroism, victories and love of Mary A. Ott and her son Henry L. Ott; and their memories will live in the works of those whose lives have been molded by these institutions, even though these magnificent buildings may have ceased to exist.

W. P. FRYMAN.

ADDENDUM.

The Mary A. Ott Memorial Building, an addition to the Good Samaritan Hospital in Lexington, Ky., is now being constructed as a memorial to this beloved woman, a friend of the Hospital.

The total cost of the building when completed will be $300,000.00. Mary A. Ott donated $100,000.00, and her son, Henry L. Ott, donated $200,000.00. The building will be of true classic Architecture; the entrance facade ornamented by a Colonnade of monolithic Corinthian columns of Bowling Green Stone.

The Memorial Building fronts 120 feet on Limestone Street, and is faced with Bowling Green stone; four stories in height with provision made for additional two stories. Fire-proof construction throughout, and upon completion will provide Lexington with one of the most completely equipped Hospitals in the South.

Mr. Reichert was the architect of this building and lived just long enough to finish the plans completely. The rest of the work is being carried on by his assistant, Mr. Carl D. Russell.

The Crestwood Church and the Good Samaritan Hospital Buildings are not only a Memorial to Mrs. Ott, but also to a young man in whom she became interested and started on a successful career which would have carried him far. This young man was the late Clifford H. Reichert, architect for both buildings. Mr. Reichert became ill while working on the plans of the Good Samaritan, and it is the belief of the writer he knew the call was not far distant and that he put more of himself into the building than would have been possible otherwise. A fitting tribute will be paid his labor of love; and when the building is completed a small bronze plate will perpetuate his memory.

---GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD---

ENROUTE FROM SAT TAL TO LUCKNOW.

Dear Herald Friends:

Since arriving in Calcutta we have held services in North, South, East and West India. In order to do this it has been necessary for us to travel over four thousand miles through the sun-baked plains. Our accommodations have been what is jokingly called missionary firstclass. There are four classes on most of the fast trains of India, first, second, inter and third. Inter class is a somewhat glorified third, boasting a thin mat on the seats instead of the plain boards of the regular third, and less crowded conditions. We carry our own bedding with us in a big camp roll, and when ready for sleep simply spread our beds on the fifteen inch wide seat and make the best of it. For the most part we are quite comfortable, but now and then our section is well populated with B flats, crimson ramblers and other lovers of humanity who are anxious to claim blood relationship with us. The temperature on the plains now runs well over a hundred degrees every day. Our compartment has been 112.

We thank God for this opportunity of seeing so much of India with all of its colorful variety of customs, costumes and scenic wonders. Little villages of tiny grass huts with naked youngsters crowded in the doorways appear in the jungle. Long-horned water buffalo lumber awkwardly along, dragging crude plows or queer great-wheeled carts behind them. Men and women glide by, perfectly erect, with huge burdens on their heads. Ragged children, scrawny dogs and comical monkeys run up and down the track looking for a handout. Just now an old man with two veiled young women, evidently his wives, crowded into our compartment. A beautiful six-year-old girl with them has a streak of vermilion running through the part of her hair, indicating that she is also married.

A few days ago we met a "holy man" on the train who spoke good English. He said, "The Christian religion is one-sided and soon empties the soul. You Christians continue to give out love to others and never receive from them." He continued, "I go to homes all over India where the members kneel before me and touch my feet. In that way I gain love and reverence from them as well as give to them through my presence. Thus my religion is a complete cycle of giving and receiving." We were so glad that we could tell him of the infilling of God's Spirit through Christ until the chalice of the heart so overflows that we continue to pour out divine love upon our brother without running dry ourselves. When we told him of living with the Korean peasants and of their expressed gratitude because we had led them into new joy through Christ, our Hindu friend jumped to his feet and cried, "Give me your hand, you are one of us; my very brother." The most remarkable feature of Hinduism is its all-inclusiveness. One can believe in Christ, Confucius or Krishna and still be a good Hindu.

Our second campaign in India was conducted in Bangalore, a hill city in the independent state of Mysore. Here again as in Calcutta we were overwhelmed by the abundance of outpoured revival blessings. Most notable was the high percentage of young people who sought the Lord. Three times daily the altar was filled with hungry hearts, while genuineness of soul travail accompanied their seeking. Some of them came back to the altar five or six times until they were sure that the work was done. Hindus, Parsees, Mohammedans and Catholics were among those who sobbed out their hearts before God. On the closing night opportunity was given for testimony. Notwithstanding a jammed house, most of those who had prayed through eagerly and clearly witnessed to the fountains of living water, newly sprung up within their souls.

We feel that the channel for this generous stream of good things was in a great measure cut by Rev. L. E. Seamonds and the band of praying Christians gathered around him. Brother Seamonds is not only an outstanding force for spiritual things in India, but has made holiness attractive through his unquestionable practice of the experience. By means of his influence holiness camp meetings have been established at various points. From these have come hundreds of Indian Christians with the seeds of perfect love planted deep in their hearts, and today an abundant harvest of the fruits of the Spirit is feeding the spiritual hunger of Central India as a direct result of this seed sown on good ground.

Yours in Him,
The Asbury Foreign Missionary Team.

REPORT OF HARRY S. ALLEN, GENERAL EVANGELIST.

Beginning a revival at the Central Methodist Church, Houston, Tex., with the pastor, Rev. A. J. McCary and his people, on Jan. 4, I have not had a week at home with my family since, as I have been going from one revival to another, closing on Sunday night and opening the next meeting as a rule on Monday night, without a break. This strenuous program has taxed my strength but I have rejoiced in the open doors for revival work and praise God for giving strength to carry on. I am now with Rev. E. A. Peterson, pastor of the West End Methodist Church, Houston, Texas. This is my seventh revival in and near Houston since January 4. I go next to Dallas for a revival at the Centenary Methodist Church, Rev. J. W. Slagle, pastor, followed by three other revivals in and near Dallas. During the campaign at the Central Methodist Church, in Dallas

Rev. Sam C. Riddle was with us assisting as a personal worker and soul winner. Although he is an honored superannuated of the North Texas Conference, he is the best preserved man for his age to be found anywhere. His mind is as active and his bodily strength as vigorous as men in the active work, and his ministry both here and at the next revival, Milby Memorial Church, was blessed of God in a wonderful way and many testified to the blessing his life had been to them.

At the first revival of the new year, God blessed in a wonderful way; nearly a hundred came into the church on profession and by letter. The membership rose up and said, "Let us build"; the spark of enthusiasm and determination kindled into a flame and soon after the revival closed a building program was started, and the congregation will in a few weeks be worshipping in a forty thousand dollar new building. This church under the leadership of Bro. McCary is going forward in a marvelous way and has a future usefulness unlimited in its scope. At the Milby Memorial Church with Bro. George Evans, pastor, the church has taken on new life and the attendance has increased in a surprising way.

At Pasadena, a suburban community and church, Brother H. B. Smith is the consecrated and efficient pastor. He is the editor of the Conference Minutes of the Texas Conference and one of the scholarly men of the church.

At Wharton, the pastor, Bro. Myers, has been there five years and is popular with all the people and they would keep him indefinitely, if possible. I found this a most difficult place to hold a real revival. Good was accomplished and the church somewhat revived but nothing like a sweeping victory was won.

At Benke Memorial, Houston, Tex., at my next revival, with Bro. D. W. Gardner and his people, we had a time of refreshing from the Lord. Bro. Gardner has been at Benke for six years and is greatly beloved by everyone who knows him. He is one of the hardest workers I have ever assisted in revival services. Although he has to use a crutch in walking, he gets out and covers that part of the city going from home to home, talking to the people about their spiritual interests and praying in the homes he visits.

The next revival was at Humble, Tex., Rev. T. C. Sharp, pastor. This is an oil town about twenty miles from Houston. From the first service victory was had in a most pronounced way. Crowds were in attendance, scores being turned away for lack of seating room at some services. The closing service had to be held at the Baptist Church which has a much larger seating capacity than the Methodist Church. Coming back to Houston to the North Side Methodist Church, Rev. J. F. Kidd, pastor, we had some real victory services with a splendid attendance, especially during the last week of the meeting. Bro. Kidd has a difficult field but he is commanding the situation in a wonderful way. This part of the city is not growing as other parts of Houston; many of the people are moving their homes from the section where the church is located. In the face of all these conditions, Bro. Kidd has gone forward with the work adding members to his roll and creating a spirit of optimism among his people.

Leaving Texas for a few weeks my next engagement was at Pineville, La. I found Brother D. B. Boddie, the pastor, one of the most active and energetic men I have ever been with in revival work. He has a splendid church and people. In addition to looking after a large membership he is the Chaplain at the Federal Hospital for Soldiers near Pineville. Bro. Boddie had the meeting well announced and his people were anxious for a real spiritual awakening. Great altar services were held and many were converted and united with the church. Brother A. S. Lutz, the presiding elder of the Alexandria District of the Louisiana Conference, who lives just across the river from Pineville at Alexandria, is one of the most spiritual men I have ever met. He attended nearly every service and worked at the altar and gave evidence of the great passion he has for souls, in his earnest prayers and soul-winning activity during the revival.

I was very happy at the privilege accorded me of returning to my home state, Georgia, and assisting in a revival at Capital View Methodist Church, Atlanta, Ga., Rev. Claude Hendrick, pastor. I have not held a revival this year where the power of God was poured out upon the people more wondrously than in this meeting. From the first service the altar was crowded with weeping, seeking people. At one service a man seventy-three came forward giving himself to God and the Church, and there were little children of tender age confessing Christ. Nearly a hundred professed conversion and applied for church membership. Scenes of rejoicing were had about the altar as souls came through with a ringing testimony and loved ones wept for joy.

May I say I believe in the old method of revivalism, calling for penitents, praying until souls are under deep enough conviction to be willing to come forward and pray it through at the altar and experience instantaneous salvation. I believe in souls being born into the experience, that one can come to a service, a sinner on his way to hell and go out a new creature, saved and adopted into the family of God with his name written in the Lamb's Book of Life. I will continue to believe in this method until I backslide and lose my hold on God. Thank God, I have not done that yet, and don't intend to as long as I am permitted to live and keep on the firing line for God. Whenever you hear a preacher say the day of revivals is over, just add, for such as you they are over; for any one who has lost his grip on God they are over. Go into your closet, get down on your knees in prayer and fasting and stay there until you pray through and you will come out with your heart, mind and thought revolutionized as to revivals and their possibility today just as in years gone by. It's not so much in changed conditions around us as in the backslidden condition of the heart within, that makes us doubters and disbelievers in revivals. I am thanking God for a full slate, and having to turn down calls I can't get to, with meetings arranged for months ahead. To God be all the glory for victory in my own personal experience and in the work I am trying for the Master. May I ask the friends, especially those who have been in revivals I have held, who read this, to please pray for me and my revival work.

TRAVEL LETTER, TILDEN H. GADDIS.

To The Herald Family, Greeting!

We left India on a Japanese boat and find Americans, English, Chinese, Portuguese, Japanese, Indians and Ceylonese as travelling companions. The Indians of high caste must not eat with us as that would defile them. We who eat meat and have no caste are lower than the lowest, and for even our shadow to pass over their food would so defile it that it would need be thrown out. Earthenware vessels touched by us would be destroyed and brass ones scoured of the defilement. After conversing with us they bathe before eating, and I reckon a bath doesn't hurt some of them. They prepare food over little charcoal stoves on deck or in their state-rooms. A motley band of Malays are traveling on deck down amidships. A canvas cover protects them from the fierce tropical sun. Their dress is very little improvement over the Garden of Eden style; some of the men have long black hair done up in a knot on top of their heads and they have a native twist that, in ten seconds will completely fix their hair. There are tall, portly women, straight as sticks laden with earrings, noserings, neckbands, anklets, bracelets and beads, painted like Indians and carrying naked babies.

The ship's officers granted us the privilege of a religious service in the dining saloon and God's presence was felt. An English army officer was touched. Others whose religions forbade a definite attendance came about and heard enough to be helped. We see indications of God's workings. The Lord so convicted our room steward that he has decided to become a Christian. We have music and singing on the deck of evenings where all classes come together with the captain and other of the shipmen. A Chinese priest plays a four-noted lute for an hour each morning to the rising sun.

We port at Colombo, Ceylon, the paradise of eternal green from which Solomon is supposed to have obtained his pearls, gold, silver, apes and peacocks. Coffee, tea, rubber, rice, cocoa, pepper, nutmegs, cinnamon and a hundred other things grow in abundance. The roads of Ceylon are through a fairland of tropical vegetation and by temple ruins 2000 years old. Rounding the island we pass Galle, supposed to be the old biblical Tarshish. The North Star is very low while the Southern cross has come into prominence.

The next stop is at Singapore, the seventh largest port in the world; 300 large vessels pass here each month and 76 languages are spoken on the streets. A Methodist missionary was aboard to help us see the sights, which included the beautiful botanical gardens. He also tells us much of the work of the Lord here. Entering the land of Confucius at Hong Kong we are at once in the midst of noise and hubbub, coolies, rickshaw runners, chair carriers people like a hill of ants and the large harbor alive with boats. 70,000 people here are born, live and die on a little sampan with a canvas cover. The mother with a baby tied on her back pulls one oar, while the husband pulls another and, by carrying a passenger or some freight, make a meager living.

We found Macao the Monte Carlo of China, a Portuguese colony under Catholic influence supported by three vices: gambling, opium and prostitution. Robert Morrison, the first missionary to China, labored here and his first converts were murdered. His works live on and his grave remains. It seems a judgment of God that this place, which so bitterly rejected the truth, is today with its opium joints, gambling hells and public houses the most wicked spot in the Orient.

Our evangelistic labors in Hong Kong began with the Peniel mission in a hall accommodating 700, with street meetings, hallelujah marches and other advertising. They shouted, cried and cheered. This campaign so attracted people from all over the city that the union of churches invited us to the St. Paul's church, of England, and this larger auditorium was overflowed the first night and every night thereafter. The Lord so continued to bless and at the first call here 125 remained to pray.

Chinese business men were reached, presidents and managers of large companies, lawyers, men connected with the city government found the fount of joy. They invited us to dedicate boats, celebrate anniversaries, attend feasts, destroy idols out of homes, and after showering us with gifts, gave us a real Chinese farewell.

The reason they have revivals in China they pray and believe, put their whole soul into it, do personal work and really work at the job.

health, it will again call in Dr. War, swallow down more powder and lead, bomb shells, liquid fire, and poison gas. If it should resort to such strong and dangerous medicine it will again find the remedy worse than the disease.

"We have some people on our globe who are very anxious to get in touch with the inhabitants of Mars, if there be such inhabitants, and get into communication with them and foster the exchange of commodities if Mars has not erected an impassable tariff wall. If Mars in inhabited by intelligent beings, and they are well acquainted with conditions on our globe, I have no doubt their wise statesmen will warn them against "entangling alliances" with the governments and peoples of this globe. The sick world is very large, with several wars going on at this moment, and indications that more will break out at any day. Let us confine our studies for a few minutes to conditions in our own nation.

First of all, we note the fact that our nation is daily taking into its system a fearful gorge of poisonous literature. Think of the daily papers with almost no strong moral tone, no real spiritual appeal; no sort of effort to lift society on to a higher plane of religious living. There are a few noble exceptions, but how rarely do you read a great soul-stirring editorial in powerful protest against the many phases of immorality and wickedness of our time; a real clarion call to righteous living, for decent dress, for reverence for God and a respectful recognition of the rights and highest interests of our fellow-men.

Which one of the monthly magazines, with its millions of copies of circulation, is an outstanding advocate of the higher and better things of life; is making a plea for respect for law, human rights, and any, and all, of those things that should count large in the healing and betterment of national conditions. It is generally agreed that the moving pictures, which furnish entertainment for millions, are schools of crime; that almost the entire tendency of the moving picture has an ugly sex appeal, and is of a character to lead young fellows to try their skill at hold-up robberies, kidnapping, and the various crimes that run riot in our midst.

Where are the great statesmen, the eminent men who are moulding public opinion, the fearless leaders with dauntless courage in a campaign for the restoration of law and order, decorum and decency, and the unselfish administration of the affairs of government, municipal, state and nation? The people are beginning to feel that we have very few really great statesmen.

The statesman is a very different sort of man from the politician. The statesman is an unselfish man. He lives and labors for the welfare, uplift and progress of the people. The mere politician is a selfish man; he lives and labors for the aggrandizement of himself, without concern for the better interests of the suffering multitudes. The statesman has principles which he desires to inculcate. He will seek to formulate high ideals into law for the protection of the people and the well being of humankind. The politician has selfish schemes for the advancement of his own interests and those of his immediate supporters, regardless of the general welfare. The statesman is willing to suffer for his convictions. He knows that there are certain principles of righteousness for the proper adjustment of society, and the general well being of the masses of the people, and he would rather go to defeat contending for what he knows to be right, than to succeed in the promotion of movements or legislation which he knows will be detrimental to the interests of the people. The politician is a schemer. He wants votes. He hungers for power and the advantages which he hopes to secure for himself in the exercise of power.

Reverting to the blocked traffic of the automobile. There is a very wide feeling that something has occurred, or has failed to occur, at Washington City, which has blocked traffic, is hindering progress, bringing conditions of discontent which promise no good. There is a feeling that our political leaders are in battle with each other for advantage and self interest, rather than that they are uniting all of their energies and influence for the general welfare of the people.

Very well, so much for that much. After all is said and done the preachers must exert a powerful influence in this nation for its weal or woe. "Godliness hath the promise of the life that now is, and that which is to come." We have been suffering from a high tide of wickedness. There is a general impression that the machinery of our life is out of order, as suggested above. Many things have been tried without any indication of improvement. For instance, immodest dress has had a widespread opportunity to bring order out of our chaos, and saintliness out of our sin, but it seems to have failed entirely.

The tobacco remedy has had a very thorough trial. The whole country has been soaked with the stench of cigars and cigarettes. Tobacco juice has been squirted over the entire country, and we cannot see that the people have been benefited, but rather have wasted their substance in riotous smoking and grown worse. We have a generation that has been faithfully taught the theories of evolution, and a very wide and general belief that we are near kin to the ape kingdom; this, however, does not seem to have had a wholesome influence on the rising generation.

This editor, after a bit of experience and observation, is of the candid opinion that one of the greatest needs of our time is the hickory limb and the mourner's bench. If you prefer, put it this way—Home discipline and a gracious revival of religion that involves the broken heart, contrite spirit and regenerating power of the Holy Ghost. This is a subject of wide range and prime importance. More Anon.

A Charter for Asbury Theological Seminary.

At the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of Asbury College I was authorized to prepare a charter for Asbury Theological Seminary. As we are now educating and graduating from this Seminary quite a number of young men, it is entirely proper that the Seminary should have a charter.

With a group of very excellent sanctified men we are preparing this charter, and believe it will be one of the best legal documents written in the history of the Holiness Movement. This charter will provide an opportunity to those disposed to do so, to make gifts direct to the Seminary for its enlargement, support and special assistance for devout young men who are preparing for the ministry.

The Seminary and the College will work in harmony, as they have since the organization of the Seminary, and each one will be a large contributor to the development of the other. I do not believe there is any greater need in the world today than for just such a Seminary as we are now building up at Wilmore, Ky.

We have an excellent faculty of university men who are thoroughly equipped educationally, have had large experience as preachers and teachers, are Wesleyan to the core in belief and faith, and each of them enjoys the experience of sanctification, as a second work of grace, gives his testimony in humility, and exemplifies in his life that to which he witnesses in his testimony. I have never known a group of more choice men in all of my touch with men through more than a half century as a minister of the gospel, than the men who make up the faculty of Asbury Theological Seminary.

I feel that, somehow, the Lord has called me back from the verge of the grave for this work, and it appears that all of the labor and battle of my past life have been preparation for this, the biggest and best effort which appeals so strongly to all that is within me. I have a great faith for the success of this work that lies on my heart, and I am believing that God's people, those who have been sneeringly called the "holiness people," will show their faith by their works in making Asbury Theological Seminary a success, a real power in its output of well trained, sanctified, Spirit-empowered young men and women for a zealous evangelism in soul winning, both in this country and beyond many seas.

This charter will be so drawn that the school will be carefully protected against any taint of modern liberalism. Its trustees, professors, and student body will stand firmly and aggressively for the Wesleyan interpretation of the Scriptures, of the need of individual regeneration, the witness of the Spirit, the remains of the carnal nature and entire sanctification by a gracious baptism with the Holy Spirit cleansing from all sin.

We launch into this great, good work with a strong faith in the God of infinite resources, and a longing to meet something of the desperate need of humanity. We believe that the holiness people of the nation will respond to this work. They can, and we believe they will, in this crisis of the spiritual history of the nation, help to prepare and send forth an army of young men and women carrying the banner of full redemption to the lost multitudes.

The times are fully ripe for a ministry with convictions, who have positive beliefs founded upon the Word of God, and a positive message calling the people to repentance, to saving faith in Christ, to a heart cleansed from sin through the precious blood of Jesus, and a holy life of devoted service to God. We are expecting that some who are able will make large contributions for the upbuilding of this Seminary; but from the very first we have had a great desire for the prayers, sympathy and help of God's little ones who have great faith, great love, and small means, but who delight to give what they can for the furtherance of this work.

Our hearts are thrilled as those who love the Lord and believe in the full redemption from sin provided in Christ, send in their contributions. We have been asking from the friends who could and would do so, to make subscriptions of ten, five and one dollar a year for five years. Of course, larger sums than these amounts would be appreciated, but these smaller contributions, with a prayer of the giver, make great things possible. Several friends during the past year have sent in larger amounts; others did not subscribe but sent in their gifts to assist these young men. Last school year we were able to assist more than fifty young men who are preparing for the ministry. This year we believe we shall be able to assist sixty, possibly, seventy; if the Lord's people respond, we may even be able to do better than that.

As this work looms up before me my youth seems renewed; my heart is strangely warmed and my faith lays hold upon God and his people in a peculiar and blessed way. I feel that we who are engaged in this work are in a very gracious manner in league with the Lord Jesus Christ to help him in the redemption of souls he died to save. I know there are twenty thousand of God's sanctified children who, if they could but for a few moments get my vision, feel the warmth and joy of my heart, see the necessity, the wonderful sufficiency of the Lord Jesus, and the need of mankind, would at once respond to this appeal if they were able to give only a small sum. Look at the bottom of page 9, clip out that pledge slip, sign it with whatever you are willing to do each year for the five years, and send it to Mrs. H. C. Morrison, Box 592, Louisville, Ky. If you cannot sign this pledge, send a cash donation, even though it be very small. Not long since Mrs. Morrison received for this good work, fifty cents from a devout woman who gave it as her tithe of the money she had received as a washerwoman. That is sacred money. It reminds one of the widow who cast in her two mites and received the praise of her Lord. Every cent of money contributed to this work will be used with most careful economy. Join us in prayer and faith.

Faithfully yours,
H. C. MORRISON.

No Paper Next Week.

Owing to our Fourth of July skip, there will be no paper next week, but the following week we shall greet you with a great Prohibition Number, which we trust you will enjoy. Why not order a number of extra copies and scatter them in your community. The people need to know the facts about Prohibition, which they do not get in the daily press, as a rule. The enemy is busy; let the friends of righteousness get busy also and thus counteract the tide of evil that is sweeping over the land. A Happy Fourth to one and all!

You Will Thank Us

for suggesting to you the most spiritual and helpful exposition of the S. S. Lesson. We have hundreds of friends who use this book and would not be without it. We have only a few of them and are closing them out at one-half price, which is 50c each, postpaid. You may send us stamps, if more convenient. The name of the book is Arnold's Practical Commentary on the Sunday School Lesson, and it covers the lessons for the entire year of 1931.

If you are not more than pleased with your bargain, you may return the book to us and we will refund your money. If you find the book to be as we represent it, we want you to tell your friends about it.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all of its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

Prohibition Number

The first issue in July we are to bring out a rousing PROHIBITION NUMBER of THE HERALD. The nation is stirred on this vital question, and you will want your friends to get this number, so get to work at once, send in their names so they will receive this issue which will be full of facts and figures about Prohibition.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD sent for the next six months. And don't forget to pray that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

THE FALL OF THE KINGDOM OF JUDAH.

Mrs. Geneva Mendenhall.

The Babylonian king, Nebuchadnezzar, rose to power over all the nations even conquering the once powerful Assyrians. He came over into the land of Judah but Jehoiaikim, who was king at that time, was afraid to fight his mighty army and promised to serve Babylon if only allowed to govern the land as a petty ruler. But no sooner had Nebuchadnezzar gone away than he turned against Babylon and tried to throw off its rule. But he was killed and his young son, Jehoiachin was chosen by the people to rule. But he was only on the throne three months when King Nebuchadnezzar returned to besiege the city of Jerusalem, which he easily captured. He carried the young king as well as many of the princes and rulers away with him into the land of Babylon. Many of these people continued to worship God in this strange land for their sorrows only drew them closer to him.

Nebuchadnezzar set up Zedekiah as king of Judah, but his friends soon persuaded him to rebel against the rule of Babylon and he also forgot the Lord and turned to the worship of idols.

The king of Babylon came again with a great army of men and surrounded the city of Jerusalem so that no one could pass in or out. Food became so scarce inside the walls of the city that many of the people starved to death and when Zedekiah saw at last that he must surrender the city, he tried to escape. But he and his wives and sons were all taken prisoners. His sons were put to death right before him and after his eyes were put out he was led away to Babylon.

Nebuchadnezzar carried away all the gold and silver vessels from the Temple and burned all the buildings. He tore great holes in the walls of the city and then burned the beautiful, the glorious capital of the kingdom that had known the splendor of David and Solomon until it was only a heap of smoking ruin. And so the kingdom of Judah came to an end.

Questions.

1. How many kings reigned over Judah?
2. Did a woman ever rule over them?
3. Who was the last king of Judah?
4. To what country were they taken as captives?

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am from West Virginia and would like to join your band of boys and girls. I go to church every Sunday when possible. Nannie Faye Cooper, my church name is the same as yours. I am four feet and six inches tall and in the seventh grade. Martin Griffin, I guess your name to be Eldmann. Am I right? My middle name starts with E and ends with E, and has seven letters in it. Anyone who guesses it I will write to them. I will close for this is my first letter, and I wish to see it in print.

Hildreth E. Sheets.

Dunmore, W. Va.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Slip over just a little bit and let a Georgia girl join in your happy band of boys and girls. Mother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. I go to school and Sunday school. I have seven brothers and four sisters. My name is Mary. Who ever guesses my middle name I will write to them. It starts with O and ends with E, and has four letters in it. I hope Mr. W. B. is playing golf when this letter arrives. My birthday is Dec. 2. Have I a twin? If so, write to me. I hope to see my letter in print.

Mary Berry.

Rt. 2, Warthen, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I wonder if a Kentucky girl would be admitted into a band of so many members? This is my first letter to The Herald, so would like to see it in print. I go to Sharon Grove school and am in the eighth grade. Our school consists of four rooms and has a teacher for each room. I was thirteen years of age

June 10. I live about six miles from a large cliff which is visited by many people. In the spring and summer it is dotted with wild flowers, ferns, and laurel bushes in bloom. There are also many high bluffs, hills, and caves. One cave is known as the Salt Peter Cave. There is one high peak called Buzzard Ball Yard, on which people make pictures and sometimes eat their lunches. It almost makes one's head dizzy to look off of this peak. There is also a cave in which the principal of the high school here and some of the boys camped a few days. There are many signs of Indians at this place. There are places where they have dug holes in the rocks, and many people have found arrowheads which the Indians used for shooting. There is one large rock known as the Split Rock. There is just room enough in this split for a person to walk, and there is solid rock on each side as high as a tree. In summer one must be very careful to prevent getting snake bit, as there are many snakes in there, among which are rattler and copperhead. Well, well, I must close before Aunt Bettie and all the cousins get worn out reading my letter.

Ima Mae Harris.
Sharon Grove, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I have often thought of writing to The Pentecostal Herald. Mother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. I attended Indian Spring camp meeting last August and enjoyed hearing Dr. Morrison preach. Mother thinks he is the best preacher she has ever heard. I go to church every Sunday and lead singing sometimes. I will close before Mr. W. B. comes along.

Brack Goolsby.
Locust Grove, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Move quick, for I haven't much time to tarry. I have written to The Herald and my letter was in print. Thank you, Aunt Bettie. You cousins who have written to me, please write again. The last time I wrote Bernice Vick wrote with me. I am five feet, three inches, weigh 125 pounds. I have dark brown hair, brown eyes and dark complexion. My birthday is Jan. 24. I am fifteen years of age. I am a member of the M. E. Church. I go to Sunday school every Sunday and Epworth League every Sunday night and prayer meeting. Our pastor is J. R. Randolph. We like him fine. There are seven in our family. All the cousins write to me and I will be sure to answer. Have I a twin? Gladys Fletcher.

Smithland, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Here comes a girl of thirteen from the state of good old North Carolina. May I join your happy band of boys and girls? I have written once before and you printed my letter. I hope this will escape Mr. W. B. this time. Mother takes The Herald and I have been reading The Pillar in the Church. I thought it was so good that I couldn't hardly wait till the next Herald came. I always keep up with page ten. I am in the sixth grade at school and when I finish high school I would like to come to Asbury College. Aunt Bettie, I am not a Christian girl but I hope to be in the near future. May I ask a Bible question? On what month did the flood come? I will close, hoping to receive many letters from all of Aunt Bettie's band.

Hazel Wall.
Tobaccoville, N. C.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am ten years old. I am in the seventh grade. I love to go to school because it is a good place to learn things and make something out of yourself. This is my third letter to The Herald. I was a Christian for five years and was sanctified March 27, 1931 in the Garfield Church. I have given my life to Jesus because he has given his life for you and me. He has called me to go ye into all the world and preach the gospel. I am very sad to say that there are hardly any boys and girls living for Christ, and Johnstown is a wicked city. I am praying for a great revival all over the world. I love to tell the story of Jesus. Jesus died on the cross and on the third day he rose from the dead. May God bless all The Herald readers. Will you please pray for my Dad, my brother and sisters that they will give their hearts to Jesus.

Dwight S. Buchanan.
352 Corrine St., Johnstown, Pa.

Dear Aunt Bettie: This is my first letter to The Herald. My daughter takes The Herald and we enjoy reading its many interesting pages. We live on a farm some distance from any church, so don't get to go to church very often. Our pastor is very old, but has kept up wonderfully so far. I sure envy the folks that can attend church often and regular. Ruby Johnson, I guess your name is Virginia. Jewell Logan, I guess your middle name is Winnie. If I have guessed these correct I shall expect each one to keep their promise.

Mrs. R. C. Love.
Sycamore, Va.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am a North Carolina boy eleven years old. May I join your happy band of boys and girls? This is my second letter to The Herald. Hope Mr. W. B. is plowing when this arrives. He is always in "mischief." I love Jesus with all my heart and want to be a Christian. Mother has been taking The Herald for about ten years, and I like to read page ten. I am in the fifth grade at school. My teacher is Miss Ruth Petree. Aunt Bettie, you and the cousins come this summer and we will eat watermelons and strawberries.

Vernon Davis Wall.
Rt. 3, Tobaccoville, N. C.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Texas girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I have just read The Pentecostal Herald. I was eleven years old May 27. Who will guess my middle name?? It begins with C and ends with O, and has four letters in it. I go to church every Sunday I can. I would like to receive letters from all the boys and girls of page ten. I am closing hoping to see this in print.

Evelyn Camp.
Rt. 1, Wellington, Kan.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let me in from the Lone Star State of Texas? I am not a member of your circle of cousins, but want to be. I belong to The Church of the Nazarene at this place. I read The Pentecostal Herald. One of my dear friends gives it to me. I am saved and sanctified. I will be eighteen August 29. I have red hair and bluish gray eyes. I am in the eleventh grade in school. I shall graduate the end of school. I am five feet, three inches. Have I a twin? I have a number of papers and thought I would try guessing at the names and ages of the cousins, as I love to receive letters and also pictures from the cousins. Louise Savage, I guess your middle name to be Mary. Pauline Cook, yours to be Marie. Hulda Pudge, yours to be Inez. Lorna Baldwin, yours to be Myrtle. If I am right be sure and remember me. Mary Jo George, your brother has a twin. My sister was ten years old January 4. Who can guess my first name? It begins with A and ends with S, and contains four letters. Some one write to me.

A. Beryle Morgan.
310 South St., Orange, Tex.

Dear Aunt Bettie: May a little Kentucky girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am five years old, have fair skin, brown hair and blue eyes. I like to go to Sunday school and church. We live out in the country and only have monthly preaching, so every Sunday we can go to the Baptist Church first Sunday; second Sunday we go to the Cumberland Church, and third Sunday we go to the Methodist Church. My middle name begins with V and ends with E, and has four letters in it. Guess it and write to me.

Dorthie V. Mallory.
Rt. 1, Box 84, Lewisburg, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie. Just recently this remark was made in my presence, that, when some people get up to testify all they can talk about is "I" and what the Lord has done for "me." That set me thinking. Why shouldn't that be a Christian's only theme in a testimony? I'm glad to know that I have a personal Savior, one who has taken away my sins, and started the joybells ringing in my heart. He never fails to help me when I call on him. He is my Savior for he has saved me from sin. He is my sanctifier for he has purified my heart and keeps me from sin. He is my comforter for he comforts me in sorrow. He is my refuge for I can hide in him when the storms of life o'ertake me. He is my counsellor, for I go to him for advice. He is my Prince of Peace for he gives me that wonderful peace which no one else can give. He is my Great Physician for he healed my wounded spirit and made me whole. He makes me happy even when I am sad. I am glad that in That Riffed Rock I'm Resting, and that I have the blessed assurance that Jesus is mine.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you move over a bit and let a little Kentucky girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am ten years old and in the fifth grade. Father is a preacher of the M. E. Church. He took The Herald but his time has expired. I sure enjoyed reading page ten. My little neighbor friends wrote to the boys and girls, so I thought I would try for my first time to join your happy band. The one who guesses my first name write to me and I will answer. I must ring off before Mr. W. B. returns from lunch.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a little Kentucky boy join your happy band of boys and girls? Mother reads The Herald. Cousin Jason Sanders has been giving her the paper to read. I am eight years old and promoted to the third grade. I like to go to school and Sunday school. I go to school at Roark School. Brother Curtis Ray is our pastor. He is a wonderful preacher. I live in the country. I have brown hair, fair skin and brown eyes. My birthday is Nov. 7. I have one sister five years old.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Pennsylvania boy join your band of boys and girls? I am eight years old and in the third grade at school. My father is a Methodist minister and we take The Pentecostal Herald. I enjoy reading page ten. Can any one guess my middle name? It begins with E and ends with T; it has seven letters in it. F. Evelyn Gibson, I guess your first name to be Frances. I would like to see this letter in print.

Robert E. Shafer.
Rt. 1, Brookville, Pa.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Please admit a senior shut-in just a little space. I surely love The Herald and am glad to see many letters from young folks who are following in the footsteps of our dear Savior. It is not all of life to live nor all death to die, so let's try to live better Christians each day. I am badly handicapped. I haven't walked for many years, and I am very weak. We live in the country and in the winters I get lonely. I read a lot which affords me much pleasure. I had my 54th birthday April 26. I'll answer all who send self-addressed envelopes. Please pray for my healing. I wonder what has become of my pen pal Alberta Mabel Smalley, or Corinth, N. D.? She and her sister Sarah are two dear girls. Thanking one and all for past favors.

THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW.

The valley is a charming place
The shadow is God's cloud of grace,
There are no swollen streams in sight,
And not a token of a night:
It's like a garden fair in June,
With sweetest roses that can bloom.
The valley thought all disappears
In grandeur where can be no fears.

"For Thou art with me," proven true, Transforms the place and makes it new;

Like Golden Boat on Silver Sea,
With passengers including me;
All singing, shouting with delight,
While Heaven's port is clear in sight,
The valley and the shadowland,
One must be in to understand.
It is so full of Holy charm
Where no one ever feels alarm.

It is a suburb of the place
Where we'll see Jesus face to face.
Charmed with the glories everywhere
And lured along without a care
I'll steal away and be with God
The way the Holy Saints have trod.

VITAL POINTS OF PENTECOST.

Rev. Curtis Askew.

In considering the subject of Pentecost there are some vital points that must not be overlooked, if we would get the full benefit of the consideration.

First, there was a complete and full consecration made that was to hold good for all time. This consecration brought forth fruit. John the Baptist refused baptism to the ones who failed to bring forth fruits to prove their repentance; so the Lord will not give the blessings of Pentecost to the ones who fail to back up their consecration by fruits.

These recipients of the blessing at once began to use their talents for the service of the Master. Their time was so devoted as well, and they went to the limit and sold their possessions and brought the price and laid it at the apostles' feet. Can any one picture out a more complete and lasting consecration than this? Such a consecration today on part of God's children would bring results that would leave a mark in history to go down to succeeding generations that would stir them. Do not think I am advocating a rash move on part of any one; it might not be the leadings of the Holy Ghost to sell, as they did, and have a common treasury, but the essence of the principle could be carried out and God know it and honor it. Then they were "sitting." They had prayed through and completed their part before the blessing came. When the people of God have dug the last ditch, and turned the last stone, and wait on him, the promise will be fulfilled. Preconceived, selfish notions about the plan of salvation must be given up and the plain simple truths of God's word must be accepted as the man of our counsel. All emptiness, vanity and foolishness must be given up and we must meet God's conditions without any reserve before we can "sit" and wait for the fulfillment.

While they were thus "sitting," the touch of fire came upon them and, according to Peter's statement, Acts 15:9, their hearts were purified. All the consecration that we make, all the praying we do, all the waiting we engage in will be a failure without the touch of fire. If the touch of fire does not come we do not know the consecration is complete. We may not have prayed "through" and we may not be ready to wait; but when the fire comes we know all has been accepted and sealed and we are ready to "go" and ready to "testify" to the uttermost parts of the earth.

If, with all the discussion and ado about Pentecost, we have failed to get the "purifying" of our hearts by the touch of fire it will all be as a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. But if we have received this touch, or do receive it, our lives will tell for God and righteousness; and though our names may not be known outside of our own little hamlet, yet there will be an influence set in motion that will be recognized at the judgment day, and somebody will feel it after these bodies are sleeping under the sod.

Again, this "purifying" was by faith. Not a growth, but suddenly, by faith, the blessing came and the fire fell. No one denies the fact of growth in grace, but this baptism was not that way; it came suddenly and by faith. Many times we see people who say they are growing and have been, for years, but they are smaller now than when first born of the Spirit. Our churches are full of them and, as a result, the seats are empty and the services are too cold and dead to attract the multitudes. They would rather go joyriding or to the park, where they can rest. Oh God, give us the touch of fire to give us an impetus that will make the church "Go forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

This strenuous age demands a church at its very best and, instead, we see many places where it is paralyzed by worldliness and afraid to warn sinners in the Bible way to take a stand for the kingdom of God which consists of righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. May we not miss any of these vital points of Pentecost—consecration, praying through, touch of fire purifying the heart, and all done by faith.

"FROM THIS DAY I WILL BLESS YOU." (Haggai 2:19).

God's people may delay blessing, and have done so over and over again. They are doing it today.

The Jews delayed blessing in the days of the prophet Haggai. They were "running every man to his own house," while the house of the Lord was lying waste. God withheld his blessing and called for a drought upon the whole land.

The prophet testified against Israel, showing them that the years of leanness were due to the neglect of God's house. Their love to Jehovah had waned. They had settled down into selfish ways. Therefore, God restrained his blessing and sent his servant to reprove them. They were called upon to "consider" their ways; to go up to the mountain and bring wood and take pleasure in God's house, so that God could take pleasure in them, and that God might be glorified.

They had looked for much, and little came. The heaven over them was stayed from dew, and the earth from her fruit, because Jehovah's house was lying waste.

Repentance brought immediate prosperity. The Lord sent his servant to announce to them, "From this day I will bless you." It is ever thus. God loves to honor the obedience of faith.

The following narratives of blessing experienced by outstanding servants of Christ, following their obedience to God's Word, beautifully illustrate this promise:

P. P. Bliss, the noted song writer, urged by Mr. Moody to devote his life wholly to evangelistic labor, decided, in co-operation with Major Whittle, to make a test campaign at Waukegan, Ill. "If souls are saved," they said, "we will take it as an indication that God has called us into this work."

The first meeting was not encouraging. But the following night, although it rained, and a smaller audience was expected, there were twice as many present. The workers felt the responsibility upon them, and the next afternoon spent some hours in prayer. Bliss surrendered everything to the Lord, his musical ambitions, his writing of secular music, and in simple childlike faith, placed himself and his talents at the disposal of the Lord in the proclamation of the Gospel. That night they had a wonderful meeting. In God's gracious response to their faith souls were saved, and a deep spirit of conviction was upon the people. That meeting decided the question of continuing. They went from place to place with the evident blessing of God resting upon their labors. The cities visited witnessed scenes of revival blessing. That day of humiliation and prayer was the turning point in their experience. Bliss especially from then on became a veritable fountain of Gospel song. God seemed to say to him, "From this day I will bless you."

Christmas Evans tells in his diary that one afternoon, as he was traveling along a very lonely road to an appointment, he was convicted of a cold heart. He says, "I tethered my horse and went to a sequestered spot, where I walked to and fro in an agony as I reviewed my life. I waited there three hours before God, broken with sorrow, until there broke over me a sweet sense of his forgiving love. I received from God a new filling with the Holy Spirit. As the sun was wester, I went back to the road, found my horse, mounted it and went to my appointment. On the following day I preached with such new power to a vast concourse of people gathered on a hillside, that a revival broke out that day and spread all over Wales."

The above incidents should encourage Christians individually and collectively to draw nigh unto God, and to take hold of him for the needed blessings of his grace. Certainly God is the same today. Surely we, too, may have a fulfillment of this precious promise, "From this day I will bless you."

Reader: Will you seek him? Will you consecrate yourself unto the Lord this day and receive his blessing?

Continue to pray earnestly for a revival.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

There being no paper next week, on account of the Fourth of July skip, we are giving two Lessons this week.

Lesson I.—July 5, 1931.

Subject.—The Gift of the Holy Spirit. Acts 1:6-9; Acts 2:1-8.

Golden Text.—Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. Acts 1:8.

Time.—Pentecost, Sunday, fifty days after the Passover Sabbath, A. D. 30.

Place.—Jerusalem.

Introduction.—The outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the Church on the day of Pentecost was the greatest event that has taken place on earth since the resurrection of our Lord. It was his coronation gift to the church, in order that she might be wholly sanctified and equipped with power for future service. It was a glorious answer to his own high-priestly prayer for his disciples, as we find it recorded in John 17: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." He had suffered outside the gate of Jerusalem, in order to sanctify the people with his own blood; and now the gracious work was being done in the hearts of the little band of a hundred twenty.

It is hardly probable that the disciples understood what they were waiting for during the days of their stay in the upper room prior to the gift of the Spirit. It is true that Joel and other Old Testament prophets had foretold the coming of that great day. John the Baptist had spoken of it. Jesus had promised it on more than one occasion. Maybe they had some vague notions about it; but they could not know the facts till they had lived through them. This is demonstrated by the fact that in the present day men cannot understand this experience until they have entered into it.

We are not to understand that the disciples were strangers to the presence of the Holy Spirit prior to his coming upon them at Pentecost. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Jesus Christ makes a very emphatic statement concerning this in John 14:17: "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." This is not a distinction without a difference, as some have intimated. The disciples had the Spirit in several different offices before the day of Pentecost. He had convicted them of sin, assisted them to repent, helped them to believe, had declared their pardon, had regenerated them, adopted them into the family of God, and was bearing witness with their spirits that they were the children of God. What more could they need? That was all very blessed; but a greater day had come; and they received the Holy Ghost in his baptismal office. Glad Day! Glorious Day! A new dispensation of grace had begun in the Church of God, that of the Holy Spirit, the Vicegerent of Jesus Christ in our world. Jesus had done gracious things what time he walked among men; but the dispensation of the Holy Spirit was to surpass his dispensation. The night before his glorious crucifixion he told the disciples that it was expedient for him to leave them, in order that the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete, might come to abide with them forever. Read those wonderful, though little understood, words in John 14:12. The promise is so big that the church has ignored it. Beyond question the Master is referring to the dispensation of the Spirit when he promises his church a blessing that would enable her to continue doing the work that he was doing, and that she should do works even greater than his own.

Out of more than 500 disciples Jesus could get but 120 to tarry for the baptism with the Holy Spirit, that was to introduce them into the new dispensation. That seems strange; but not more so than the fact that after nineteen hundred years of Christianity, the church is almost utterly ignoring the baptism with the Holy Ghost. There are no words to express the sadness of this thing. Just as the Jews rejected the Son of God, so the modern church is rejecting the third Person in the Trinity. Jesus said to the Jews: "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life"; and well might the Holy Ghost say to the modern church: "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life more abundantly." A return to Pentecost is the only hope for the church and the world.

Comments on the Lesson.

6. When they therefore were come together.—This must have been one of our Lord's last interviews with his disciples before he went away; but we are not told where it occurred. Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel.—They could not forsake the idea of an earthly kingdom. Surely he would take the throne of David, and drive out their enemies. They were blundering; but Pentecost would give them a clear vision of a spiritual kingdom. Even now, for want of spiritual vision, the church is trying to establish an earthly kingdom; but it cannot come yet a while.

7. It is not for you to know.—Some things are hidden in the mind of God—things that we have no right to pry into. If he sees fit, they will be revealed in due time. "Power" here means authority.

8. Ye shall receive power.—Here we have a different word for power, the Greek word dunamis from which we get the word dynamite, being used. It signifies working power. But when would they receive this power? "After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." God has no other plan for imparting power to his church. The coming of the Holy Ghost would make them witnesses for Christ at home and abroad, even unto the uttermost part of the earth.

9. He was taken up.—That was a thrilling moment when the Lord of glory, wrapped in clouds of supernal splendor, passed through the heavens back to his throne on high. Read a bit further, and get the promise of the two heavenly messengers who stood by the disciples, clad in white apparel, that "this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." He is coming again.

2:1. The day of Pentecost.—This feast came fifty days after the Passover. Was fully come.—It began at sunset in the evening, and by nine o'clock the next morning it was "fully come." One accord.—They were in perfect harmony in love and faith and expectation. Beyond question, this is a prerequisite to the coming of the Spirit upon the church at any time.

2. A sound from heaven.—One of the manifestations of the Holy Spirit on that particular occasion. As far as we know, it was never repeated. This sound, as of the rushing of a mighty wind, filled all the room where they were assembled.

3. Cloven tongues.—Split tongues. Like as of fire.—I am not sure that anybody now living understands what this was. It is not said that these tongues were fire, but that they were like fire. It may have been another of the Spirit's manifestations. Like the "sound," it was never repeated on any other occasion. That "it sat upon each of them" is worth while, indicating that "God is no respecter of persons"—he has no pets, except as we are all pets.

4. They were all filled with the Holy Ghost.—This verifies the promise of Jesus in John 14:17: "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." If I understand the words of Peter in Acts 15:9, this baptism with the Holy Ghost "purified their hearts by faith." It certainly fulfilled the promise of Jesus in Acts 1:8, that they should receive power after that the Holy Ghost came upon them. Above all else, it brought to the Church a mightier dispensation of grace than she had ever known. It was her equipment for service. Began to speak with other tongues.—Not to jabber in some unknown tongue, but to speak the different languages of the strangers who had come up to Jerusalem to attend the feast of Pentecost; so that they all might understand the message of salvation. This manifestation was not present when the converts in Samaria received the baptism with the Holy Ghost, as far as the record goes; but it was repeated in the home of Cornelius and at Ephesus. Paul had no little trouble with it in the Corinthian church, where it assumed a false note. Like some of these other manifestations, it has long been withdrawn from the church. I have made the closest investigation possible to me; but if there is in the modern church any genuine speaking in tongues, I cannot find it. I have found some very good persons who were sincere in believing that they were speaking in some language that they did not know, but their speaking will not stand thorough investigation.

5. Dwelling at Jerusalem.—Not citizens of Jerusalem, but such as were there for the feast. Devout men.—They were not a wild rabble, but sincere Jews, descendants of men who had gone into the regions around the Mediterranean Sea to engage in business. "Out of every nation under heaven" is about equivalent to what we mean when we say at a convention: "They are here from everywhere." It is somewhat hyperbolic.

6. When this was noised abroad.—It is not stated that the peculiar manifestations of the Spirit were made known to the multitude—possibly not; but they did hear the disciples speaking in their own languages the wonderful works of God. Mark you, they were not jabbering in what some are pleased to call "unknown tongues." They were speaking intelligently the languages of the various Jews who had come up to the feast from foreign countries, who did not understand the language of Palestine. Were confounded.—They were amazed, because they heard the disciples speaking their own tongues "wherein they were born."

7. Are not all these which speak Galileans?—They thought all of them were from Galilee, though some of the disciples may have been from other parts of Palestine. They could not understand how these simple folk could speak so many languages.

The church has lost nothing by the passing of these mere manifestations. Her one need is the Spirit himself. If she has him, she can get on without sounds and fire and tongues.

Lesson II.—July 12, 1931.

Subject.—The preaching of the Apostles. Acts 4:1-14.

Golden Text.—We ought to obey God rather than men. Acts 5:29.

Time.—Shortly after Pentecost.

Place.—Jerusalem.

Introduction.—It would be interesting to have a fuller account of what occurred among the disciples between the gift of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost and the beginning of our present lesson. But we shall have to be content with the meager information furnished us. In the latter portion of the second chapter of Acts we have some account of the sermon Peter preached after the coming of the Spirit. It is very short, and perhaps gives only the gist of what he said; but the effect was powerful, resulting in the conversion of about three thousand souls. That was preaching the gospel with the "Holy Ghost sent down from heaven."

As we move into the third chapter we find Peter and John about to enter the temple at the hour of prayer. They have just come upon a very lame beggar lying at the gate of the temple, called Beautiful. He asks for alms; but Peter said: "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." There was a tremendous boldness in such faith as that; but God honored it, and the lame man was fully healed instantly. Of course, this healing produced an outburst of excitement; but it gave Peter a fine opportunity to preach Christ to the people, while John said the Amens. Our lesson begins right in the midst of this stir.

Comments on the Lesson.

1. As they spake unto the people.—The language indicates that both Peter and John were preaching; but from other words in the account I suppose Peter was doing the preaching, and John was endorsing all that was said. The priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees.—There is little doubt that this persecution was instigated by the priests. Nearly all persecution against God's people in all ages has been stirred up by the clergy. The priests were burning with envy against the very name of Jesus Christ. The Sadducees were angry because the two apostles were declaring the resurrection through Jesus Christ. They were materialists, and did not believe in any resurrection. Some of them are yet living in the camp of the Modernists. Note carefully the second verse of the lesson for this unbelief of the Sadducees.

3. They laid hands on them.—Put them under arrest. Put them in hold.—Put them in prison. They would have rushed them to trial at once before the Sanhedrin; but being even-tide, it was too late.

4. Howbeit, the two preachers had done a good day's work, for many of their hearers believed the Word. Five thousand.—There has been some difference of opinion as to whether two more thousands were added to the three thousand who believed on the day of Pentecost, or five thousand more were converted, bringing the number up to eight thousand. I see no way to settle the question, but am inclined to believe that this was a new group of converts. Peter was doing some great preaching. Really and truly, nothing is preaching, unless the preacher is so filled with the Holy Ghost that people are saved and sanctified under the message.

5 and 6. That was a rather dirty court to try an innocent man for his life. They were in the Sanhedrin and before it. Caiaphas is the chief character in the group, he being the high priest and a Sadducee at the same time. He was a bitter enemy of Jesus Christ and the disciples. Annas was father in law to Caiaphas. While the latter is called the high priest, the former seems to have been acting as such. We are not told who John and Alexander were. They were some big fellows among the high rabble mob of that gang of sinners.

7. Set them in the midst. Brought them before the Sanhedrin from the prison. By what power, or by what name, have ye done this?—The reference is to the healing of the lame man at the gate of the temple. Some courage needed now on the part of Peter and John. They will rise to the occasion. Not long ago a lady said to her pastor: "Why don't you preach holiness?" He replied: "I know that it is the doctrine of the Bible and of our church, but I shall not batter my head against a wall by preaching that unpopular teaching?" Poor fellow! He was a coward, and recreant to his trust. God wants men who are not afraid to suffer and to die.

8. Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost.—That is a prerequisite for all who are appointed to preach or to testify for God. Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel.—It was proper that Peter should recognize their authority and be respectful towards those in authority. We must always be, not for their sakes, but to uphold the law.

9. If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man,—Peter wastes no words on pre-ambles, but plunges immediately into the matter before the court. The court shall have the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

10. Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel.—I doubt if that court had thought of the opportunity they were furnishing Peter and John to scatter the message of salvation to the four winds of the nation. Their effort to suppress the gospel resulted in an explosion that scattered it abroad. Note that the prisoners did not hesitate to declare that they had healed the lame man through the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. We need to stay in the background with all our little nostrums, and lift up Jesus before men. There is too much of us, and too little of him in much of our modern preaching and teaching. "We are the people; and wisdom will die with us."

11. This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders.—A powerful figure. The Jews had set Jesus Christ at nought; but now he is the very cornerstone of the entire building, of the entire church. Peter was not mincing matters, but hitting hard. His words must have cut that gang to the bottom of their mean souls.

12. Neither is there salvation in any other.—All these modern cults that deny the virtue of the blood of Jesus Christ, and claim to save people by some other method are deceptions of Satan. All of them combined cannot save one sinner; but they are leading people into everlasting damnation by the million. We must be saved by the blood, or we shall forever perish. Away with Eddyism, Russellism, Modernism, Mormonism, Romanism, and every other ism and cult that tries to put something else into the place of the precious blood of the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

13. When they saw the boldness of Peter and John.—There is marvelous power in holy boldness. "Conscience makes cowards of us all," if we are morally unclean; but a wholly sanctified soul can face men and devils. Unlearned and ignorant men.—Yes, when measured by the schools, but mighty in the Scriptures when measured by God's standard of learning. All learning is farcical for the preacher, unless he knows God Almighty in his own heart. What we term education is mighty good in its place, but mighty bad out of its place. It is well to know books, but better to know God.

14. Beholding the man...they could say nothing against it.—A healed man was a demonstration of the truth of their message. A redeemed soul is a proof of the Deity of Jesus Christ and of the saving power of his blood. Every converted soul knows that he is God. The rulers would not suffer themselves to be saved from sin through Jesus Christ; but they could not gainsay the merit of his blood in the healing of the man before their eyes.

NOTICE.

In June 3 Sunday School Lesson there was a mistake, simply an oversight of proof reader, which we wish to correct. In the sentence, "It is a consolation to know that our Lord Jesus Christ endorses the Old Testament from Genesis to Revelation," should have been "Old Testament and New." Of course, our readers know this was simply a mistake too conspicuous to be charged to ignorance.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Rev. C. R. Crowe, for the past three and a half months has had an unusual experience with an infection on his right leg, but is now slowly improving. One of our good laymen, because of Bro. Crowe's condition, also because he is now one of our superannuated preachers, has arranged for him to sell "Heralds of a Passion," by Dr. Goodell. The book retails for $1.25, but Bro. Crowe can sell it for $1.00. Lest one should be misled by the word "passion," will state the book is no plea for emotionalism or sentimentalism or any sort, or an appeal to fear, or against criticism, high or low, but a holy passion for the souls of men. Send Bro. C. R. Crowe, 2725 Victor Place, Louisville, Ky., $1.00, get a good book and help one of our superannuated preachers, who has, on account of his peculiar affliction, had to cancel some of his summer engagements for meetings.

Rev. Andrew Johnson, of Wilmore, Ky., is engaged to conduct revival services in the Paul Rader Tabernacle, Chicago, Ill., June 30-July 10. The readers of The Herald in and around Chicago are cordially invited to attend these services.

Rr. T. M. Hofmeister closed a revival campaign in Phoenix, Arizona, which extended over a period of five and one-half months. The evangelist preached one to three sermons daily. He was assisted by Ralph Leonard Morris, chorister who has been with the evangelist for the past three years. At the close of the series of meetings the friends presented the evangelist with a Dodge Sedan car as a token of their love and appreciation. The Hofmeister Party are now engaged in a lumber tabernacle campaign in Lima, Ohio. The tabernacle seats three thousand people and a great revival is predicted.

"I am Available for meetings the last of June and all of July; will be glad to correspond with those who desire my services. Free will offering. Home address, 516 N. D Street, Oskaloosa, Iowa." Rev. C. W. Cody.

Wichita, Kan. The series of meetings conducted at the South Emporia Ave., Friends Church, with Wm. J. Murphy, of Boise, Idaho, was a period of fruitfulness and blessing. Wm. Murphy is a faithful servant of the Lord and his blending of message in song and the Word is very unique and honored of God. In spite of rainy weather and small crowds, fourteen found their way to Christ at the altar of prayer. We heartily recommend this Spirit-filled man.—Glenn and Velma Reece, Pastors.

Rev. W. Edmund Smith, who has finished a four-years' pastorate with the First Evangelical Church, Cambridge, Mass., is entering the evangelistic field. He has splendid testimonials from his former church, his presiding elder and others who have known him and his work for years. He is a graduate of one of the great universities in theology; enjoys and preaches full salvation through a second definite work of grace. He will be glad to assist any pastor or camp meeting association in revival work along definite holiness lines. Address, Rev. W. Edmund Smith, 37 Curtis St., West Somerville, Mass.

SUPREME SELFISHNESS.

By The Editor.

THE liquor traffic, in all of its phases, is the very limit of selfishness. No man manufactures or sells liquor for the love of God and humanity; it is always for the love of money, regardless of the will of God and the prosperity, peace and happiness of his fellowmen.

Men who undertake to make their living, or their fortunes in the making and selling of intoxicants, may bid farewell to that religion of the heart taught by our Saviour which loves God supremely, and fellowmen unselfishly. If there ever was a time when men could be Christians and, at the same time, engage in the liquor traffic, that time has passed. A long experience of tears and blood and ruin has taught us that, in the nature of things, the liquor traffic is in most positive conflict with the teaching and spirit of true Christianity.

In my boyhood distilleries were as numerous in the county as grist mills. They were always centers of idleness, drunkenness, profanity and everything that was detrimental to the highest interests of the community and all parties concerned in the manufacture, sale and drinking of liquor. I well remember when it was common in those days for drunken men to be galloping the road, cursing, firing their pistols, and terrorizing the people. There could be no gathering, picnic, circus, county court day, political meeting, county fair, or any sort of gathering of a large number of people, without drunkenness, profanity, vulgarity, fighting, bloodshed, and often death. Every one knows that the liquor traffic is evil, and that without limit. It destroys property; it destroys bodies and, worst of all, it destroys the souls of men. Above every other evil, it deserves to be driven out of existence.

We have come to a tragic time in the history of our country when all ministers of the gospel ought to be the outspoken enemies of the liquor traffic; all good law-abiding citizens, much less Christians, ought to condemn, without hesitation, and oppose the liquor traffic. They ought to vote for all forms of prohibition, and vote against all the allies of this nefarious, bloody, godless, inhuman business of making, selling and drinking intoxicants. Any political party that allies itself with the liquor traffic, in order to get the support and vote of the liquorites, and all of those dangerous and godless classes of humanity who, in utter selfishness ally themselves with the liquor traffic, therefore, with murder, and the wreck and ruin of humanity, ought to have the disapproval, contempt and bold, outspoken opposition and condemnation of all good citizens and, certainly, of all devout Christians.

If neither of the two great political parties will come out strong, clear, and absolutely for whole-hearted, energetic enforcement of prohibition laws, we need a new party of true statesmen, and men and women abreast with the best ideals and progress of the age, who will drive the present political parties out of existence and inaugurate a government that will enforce law, that will protect the home, women and children and men against the robbery and murder of the liquorites. The time has come when the good citizens, men and women, of this nation, ought to rise in holy wrath against all politicians and parties that will rally around the bloody banners of drunkenness and debauchery. There is not, and cannot be a blacker hypocrisy, a more untruthful and deceptive aggregation of human beings, than the people in this nation who are giving their time, their money and their souls to destroy our prohibition laws. They are godless, and know nothing of the true Christ and the unselfish love of humanity. To identify one's self with this lawless mob, is to proclaim one's self an enemy to God and man.

CAUSE FOR UNEASINESS.

IT is generally admitted and lamented that the church in these United States is, at the present time, to say the least, in a lukewarm state. Just now when so many forces of evil are uniting themselves with a bold, defiant aggressiveness to bring back the liquor traffic, with all of its many destructive and diabolical influences, it is cause for great grief and alarm that the church should appear to be without that zeal, life and power that should characterize the Church of God.

There is no question in the minds of this writer, but the Protestant preachers of these United States could save the situation, not only for Prohibition, but for the general welfare, the salting and illuminating of society, and the prosperity and happiness of the people every way. If there ever was a time in the history of this country when every preacher of every denomination should thunder against lukewarmness, wickedness, lawlessness, and the bold aggressiveness of the worst and most dangerous element in our country, that time is now.

An awakened, aggressive church with the love of God and humanity in their hearts, and the power of the Holy Spirit upon her, would be indeed, an army with banners marching to victory over all the forces of evil. What we need is a nation-wide awakening of the fear of God. The wholesome fear of God brings hatred of evil and love of righteousness, and changes every phase of life and conduct for that which is best and highest and most helpful among men.

One month of earnest preaching, sabbath morning and evening, against the tremendous evil influences that are rallying for the breaking down of Prohibition, and the bringing back of the liquor traffic, by the Protestant preachers of this nation, would give us an entirely new moral and spiritual atmosphere. It would create a new sense of obligation, reverence for God, respect for law, and a consciousness that we are our "brother's keeper."

One thing that should awaken and stir the preachers of this country is the fact that the politicians and all of these godless organizations for lawlessness, are undertaking to dictate to them what they shall, and shall not do. They want the preachers to keep quiet; to grandmammy around; to be good little fellows. They undertake to pet the preachers and flatter them by assuring them that they are too high and holy, and their mission is too sacred for them to have anything to say about politics.

The Prohibition question is a moral question; in fact, a deeply religious question, at the same time it is an economic question. Nothing is more degrading, wasteful and destructive of health, happiness, prosperity and peace, than the liquor traffic. These facts make it a political question in the highest and most important sense, and gives preachers and Christians not only a right, but thrusts upon them a duty to preach, to protest, to pray and to vote.

Your cheap politicians, mere demagogues, who are insisting that the preachers of this country shall not meddle with politics, are very careful to say nothing against the Roman Catholic Church meddling in politics. The way they cater to that great political organization, while they cry out in protest against the Protestant ministry having anything to do with politics, makes them the more contemptible, and a stench in the moral nostrils of all intelligent people.

True, the Catholic Church is a powerful political organization, and is united with, and an advocate of, the liquor traffic. The Pope in his broadcasting is very careful not to exhort the people to stand for sobriety, to see that the liquor traffic, with its blood and fire and ruin, is driven out of the world. Suppose he had issued some positive statements against the traffic in liquor; suppose he had exhorted priests and people to use all of their influence for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and the enforcement of all prohibition laws. Suppose he had given a threat of excommunication against cardinals, bishops and priests who unite themselves with the liquor traffic and the underworld to break down Prohibition, what a startling effect it would have had on the hypocritical politicians of this country. Even Raskob, the Pope's great American pet, would have turned a bit pale. The dirty Tammany crowd, practically all Romanists, would begin to run about like rats hemmed in a barn on fire. But no such thing has happened, or ever will happen. Those politicians who would keep Pro-

FACTS OF THE FIGHT.

THE fight for prohibition is not a battle, but a war. It calls for absolute conviction, intolerance of defeatism and a fighting determination to win which will not be denied. It is a war against an age-old evil which has blighted the nation for generations and scourged the world since the beginning of the agricultural era, an evil which Gladstone said has caused more deaths than war, pestilence and famine combined.

As in every war, it is the bounden duty of the government to exert "force to the uttermost," within the bounds of Constitutional privilege, in order that the will of the people, duly expressed according to the forms of our government, shall be made triumphant over crime. The prestige of the government is involved. Democracy is put to the test. The validity of electoral decisions is in question. In such a war the majority of the people, speaking through their government, have a right to ask and to expect the whole-hearted co-operation of every patriotic citizen without regard to his belief as to the validity of the prohibition theory. This is no time to discuss the theoretical aspects of prohibition; it is a time to defeat an impudent challenge to the majesty and authority of the United States Constitution.

I think this fact may be taken as final: Prohibition will never be repealed in this country until it is satisfactorily tried out from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico. If it were nullified or thwarted by obstruction, the fact would constitute a blot upon the pages of our history. This could only be erased by the triumphant restoration of the policy and its complete vindication by enforcement. It would be the duty of those citizens who believe that public questions in this country should be settled at the ballot-box by the election of representatives to Congress and the state legislatures to gird themselves once more for the fray, to reach the most remote districts and the most concentrated precincts with an appeal to every good citizen to rally in defense of the honor of the country, to pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor to unrelenting effort until that day, when it shall have been definitely established that Constitutional decisions cannot be changed by methods of obstruction or incitement to crime.

The issues of this contest being what they are, the friends of the prohibition law have a right to expect whole-hearted utterance and action on the part of their elected officials in municipality, county, and the nation. When the nation is at war, the leader who is neutral in thought or utterance degrades his citizenship, betrays the confidence of the people and stultifies his own manhood. No official connected with the government in recent years has ever been more splendidly right than was Attorney-General Mitchell, when he announced that so far as lay within his power, officials chosen to promote enforcement of the prohibition law should be men convinced of the wisdom of the policy and men who evidenced their loyalty to the Constitution by refusal to drink liquors manufactured and vended in defiance of the fundamental law. If that policy had obtained for the past ten years, if it had been maintained in spite of the efforts of politicians to fill the prohibition service and the offices of District Attorneys with law-defying wets, the federal enforcement of prohibition would today be infinitely beyond where it is. No man should be selected or elected to enforce this law who must work against his conscience to succeed. I have never known a real dry in charge of enforcement of the prohibition law in any area whose office was not administered with a degree of efficiency in striking contrast to that of offices directed by men who administered the law with their tongues in their cheeks, men who accepted graft or who turned a willing ear to the suggestions of wet politicians interested in protecting the activities of criminals. To expect a wet to enforce the prohibition law is as reasonable as it is to expect a wolf to guard a sheepfold.

The obstructive, rebellion-inciting, crime-exciting effort to establish a fait accompli of nullification and lawlessness; the effort to justify such a proposal by the doctrine of a "higher lawlessness," is a definite attack upon the liberties and privileges of the dry majority of people in this country. The rights attacked are the rights established by our forefathers at Valley Forge and Yorktown, the right to participate effectively in government, the right to make use of the franchise to achieve decisions which shall be effective in administration, respected by the minority until such time as the minority by winning the support of freemen to a constructive program shall itself become a majority. For generations the federal government permitted, protected and perpetuated the liquor traffic by a system of license. It did this despite the fact that this system violated every conviction of millions of people, imposed upon them grievous injuries and vast expenses to care for the burden of poverty and woe that the drink caused. At no time was the maintenance of this system challenged by methods of obstruction and crime by the prohibitionists of America. Saloons, where conducted under the protection of law, were safe from molestation; breweries and distilleries carried on their traffic without interference; the collectors of revenue were not assailed by criminally disposed dries. The merchants who saw profits diverted from their drawers to the till of the saloon, the church which found its work grievously interfered with by the liquor trade, the suffering wives and distressed mothers, respected the majority opinion that license was the best way of dealing with the liquor traffic. They sought relief slowly in appeal to the Christian conscience and the alert intelligence of the American voter, and patiently awaited the glad day when a convinced majority should by orderly process establish a different and better system.

WHAT DRIES HAD A RIGHT TO EXPECT.

These people have a right to expect that their victory, democratically achieved, shall be respected, just as they respected the right of the majority in the day when that majority maintained a system utterly obnoxious to them. Shall wet votes only be counted at the voting booth? Shall dry votes be ineffective when cast? Must decisions at the polls be of a certain character or else rejected as no decisions? The sons and daughters of the men who followed Washington with bare and bleeding feet will never consent to such a denial of their hard-earned freedom.

If ever a contest called for the loyalty of patriotic men and women in city and country, north, south, east, west, it is the present contest. Loyalty to law is not predicated upon belief in the wisdom of the law. The people of the United States may be wrong. Prohibition may be unwise, but it is an honest effort to do away with a terrible evil, an effort made after every other method of dealing with the problem has failed and a good citizen who does not believe in the wisdom of the policy should say, "Right or wrong my heart and my hand is at the service of the government. This policy must have a fair test. I will obey the law. I will advocate observance of the law. I will support enforcement of the law. If then prohibition fails, we can, with good grace ask its supporters to consent to the establishment of a different system."

EVERYTHING ELSE WAS TRIED.

We tried free trade in liquors and the country was debauched. We tried licensing it, and entrenched it in law and custom. We tried high license and the saloon which could pay the highest license was the saloon which protected gambling and prostitution, and was in alliance with every evil activity of the underworld. We tried local option and the liquor traffic laughed at county and state laws and poured in a stream of intoxicating liquors. We tried state prohibition and in many states the policy was wonderfully successful, but a federally-protected national trade used the mails to build up a great express and freight business in intoxicating liquors and poured a stream of propaganda against the law over state lines. We passed the Webb-Kenyon bill to protect dry territory and the brewers and distillers sent long trains of intoxicants through the state under protection of inter-state commerce and their liquors mysteriously leaked out in transit. The country districts closed their saloons, but their sons and daughters who went to the city to seek fame and fortune were debauched by the liquor traffic; and their taxes went to support institutions maintained for the relief of city delinquents and defectives. South Carolina tried government-ownership, selling liquor in packages which were not to be opened on the premises, but their purchasers gathered in other places and drank them to the detriment of law and order. The direct relation of the state to the liquor traffic resulted in scandalous corruption and intolerable conditions which the people rebuked by the enactment of a state prohibition law.

PARAMOUNT CLAIMS.

Prohibition has a claim upon the support of the dissenter because it came by democratic methods. It was preceded by thousands of local campaigns. It was a major issue in almost every legislative and congressional election for years before the constitutional amendment was submitted. Congress had been dry for several sessions and it passed numbers of dry laws before the the constitutional amendment came to a vote. Finally submitted, it had the support of more than two-thirds of Congress and was ratified by the legislatures of all but two states. We are told that the people have never really had an opportunity to express their opinion in regard to the policy, but they have gone to the polls and elected overwhelmingly dry Congresses time after time since the policy became law. It cannot be said that the period of experimentation was too short. It cannot be said that the methods used were unconstitutional.

The policy has a claim upon the support of the dissenter because of its idealism. It was the blessed hope of the nineteenth century. It was the product of prayers, the tears of mothers, the unceasing work of crusaders. If finally it should fail, that failure certainly should come only after it has been given every opportunity. The purpose of the law cannot be challenged. The immortal Lincoln in his famous Washington's birthday address said: "Whether or not the world would be vastly benefitted by a total and final banishment from it of all intoxicating drinks seems to me not now an open question. Three-fourths of mankind affirm it with their tongues and I believe all the rest acknowledge it in their hearts."

This vast benefit to mankind is the purpose of prohibition. Should any patriotic man be willing to take upon himself the responsibility of attempting to thwart a purpose so magnificent? Would it not be better to allow that purpose to fall by the weight of error in the policy itself rather than be hastened by obstruction and denunciation? It seems to me that the possible good of prohibition is clearly indicated. Indeed, I think it will be generally acknowledged in the light of the results of the law in the first year of its existence, and even today conditions may be invoked as indicating the enormous benefits from the law. Whoever objects, it remains true that the standard of living of the average man in America is vastly higher than it was under license. That the totals of insurance and savings have enormously increased, that home-building is more prevalent, colleges more numerous and overflowing, that high schools are bulging full, that banks and building are thriving, none can deny. Economists are almost unanimous in attributing this state of affairs in large part to the diversion of liquor expenditures from a wasteful trade to constructive and useful industry and commerce. Business men owe the prohibition amendment a vast debt of gratitude for the increase in buying power which it has yielded. I have sometimes thought that if in fact the amendment were to be repealed and a five billion dollar trade in intoxicants established, the men engaged in legitimate business in this country would within a few months be forced to inaugurate a prohibition campaign, which would overshadow anything of that kind attempted heretofore, for the stream of gold, which would flow into liquor establishments, would necessarily pass by the doors of the grocery and the drygoods store, the amusement house, the automobile establishment, and the bank.

A TWO-FOLD UNDERTAKING.

There are two things that had to be met in the temperance reform; the private appetite and the public traffic. The private appetite is controlled by sentiment, judgment, education, home training, religious standards and by the exercise of moral suasion on the will. If people are still drinking that may not be the fault of prohibition. It may be the fault of parental example, lack of home training, lack of moral suasion in the Sunday schools and churches, and a failure of the public schools in accordance with law to give instructions to the youth in the effect of alcohol, narcotics and opiates upon the human system. But why blame prohibition for our failure all along the line? Prohibition is the designed remedy for the evils of the public and legalized liquor traffic. Its purpose was to outlaw the making and selling of intoxicating liquor. If it stops the distillery, the brewery, closes the saloon, breaks up the power of the liquor traffic in public life, it has succeeded in its purpose. The temperance reform is a two-handed affair, not one-armed. It works through total abstinence for the individual and complete legal prohibition of the traffic in liquors as the duty of civil government. This is the "A B C" of the whole movement.

If I drink liquor I have violated the principle of total abstinence, but I have not shown that prohibition is a failure. If I sell liquor I have violated prohibition, but I have not proved that total abstinence is a failure. The two movements, though both a part of the temperance reform, are totally distinct. Judge of each by what it is intended to do. The lady who wrote me: "It seems since the war that everything is going bad; the colleges are just as sceptical; the churches are just as formal; the boys are just as rough and the girls bolder than ever; I don't see what prohibition has done," was not a logical thinker. Find out what prohibition was for and judge it by that—not by what it was never intended to effect. Those folks who persistently judge prohibition by abstinence and abstinence by prohibition standards remind me of a queer old bachelor in Illinois who wrote a letter of complaint to the corn syrup factory. He said, "I have taken four cans of your corn syrup; and my corns are not a bit better!"

Gladstone declared: "It is the province of government to make it easy for men to do right and difficult for them to do wrong." In testing what is wrong the public welfare is the supreme law. The license system confronted the poor man with the wide open saloon. It invited and urged him to go wrong. Prohibition makes it possible and even easy to go right. It is better to have to hunt evil than to be hunted down by it.

Prohibition has had timid handling by politicians and their puppets. Compromisers can never enforce this law. It is not the pastime of an hour, but the manly, hero-born, martyr-bred, Lincoln-like work of a lifetime. The defects in prohibition enforcement can never justify a citizen's drinking poison, patronizing bootleggers, or tramping under foot the law of the land he loves. He gets his life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness here, why bite the hand that feeds him?

Those political wets who take an oath of loyalty to their country's fundamental law, and violate it are as distinct hypocrites and perjurers as those who vote dry and drink wet. There is no difference in the obligation of wets and dries, if both took the same oath of fealty to the Constitution. An army officer or any official of the government who holds up his hand to God and swears to uphold the Constitution and the law, and then deals with bootleggers, has perjured himself, degraded his honor and is not fit for the public service. Men may violate the prohibition law if they choose. But every other law, human and divine, is subject to the same contingency. Stealing does not prove there should be no law against it. We don't propose to repeal the Ten Commandments because they are still violated. Prohibition at its worst is better than the license system at its best.

"But we want booze back." Well, we will help you bring it back when you show us who needs it! Is it the automobile drivers or the aviators, the railroad engineers or our college boys, the women of our homes or our children? In the old days a farmer told the Kansas legislature: "I have just seven good reasons for sticking up for prohibition—four sons and three daughters."

AN APPEAL TO FELLOW-CITIZENS.

And so I appeal to the dissenting portion of the public against the nature of much of the propaganda now being carried on to oppose prohibition. First, observe the law personally and in your family; then help enforce the law in your community; then if it be found to be a mistaken policy, repeal it and repeal it just exactly as it was first enacted by the Constitutional processes. Otherwise a shock will be felt throughout the structure of American government, a shock which will endanger the essential interests of every man who has a wife and children to be protected by law, whose bonds and business rest secure because of the stability of the American Constitution.

Prohibition is law plus administration. The duty of the federal government is to make use of federal judicial investigating and prosecuting agencies to enforce the prohibition law, with due regard to our federal form of government and the division of duties between state and nation. In this undertaking the amount of money to be spent, the extent of force to be employed takes secondary place. The flow of rum across the borders should be stopped, stopped without regard to the extent of the effort necessary to stop it; the diversion of liquors released under permit should be stopped, stopped without regard to the interests of wet politicians. The manufacture of liquors for the illicit trade should be stopped, stopped by decisive action. But it has never been my belief that the detail police work of prohibition enforcement should be done by the federal government; and, where it is necessary that such work shall be federally done, the fact constitutes an indictment of the state government which imposes that duty upon Washington. The people of any state have a right to protection from the liquor trade, a right which rests upon a constitutional basis; and if this right is not protected by the state government, it must be protected by the federal government. But primarily the duty rests upon the state and the municipality. I believe the time has come when the dries in every political division of the country should insist that sheriffs and county attorneys and mayors and police and local judges enforce the law or get out. The people are ready for such a movement.

Also I am willing to confess on the part of the dries that there has been a deplorable subsidence in educational effort. Individual drinking should be handled by moral suasion, by the appeal of the church and the school.

I have been struck by the failure of the opponents of prohibition to agree upon any program of legislation which they are willing to advocate as a remedy for the alleged ills of prohibition. If they offer us government control, we can meet the proposal with an indictment of the system based upon the experience of South Carolina and upon the various provinces of Canada. If they offer us a beer and wine system we need only point to the fact that this would automatically restore the entire liquor bill, would re-establish every problem of distribution and could further point to the fact that "of the ten European countries having the highest capita spirits consumption, five—France, Austria, Hungary, Germany, and Holland—have been also among the ten largest beer drinkers. Five—France, Austria, Hungary, Servia, and Rumania—have been among the ten largest wine drinkers. Everyone of the ten nations having the highest consumption of alcohol in Europe have been among the first ten of either the beer or wine group."

I call upon the federal government to be partisan in this war. No war was ever won by neutrality in thought or deed. Point every wet in office to the nearest exit. Pass the word down the line that the law is to be enforced without fear or favor. Tell the confused and puzzled citizen that prohibition ought to be enforced because it is the law and because it is a good law.

I call upon the states for loyalty to the nation. Let there be a local enforcement statute in every state code. Place in office in every state and county men who believe that the law can be enforced, and who will enforce it.

Our wet friends have tried drinking it up, defying law and Constitution and majority rule. They have adopted rebellion and incitement to rebellion. They have called for a referendum forgetting that we just had it in the nation and in every state. Now why not try obedience to law, submitting to constitutional government, practicing the Golden Rule, setting a safe example before the young in your family and among your neighbors. And to every mother with a child at her knee and every school-teacher, every minister, every moulder of opinion and leader of sentiment, I commend the words of Abraham Lincoln:

"Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of seventy-six died to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in the schools, the seminaries, and in the colleges; let it be written in primers, in spelling books and almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in the legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the nation."

WE ARE WINNING THIS FIGHT.

By Deets Pickett, Research Secretary, Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WE are winning this fight. Six months ago, I would not have made that statement with so much assurance. At that time, I was, like Andy, occasionally down in the dumps. We seemed to be getting the worst of it on every hand. Millions in money were on the other side and the anti-prohibition organizations disbursed large sums with a carefree exuberance. The metropolitan press distorted the prohibition news, abused us in the editorial columns, ridiculed us in cartoons; "jokes" about prohibition were the chief dependence in vaudeville patter. Even the movies, which perhaps have profited more than any other industry in the closing of the saloon, seemed to delight in biting the hand that had fed them. Mr. Raskob, lending large sums to the Democratic National Committee at the same time he gave thousands to the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, was still further obligating that unfortunate political organization to the Smith crowd by borrowing hundreds of thousands from the County Trust Company of New York, the president of which is Alfred E. Smith.

When I was a boy I played football and ran on a relay team. Along toward the end of the game, or about the time I was turning into the stretch in a race, the going would seem infinitely hard. My vision would be obscured, my heart would be pounding, my feet would seem to weigh fifty pounds each and I raised them with infinite labor at each step, feeling that it would be possible to make only one more stride. And then as I would turn into the stretch for the last hundred yards, there would be a rush of air into the deeps of the lungs, my vision would clear, my feet would grow light, and I would know that that blessed thing called the second wind would see me through.

We have got our second wind and we are going through to victory. From all parts of the country we get reports of large crowds in attendance at prohibition meetings. The demand for prohibition literature is unexampled. The young people, for a time confused by wet propaganda, are clearly manifesting an interest in the subject, with an open mind. Organization is being strengthened and during the coming winter, probably not less than two thousand important prohibition mass meetings will be held in various parts of the country.

The most encouraging development is the successful action of the federal government against Al Capone. This impudent racketeer who has amassed his millions, lord of vice and gambling, and the illicit liquor trade of Chicago, who has corrupted government and used his gunmen to the humiliation of good citizens, has at last been haled before a court. His wealth is largely dissipated, his activities are disorganized, and once again the United States has demonstrated that it is "the big shot."

Another encouraging development is the more aggressive attitude by the federal government. Election of Mr. Hoover by an unprecedented majority was made possible by the rolling up of millions of dry votes. For a time after his election, the Republican party seemed to think that it was necessary to placate the wets, and so an investigation of prohibition was arranged, and the anti-prohibitionists were assured that "abuses" in prohibition enforcement would be stopped. There was a general atmosphere of uncertainty, and the wets, encouraged, redoubled their efforts to show that prohibition must be repealed because it could not be enforced. For a time there was talk of the possibility of an accommodation between the wets and dries.

Now the lesson has been learned. We have been taught once again that the only way to deal with the anti-prohibition movement is to knock it down and push its nose into the mud. It respects no appeal to decency. Parley it interprets as a sign of weakness. It must be whipped decisively with the spirit of Andrew Jackson behind the punishment.

I want to deplore the apparent satisfaction with which some people view the prospect of a battle between the Democratic and Republican parties on this prohibition issue. There is no justification for believing that the Democratic party must be abandoned to the wets. Such men as Daniel C. Roper, Gov. White, Mr. Costigan, George Fort Milton, Cordell Hull, Senator Robinson, Senator Morrison, have no intention whatever of allowing their party to be forever branded with the brand of shame. At the recent meeting of the Democratic National Committee, in the words of Gov. Al Smith, Mr. Raskob was "kicked all around the room" because of his proposition that the Democratic party should be wet, and after his kicking he went off to Europe to get a medal from the Pope, for what I haven't the least idea. I do know that he should have a medal from the Republican party, for no man, living or dead, has ever done so much to injure Democracy as Mr. Raskob. It must be admitted that the Republicans are a smart bunch. They are the only political group ever smart enough to succeed in getting a Republican elected to the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee, where he has served his former political associates well by rending and dividing Democracy.

For the first time, the wets realize that if prohibition is repealed, something will have to take its place. Heretofore, they have acted and talked as if the removal of prohibition would simply create a blessed vacuum in which we would all exist in purity and joy, with the racketeers dead of discouragement and drink no longer the problem it has been since the beginning of the agricultural era.

And so the opponents of prohibition are beginning to tell about what will take the place of prohibition if, and when it is wrenched from the Constitution. Mr. Anderson wants an Americanization of the Bratt system of Sweden. I know Dr. Bratt and have been associated with him in the International Congress on Alcoholism. Mr. DuPont, the financial angel of the wet movement, wants something similar, but he is exceedingly liberal. He even wants to provide for an intermediate permit to buy liquors for boys and girls under age, to whom liquors could not be sold under the saloon system.

Have you ever noticed how the magnificent object lessons selected by the anti-prohibitionists have a way of moving further and further from the American people as the months pass? First, Gov. Smith and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler pointed to Quebec as an example for the emulation of the United States. They don't do it any more for the simple reason that the liquor situation in Quebec smells like a last year's egg and the American people have caught the odor. Then we heard nothing but the success of government control, so-called, in Ontario. Now the American people have found out that this means control of the government by the liquor traffic, and that liquor is acting just exactly according to its nature in Ontario, as it always does everywhere. Truth crushed to earth will rise again and it has had time to rise in Canada, with the result that throughout Canada we have found indictable offenses to have increased 38% since the median prohibition year of 1922, convictions for drunkenness 32%, violations of the liquor act 79% and deaths due to alcohol two and one-half times. There is more murder, more manslaughter, more assaults. In two years, the sale of liquor increased 31%, jail population 55%, industrial accidents 32%, highway fatalities 42%, crimes against women 76%. Those statistics come from a new bulletin on liquor control in Canada published by the Bureau of Statistics, Ottawa.

Now I think the people of Canada are behind us in some things and I say that just to save my pride before admitting that they are a long way ahead of us in some other things. One way that they are ahead of us is in knowing how to organize government and in getting loyal support for the government when it is organized. If we got such results from liquor control in Canada, what results would we get in the United States, where I blush to say, we must admit we are a more lawless people, with a more general corruption in government.

Now the liquor interests are getting away from Canada to Sweden and talking about Dr. Bratt and his scheme and what a wonderful success it is. Their next step, I suppose, will be to Iceland and then to the North Pole, and when they get that far I am going to leave them and come back home and quit arguing the question. The further away they get, the further they go from the keen scrutiny of the American people and the better they think their chance is of fooling someone.

What is the essential element of the Bratt System in Sweden? It is government sale of liquor just as it is in Ontario. Do we want the United States government to sell liquor? Our consciences gave us no rest when the United States licensed private citizens to sell liquor and certainly we will never consent for the government itself, of which we are a part in our sovereign citizenship, to label out poison to its citizens, to be directly responsible for the writhings of the alcoholic, for suicide, broken homes, hungry children, and all the woe and desolation of the liquor traffic. The people of Sweden are comparatively few in number. They are almost entirely of the same race. They have been trained under royal houses to obedience. Transplant the Bratt System in any form to the United States and it will mean this: that in New York City, Tammany Hall will have the naming of the men who buy the liquors from the distilleries and breweries, of the saloon-keepers, and the bar-tenders, and the thousands of other people connected with the production and distribution of that drink; that in Philadelphia these perquisites and privileges will be in the hands of the sweet-smelling Republican machine of that city; that in Chicago, Mr. Cermak, who is worse than Thompson ever was, will be able to gather into his grip the thousands upon thousands of vicious characters which naturally gravitate to the liquor business, building out of them a machine which would perfect an unbreakable political control and debauch that city as it has never been debauched before. Bring such a system to Baltimore and it will mean the creation and placing in the seats of power of an organized system of racketeering from which the people could not escape without bloodshed and plenty of it. The opportunities for graft, for the entrenching in protected places of the most dangerous criminals, is greater under such a system than under any other system of dealing with the liquor traffic and over it all is spread the mantle of the government's sanction.

"Oh," the defenders of some of these systems say, "we will discourage the consumption, especially of hard liquors, by high prices." Their arguments defeat themselves. The high price, just to the extent that it discourages the purchase of government liquor, would encourage the purchase of illicit liquor. We do not need to rest upon theory. We know that in Ontario and in Sweden these systems have spread the drink habit to young people in an appalling way and so far from discouraging the consumption of hard liquors have seen that consumption mount higher.

The Church has a conscience on this question. It is fighting for the rights of housewives, the rights of little children, the right of men to freedom from temptation. It is fighting for the prosperity of legitimate industries which bring happiness to the American home, opposing the formidable competition of a government-protected drink trade. In the words of the General Conference, "The liquor traffic can never be legalized without sin." On that impregnable logic we take our stand.

EDISON ON PROHIBITION.

HERE is probably no one more entitled to speak from the supreme bench of the industrial world than Thomas A. Edison. If the influences that he has created and set in motion in the industrial world suddenly cease, consternation, if not chaos, would reign. Therefore, what he has to say on a problem like Prohibition just naturally compels every normal mind to give attention.

During the hearings before the judiciary committee of Congress at Washington last spring, Mr. Edison sent the following message from his home in Florida: "I still believe Prohibition is the greatest experiment yet made for the benefit of man."

After a visit with Mr. Edison, he readily granted the request that five or six fundamental questions be submitted to him for answer, with the understanding that they be given any publicity desired.

As a result, the following questions, as propounded by James K. Shields, and answered by Thomas A. Edison, are given:

Question 1—"Do you approve of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States? If so, why?"

Answer—"Yes, it is a necessary aid to permit practical enforcement of Prohibition all over the country."

Question 2—"Has it helped the industrial and economic life of America at home and strengthened the industrial standing of our nation abroad?"

Answer—"Yes, and to a greater extent than realized."

Question 3—"In your judgment, are children better fed, clothed, and educated since the coming of Prohibition than they were before?"

Answer—"In my judgment, I would say, decidedly, yes. In support of this opinion and in this connection let me cite my experience as a manufacturer, which is similar to that of other manufacturers. On pay days, before Prohibition, hundreds of pale faced women, shabbily dressed, some with faded shawls around their heads, appeared at our factory at West Orange. They were waiting to get some of their husband's money before he got to a saloon. Within a year after the amendment not a single woman appeared. Surely we Americans do not want a return of this state of affairs. Undoubtedly the condition of the children, although they are perhaps a little better off than she, because she will do anything, even to the giving up of her life, to protect them."

Question 4—"What attitude should the womanhood of America hold toward Prohibition, and why?"

Answer—"Woman is the custodian of the home and the children. She certainly, if a normal woman, does not desire the introduction of narcotics into her home, which in many cases changes a humane man into a brute."

Question 5—"Are the boys and girls of America more likely to develop a higher degree of physical and mental fitness, and become in every way better and more useful citizens under national Prohibition of the liquor traffic, or under the old licensed system, or any form of state or government control?"

Answer—"Yes; they certainly cannot develop on alcohol and other narcotics."

Question 6—"Should the 18th Amendment be retained as a blessing to our American homes today and to those of future generations?"

Answer—"Yes, enforcement is getting more practical day by day. We now attack the large manufacturer right in our midst instead of men with flasks and home brews."

When Thomas Edison speaks, the world can be sure it is not listening to the voice of a bigot, a fanatic, or political expediency, or selfish greed, but of one who speaks as man to man but of long experience just such a voice as the youth of America needs to hear, and be filled with gratitude that the old liquor traffic is an outlaw and take warning against ever helping to bring it back.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

INDUSTRY AND PROHIBITION

AN INTERVIEW WITH HENRY FORD.
BY PROF. IRVING FISHER.

EMPHASIZING the efficacy of private prohibition of drink, enforced by employers in business and industry and aided by governmental prohibition of the liquor traffic, Henry Ford has replied to three questions put to him by Irving Fisher, chairman of the Alcohol Information Committee, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City. In the course of his reply Mr. Ford remarks, "If the impossible should occur—I mean the return of legalized liquor—its first effect would be a widespread reduction of wages, due to the demoralization of labor which liquor always causes."

Mr. Ford concludes by expressing his conviction that "This present depression, falling as it does on a prohibition population, is going to result in more sober safeguards for the future than could have been possible had our people drunk their way through this experience."

BIG BUSINESS GREATEST FACTOR IN ENFORCEMENT.

Professor Fisher's questions were occasioned by Mr. Ford's recent statement that big business and not the government eventually will be the greatest factor in prohibition enforcement, and that the government, as Mr. Ford stated, "must be back-stopped for complete control." "I ask these questions," Professor Fisher said, "in order that we may give out the facts as they appear to you as a representative American industrialist." The questions follow:

"1. Is not business, big and little, already the greatest factor in prohibition enforcement?"

"2. Are not business and industry most helped in enforcement where there is government enforcement also?"

"3. Are not sales of goods both for cash and on installment, held up most successfully where the saloon, or its equivalent under whatever name, has been abolished?"

Mr. Ford answers the three questions as follows:

"1. I believe business, big and little, has more to do with prohibition enforcement today than has any other agency. Business began to require sobriety before prohibition was thought possible.

"Railroads and industries found sober employees necessary to safe and profitable operation. Besides, those employers who were anxious to improve the condition of their men by increasing their wages soon discovered that no business can afford to pay high wages to intemperate or drinking workmen.

"The Ford Motor Company raised its minimum wage first, and then undertook to insure the sober use of it.

"If the impossible should occur—I mean the return of legalized liquor—its first effect would be a widespread reduction of wages due to the demoralization of labor which liquor always causes.

"It is sometimes said that we do business in countries where government is still partner in the liquor trade. Our answer is that we can do business nowhere with drinking workmen. Our employees everywhere are sober men.

"2. Of course, business has been vastly helped by the prohibition law in securing sobriety. The law gives us a weapon. We are no longer left to ourselves in trying to get decent conditions for families, but have the support of government. And if the officials appointed to enforce prohibition were more successful in their efforts, it would be of great benefit all round.

"3. No one questions the great inflow of goods into homes which were formerly bare because of liquor.

"No one questions the great increase in general business since prohibition came. The liquor business made money for a few—took money and money-ability from very many. But general business since prohibition has resulted in the kind of trade that benefits all who engage in it—producer and consumer.

"I am certain that this present depression, falling as it does on a prohibition population, is going to result in more sober safeguards for the future than could have been possible had our people drunk their way through this experience. The people are soberly thinking. And that is the most hopeful sign we could have."—American Issue.

IS PROHIBITION RIGHT?

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

THE above strikes one as a foolish, not to say, absurd, question. But it is not so unreasonable as one might at first suspect. If Prohibition is right then we ought to have it, no matter what the cost. If it is wrong every man, woman and child should do their utmost to destroy it.

In the first place, we contend that Prohibition is right because it seeks to protect the weaker by removing from him the temptations which appeal more strongly to him than any other. Paul said, in referring to his responsibility for his fellowman, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat, lest I make my brother to offend." To paraphrase this scripture, let us say, "If strong drink make my brother to offend, I will, so far as in me lies, destroy strong drink, lest I make my brother to offend." I contend that this is a good twentieth century interpretation of the responsibility that looks every voter in the face, as he goes to the polls to cast his decision as to whether he will make it easier for his fellowmen to live sober, upright lives, or whether, by his vote, he shall place the temptation of the bar-room in the path of that man, who when sober, is a good husband and father, and when intoxicated is unable to see that any one has rights but himself.

Prohibition is right because of the savings it yields to the laboring class. In the year 1917 there was consumed of all kinds of liquor per capita, 19.95 gallons; in other words, there was reported to the government 2,094,729,087 gallons of all kinds of liquor. At the same rate too, with our increased population, we would be drinking more than 2,400,000,000 gallons of intoxicating liquors. In the face of these facts, the bootleggers say that we are supplying more liquor today than we did before prohibition. These stupendous drink statistics mean an enormous expendi-

Responsibility for Sins of the Rulers

James B. Pritchard, Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals.

Text: What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought a great sin upon them?—Exodus 32:21. (American Standard).

IN its inception, prohibition of the liquor traffic was primarily a moral question. The Eighteenth Amendment was adopted because the people of the country believed the use of liquor to be wrong. The wet and dry controversy has been deluged with various arguments—economic, social, political; but for the Christian the reason of prohibition remains one of the conscience.

The only thing which will effectively combat the highly organized and monied opposition, is a revival of personal responsibility on the part of Christian men and women in this paramount matter of moral concern which confronts our Government.

After the remarkable deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage, God called Moses up into a high mountain. Aaron was in command of the people. Things were going smoothly; there was no war; Moses was speaking with Jehovah. In the time of feasting and making merry, the people forgot that it was Jehovah who had led them out of bondage, and brought to Aaron their gold to be made into the form of a calf. When Moses returned and found the people worshipping an idol, he was filled with anger, and said to Aaron, "What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought a great sin upon them?" But Aaron answered, "Thou knowest the people, that they are set on evil." And it came to pass that three thousand men suffered the penalty of death for what they had done to Aaron to bring sin upon the people. They were responsible for the sins of their ruler—probably many of them had only stood by and raised no objection. The people had made the calf which Aaron had made.

It is not at all strange that an analogous condition should exist today in the life of our country. Many leaders of the American people are guilty of tolerating lawlessness, of using public office for personal advancement and of leniency in prosecuting those guilty of crime. As a consequence, these officers have had the blame in the evils which have arisen. Thousands of American citizens have used this shallow excuse to alleviate their conscience in the matter, and have settled back in complacent indifference, calmly to watch the outcome of the experiment. A revival is needed—a revival of personal responsibility for a clean community in which to live.

The people adopted prohibition because they were unwilling to have a part in the sins of the rulers. Prior to 1920, the Government of the people of this Christian Nation gave its consent to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. In return for this privilege, the liquor interests were forced to pay to the Government a tribute in the form of a license fee. The Government assented to 277,790 open saloons in this country. The Government allowed the brewers and distillers to produce each year approximately 20 gallons of intoxicating liquor for every man, woman and child to the tiniest baby of the country. The Government had a part in the waste, through the consumption of liquor, of more money than the total amount spent for federal administration of government and public education (1903). The Government permitted a trade which caused a waste of human life and soul which cannot be estimated. The people supported the Government in this policy until a majority of citizens placed an Amendment in the Constitution which prohibits the Federal Government of offending against the best interests of the people by toleration of the drink trade.

Prohibition was the greatest moral triumph of a half century. It came through men and women giving their very lives in the crusade. Some preached locally and throughout the country; others gave liberally of their means. So great was the evil of the enemy, conscience would not allow one to remain idle, nor to muffle his objection in the matter.

In fact, at times, the Government itself was dominated by those who were directly engaged in the liquor traffic. The liquor men boasted that each saloon controlled at least ten votes. In 1904, when there were 250,000 saloons, the estimate would account for 2,500,000 wet votes. Add to these, 500,000 more which were probably accounted for by the wholesalers. This was enough to hold the balance of power in the presidential election of that year. The liquor business was a political institution. Christian people could not continue to pray, "Lead us not into temptation," and support a government which would permit a saloon in the path of the young men and women of the country.

In the present crisis, many of the rulers are guilty of sin for which the people will have to account. Legislators have been forced to vote wet because of the feeling that their constituency was of that opinion. Ask the congressmen and legislators, "What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought a great sin upon them?"—sin of non-enforcement of law; sin of inadequate legislation; sin of repeal of measures restricting evil practices. They have been wise to answer as did Aaron, "Thou knowest the people." Those wet representatives are very careful to make known the fact that the people of their territory are opposed to reform. They have rightly placed the responsibility. Those quiet and retiring citizens of the community who never had the courage to be heard in objection, are responsible for the wet votes in Congress. They will have to account for the temptations open to the younger generation in the six States which have repealed their enforcement law.

The forces which are opposed to this great reform for which Christian men and women have prayed for years are using every channel to destroy it. Metropolitan newspapers having millions of circulation are outspoken for the abolition of prohibition. Sixty-four per cent of the circulation of the daily newspapers is wet in policy; thirty-two per cent is dry. The newspaper is the greatest educational force outside of the public schools. People believe what they read. Three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, wet propaganda comes to the homes of millions of good people of this country. The radio in practically every home brings anti-prohibition speeches—some under the subtle guise of sermons of religion.

The opposition is making itself heard. The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment is continually directing its money against the enforcement of the prohibition Act. During the first two months of 1931, the A. A. P. A. spent over $103,000 in the fight to destroy the Eighteenth Amendment. Thousands of dollars are expended in the production of literature to destroy restrictions, but not one thing is said about the evils of drink or discouraging the use of liquor. Over against this situation, dry organizations are financially embarrassed, and supporters are lacking in certain sections. "What did the people do?" is still the paramount question in this mighty reform.

Shall not this year mark the time of repentance of thousands of Christian people for the sins of their rulers. Ministers should guard against the sin of preaching less than the truth. Laymen should spread literature to those voters who never enter the church. Groups of men and women should organize to fight the evils in the seats of authority in their own community. Young people's societies should study the question of their responsibility to the rulers and to the Government.

Our fathers went westward to find a better country. Geographical frontiers were expanded and enlarged to establish a better environment for sons and daughters. The time has come when expansion of geographical frontiers is impossible. We must seek a better country in a moral and spiritual sense. Frontiers of evil must be overcome. There must come into the minds of the Christian people a new realization of their moral accountability for the actions of their representatives. The people are responsible. The people made the calf which Aaron made.

Facts From the Firing Line.

Irving Fisher, the well-known political economist of Yale, says that Prohibition has saved the people of the United States at least six billion dollars annually.—Prohibition at Its Worst, Irving Fisher, 159.

"Everything in the United States is keyed up to a new pace which started with Prohibition. This speed would be impossible with liquor. There is no chance of modification. If the law were changed we'd have to shut down our plants."—Henry Ford, in an interview at Sudbury, Mass., August, 1928.

"I am completing my thirty-fourth year as high school teacher and principal here," said Gilbert Raynor of Brooklyn, "and I have never known a time when our young people were as free from the blighting effect of intoxicating liquor as now."

Don't Let Them Fool You.

Before prohibition the breweries and distillers made 2,095,535,005 gallons of liquor. That meant an annual average consumption of 19.95 gallons of liquor for every man, woman and child to the tiniest baby in the United States.

This before prohibition rate would make the consumption today 2,400,000,000 gallons. If every automobile in the United States were to transport 100 gallons of this liquor there would still be 100,000,000 gallons untransported.

It would also mean a "grand parade." Allowing eight feet between cars this would mean 136,363 miles of cars or over 45 strings of automobiles stretching across the United States.

There are not enough bottle factories in the United States to bottle all this for the bootleggers.

You are not fooled, are you, when they tell you there is more drinking than before prohibition?—Iowa Champion.

The Present Situation

F. Scott McBride, D. D., General Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, said:

"We have the Amendment. We have the law for its enforcement. Congress is two to one dry. Our President in the White House wishes prohibition to succeed.

"Prohibition is under Civil Service. Commissioner Amos W. W. Woodcock is in charge of prohibition, under the Department of Justice. He is a Dry. Dr. James M. Doran is in charge of permits and industrial alcohol, under the Treasury. He is also a Dry. These two men are efficient and faithful.

"The Wickersham Commission has reported. It opposed repeal, the return of the saloon, Government sale and modification. It urged better co-operation from the states and that the Federal Government give a more aggressive program.

"This situation and the task challenges the Drys as never before. Will they make good?"

Evangeline Booth on Prohibition.

WHEN Miss Evangeline Booth, Commander of the American Salvation Army, was recently in England, the Manchester Guardian asked her for two articles setting down her personal experiences of prohibition in the United States.

"The report of lawlessness in the United States," said Miss Booth, "should be read in the light of history. It is a drama that covers a century.

"In 1900 the rate for homicide was 2.1 per 100,000 of population. Under the regulation of liquor that rate rose rapidly to 7.5 in 1919—that is, it was more than trebled. Such crime is, as it were, cumulative, and once permitted, tends to increase by its own momentum. But despite the moral disturbance of the war and all that we have heard about bootlegging, the rate was in effect stationary at 8.6 in the year 1925—a figure which means that the whole of these illegalities and degradation of public life, including a high rate for murder and banditry, were antecedent to Prohibition, and, indeed, created the situation with which Prohibition has to grapple. The question is not whether Prohibition has led to lawlessness. The only question is as to the extent to which the enforcement of Prohibition is progressively restricting the lawlessness organized by the liquor trade before this measure was adopted. Before prohibition and after prohibition the drink trade, legal or illegal, has flourished most where crime also has been most prevalent.

"NOT A FAILURE

"Faced by prohibition, the liquor trade wherever it is carried on, and in whatever form, with its associated less respectable enterprises has been mobilized as a solid unit of opposition. Every weapon of ridicule and of misrepresentation has been brought into play against 'the noble experiment,' and in particular, the avenues of publicity have been filled with assumptions that Prohibition is a hypocritical failure. That is what liquor in Europe wants Europe to believe, but for Great Britain, confronted by a serious industrial situation, it is important, surely, to study the facts of the case."

Miss Booth here speaks of the economic benefit of the policy and says that in one great corporation employing 101,000 workers, there were only thirty men discharged in 1927 for intoxication, whereas in 1915 there were 202 employees out of 8,755 dismissed for drinking, or 2.31 per cent. In 1925, only 118 men out of 13,100 were so dismissed, or .89 per cent. In 1911, the number of discharges for liquor on an elevated railroad in New England was 81. In 1926, it was 8.

"The population of the United States is today 122,000,000. A reasonable estimate of the position is that 100,000,000 people are keeping the law. Of the remaining 22,000,000 we may assume, perhaps, that half are well-to-do and half are of the wage-earning class. From these figures, sufficiently near the mark to form a basis for judgment, it will be seen at once that statistics may be very misleading to the eye. Suppose that each of the 22,000,000 wets spends a dollar a week on liquor, it would work out at over $1,000,000,000, or £200,000,000 a year, yet for each consumer it would only mean one drink every three days."

Miss Booth states as her opinion that under the Eighteenth Amendment, consumption of liquor has been enormously reduced from the pre-prohibition level of 22.66 gallons per capita annually, and she quotes Thomas Edison as being of the opinion that the liquor law is sixty per cent enforced, which is rather higher than the enforcement of many other laws. Miss Booth continues:

"The enormous decrease of expenditure is reflected in statistics, the meaning of which is unmistakable. In 1919 there were 18,000,000 saving accounts, totalling $13,000,000,000. Ten years later there were 53,000,000 accounts, totalling $28,500,000,000. The sensational increase in insurance tells the same story. When the Eighteenth Amendment was carried, the amount of insurance was under $30,000,000. It is now over $100,000,000,000. It has more than trebled, and the numbers of holders of stocks and bonds doubled.

"Among numerous testimonies, here is one from a firm where there used to be 50 to 100 wives after every pay-day asking for advances because the husband's wages had gone to the saloon. In three years under prohibition there were two such applications. I can testify to the fact that such instances could be found in every centre of industry from coast to coast."

The Salvation Army, which is feeding 35,000 persons a day in New York, finds the relief problem much simplified after the open saloon has been closed, according to its commander. "If a law is 90 per cent enforced, the American claims it is 30 per cent a success," says Miss Booth. "The Englishman answers that it is 10 per cent a failure, but the real question is not whether 'anyone can get it' but how many people do get it. When the theaters are closing on Broadway, the throngs go to the ice cream counters and cafes. In the smoking room of a Pullman train, some traveller may pull a flask from his hip pocket, but the main body of passengers travel for days and nights, taking their meals en route without indulging in any breach of the law."

She states as her opinion that the workers of the United States "have been benefited beyond all expectations by the Eighteenth Amendment. A new era has been inaugurated.

"In Chicago we have two hotels; respectively, they accommodate 511 and 250 men. Ten years ago one-third of these men would have been described as drunks. On a given Sunday not long ago, selected because Sunday falls on a week-end, it was found that there were six drunks only. In January, 1930, the larger of these hotels was subjected to an unforeseen test. Owing to a report of smallpox in the city, all of the men were vaccinated without notice by an independent physician. Not one man was found to be under the influence of liquor—this in Chicago. On February 26, 1927, the Associated Press reported that in Chicago the two or three drunks per week did not justify the continuance of the Night Court, which hitherto had sat regularly to deal with such cases.

"From industrial homes and other institutions and from stores for the disposal of second-hand goods the verdict is all in the same direction. In New York City the famous night consecrated to rescue of drunks from streets and parks has had to be abandoned. There were not enough drunks in the streets and parks to justify that special evangelism. The experience of many charities tends in this direction."

Formerly, says Miss Booth, the Bowery in New York was notorious as the great crime center of the metropolis, if not of the country. There were four saloons to every block. The lodging houses in those days were notorious for the peddling of rum, dope, stolen goods, and debauchery. Prohibition has driven all this illicit traffic under cover and out of sight.

"There was much bootlegging going on in the days of the saloon—more than in these days. In fact, I have had policemen, some of them now retired, tell me that the Bowery and Third Avenue was a veritable hell on earth from the vice and brawls that went on, not only from the gangsters and the tough boys of the neighborhood, but many families as well.

"A great change has come over the working man. They have gotten away, more or less, from the idea of the treating habit. They have gotten away from the habit of visiting the corner saloon; they are now saving their money, a fact which can be corroborated by the savings institutions, and some of the largest in New York City are located on the Bowery. There are more banks on the Bowery today than there are places, where drink can be bought. I am speaking of the Bowery itself, not counting the intersecting side streets. There are more places of worship on the Bowery than speakeasies. There are more restaurants and coffee-houses; in fact, the Bowery is the headquarters of jobbers who supply equipment for the 'Coffee Pot' in greater New York. They are the substitutes for the saloons."

The Liquor Fight.

A long, long time was devoted to the discussion of the temperance situation. There is a good deal of restlessness in the church as to the ways the anti-liquor fight is being carried on by those who rely most on the support of the churches. Probably all the criticism of such fighters has point, and probably none of it is altogether convincing. In a fight like this it is not possible to find perfect instruments, and if it were the instruments would not be worth using. Complaint is going through the church that the statements of the Methodist Board of Temperance are not as meticulously exact as they would be if they were made by persons meticulously exact. At least that is about the gist of the discussion as I caught it. The point which this criticism overlooks is that any exaggeration by the foes of the liquor traffic today is likely to be, in fact, an understatement.

Added to this is the curious notion which many of us seem to have as to what the representation of the Methodist Church by a Methodist official means. The Board of Temperance is commissioned by the Methodist Church, through a group selected by the General Conference, to wage war on the liquor traffic. The man in the center of the battle is usually the chief authority as to what weapons to use. Will I accept the directions of the Board of Temperance, or of the Anti-Saloon League, as to what candidate to vote for? Not necessarily. I will not vote for the agents of predatory and anti-social business interests if they are as dry as Cromwell's gunpowder, and if they come with endorsements from Board and League and Church officials. That, however, does not prevent me from saying that the Board and the League represent me in putting before the country what they think best for the victory over the foe. General Grant used to say that in war it is poor strategy to use means popular with your enemies. A most popular move with the liquor traffic would be to close down the Methodist Board of Temperance. As for standing for the Board, we can do that within the rational meaning of representation, without accepting the Clip-sheet as a fifth Gospel.

Incidentally, the discussion among the bishops showed something that newspaper publishers might well take to heart, namely, the lack of confidence the country over in the statements of the wet journals. Concerning the propaganda power of the greater wet journals and the effect they are producing, we humbly point out that readers today by the hundred thousand are discounting the utterances of wet journals to an appalling degree. Of course that means nothing if the publisher has no particular ideals. If the wet publisher has any ideals left, however, he would better ask himself the simple question as to how seriously the public is taking his paper, not as a propaganda agent, but as a truth teller.—From Bishop Francis J. McConnell's report of the recent meeting of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church...

testant preachers and the Protestant Church out of politics, are just as eager to keep the Roman Catholic Church in politics, for they know how to cater to the dictation of that tremendous liquor oligarchy and secure its sympathy, support and vote.

Would God, the Protestant preachers of these United States would wake up and thunder the truth. Suppose there are some powerful ecclesiastics and godless laymen who would oppose and persecute them; a bit of persecution would be good for the ministry now. Let something come that will wean them from the world, to bring them closer to Christ, to put iron into their blood and holy fire into their hearts, and the wholesome effect on the ministry, the church and the people would be beyond all possible calculations.

There is a great element in Methodism in this country who do not intend to be dictated to by other Methodists who ally themselves with Roman Catholicism, degenerate millionaires, and the vast underworld to break down and destroy Prohibition, and bring back the liquor traffic. It is high time that men and women who own their own souls, who are not the slaves of any power in all the realm of the Devil and his cohorts, to put on the whole armor of God, draw their swords, and go into battle.

Oh, thou great, merciful and mighty God of the universe, in the name of Jesus Christ, and for the sake of downtrodden, sin-bound, liquor-blasted humanity, awaken the preachers, arouse the church; move mightily upon our nation and save us from the blight and curse of Rum and Romanism.

"Prior to National Prohibition intemperance was present in the homes of 47.7 per cent of the families known to this society. In 1922, 1923, 1924, and 1925 the percentage had dropped to 20.2, 23.3, 21.9 and 18.9 respectively." —U. S. Children's Bureau, "Social Service Review, Sept., 1927.

AN UNWISE POSITION.

SOME of the strong advocates of prohibition who are traveling the country making speeches, are devoting much of their time endeavoring to convince and assure the people that it is now, and ever will be, impossible, to remove the Eighteenth Amendment from the Constitution of the United States.

This is worse than an unwise waste of time. This is quieting the fears of the people, rather than arousing them to an appreciation of the tireless aggressiveness of all of those forces united against our prohibition laws. There are tremendous forces at work, in fact, a remarkable combination of forces are united to tear down, eliminate and trample under foot all laws that would interfere with the making, selling and drinking of intoxicants. These forces have immense money power at their command. They have secured control, on this subject, of a very large percent of the daily press and monthly magazines of the country.

It should be remembered that a number of millionaires are very eager to bring back the traffic in intoxicants because they realize that the heavy government taxes on the distilling and selling of liquor would bring in large revenues; they figure that this would relieve their income taxes. These rapacious millionaires are quite willing to degrade and rob the poor laboring classes of their hard-earned money, and put them to guzzling strong drink, and thus coin their blood and sweat into taxes in order to save them from paying income tax. A deeper, blacker-dyed selfishness has not manifested itself in the history of this nation. It would seem that the men who have piled up their millions ought to have a bit of thought and sympathy for those who eat their bread in the sweat of their brow.

We rejoice to know that there is a class of very wealthy people in this country who are quite ready to make generous contributions for the cause of Prohibition. Money is a tremendous power in politics. It speaks and votes in a way to uplift or degrade that mass of people who need protection, who labor for their daily bread, and have always been the victims of the saloon.

There is danger of the Eighteenth Amendment being eliminated from the Constitution. Afflict us with a President of these United States pledged against Prohibition, with a Senate and Congress of the same character; back them up with a population that has been so affected by modernistic teaching that they believe themselves to be close akin to monkeys, that have been taught from the pulpit and in Sunday school literature to ridicule the Bible; who have been raised in an atmosphere in rebellion against God, decency and law; with such a President, Senate, Congress and people, any calamity may befall us. With the present trend this very thing is possible. I shall make no contribution to prohibition speakers who go about the country comforting, instead of alarming, the people.

The liquor traffic in its making, selling and drinking, in its politicians, preachers, church-members, bootleggers and the lower world, has no conscience, no patriotic intelligence; the whole business is under the power and leadership of the Devil, and there is no limit to the evil they will do the land and people if you give them the power. Prohibition orators ought not to be comforting the people; they ought to be awakening the people to the union of the tremendous influences that have gathered like a mighty army under the black banner of destruction of all that is good.

The trouble with the people is, they are half asleep. They are not aware of our danger. They have the false notion that the Eighteenth Amendment means prohibition, and that it is perfectly secure in the Constitution. An intelligent layman told me not long since that, during this whole period of the vicious, godless attack upon our prohibition laws, that there had not been one word out of his pastor on the subject. Not a word from the preacher of the gospel on the importance of the prohibition of the traffic, on the union of the tremendous forces to break down our prohibition laws, on the untiring efforts to lift up the floodgates of drunkenness, lawlessness and ruin. It is difficult to believe that such a preacher could exist; a man of this character has no right in the pulpit and ought not to have the support of the people. We have heard much of the hue and cry of a cowardly ministry, who are so thoroughly saturated with political prejudice that they are constantly insisting that religion and politics must be entirely separated. The Bible cries out to us, "Ye that love good hate evil." No preacher need to ally himself with any political party in order to become the fearless advocate of the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

IS PROHIBITION RIGHT?

ture of money, and that largely, of the hard-earned money of the laboring man.

Adam Smith said: "All the labor expended producing strong drink is utterly unproductive; it adds nothing to the wealth of the community. A wise man works and earns wages, and spends his wages so he may work again. Employers taken all around, do not pay more wages to total abstainers, but the latter contribute more to their own and fellow workers' wages fund than do drinkers."

The drink traffic not only costs America in retail expenditures for alcoholic liquors, but there is a consequential cost traceable to drink-caused poverty, crime, insanity, inefficiency and—death!

SOME STARTLING FACTS!

The following facts are taken from literature furnished by the Board of Prohibition, Temperance and Public Morals; this estimate was made when the liquor traffic was at its height, before Prohibition.

COMPARED WITH OTHER EXPENDITURES.

"The American people, according to Dr. John F. Anderson, president of the American Public Health Society, lose $740,000,000 a year by illness (a part of which is the direct result of the alcohol habit)—only one-third as much as the retail cost of the drink traffic. If the incidental costs attributed were included, the total would be six times as much as the loss by illness.

"Five years of the liquor bill would buy all the real estate in New York and Chicago at assessed valuation, would pay the national debt nearly ten times over, or meet its interest charges about four hundred, twenty times.

"Ten years of the liquor bill would buy every railroad in the country.

"The money spent on drink in 1913 would purchase the annual output of coal at the mines twice over, and would pay the price of our iron products four times over.

It is about fifteen times the value of the latest reported annual production of gold and silver combined, is one-seventh the value of all the gold dug, coined, and consumed in the arts in all the world since Columbus discovered America.

"It would pay the expenses of every city in the United States having a population of 30,000 or over for four years.

"The total government revenue of the fifty leading countries of the world at the end of the year 1913 was $11,245,399,000. The direct and indirect loss of America because of drink during the three years 1912-13-14 would exceed the total peace revenue of these fifty leading countries by not less than $4,000,000.

"America loses a great deal more by fire than any other nation. A house burns on an average of every ten minutes, and the houses destroyed during a year, if set side by side on both sides of the road, would line an unbroken avenue of desolation from Chicago to New York. But the financial loss from fire, according to a recent statement by the head of the New York City Fire Department, is only $2.68 per capita, while the direct loss alone because of drink, is $23 per capita.

"Two years and eight months of the Boer War cost Great Britain $900,000,000. During the same time, the liquor traffic was costing the United States $5,500,000,000.

"Every day we wasted enough to give a one-pound loaf of bread to every soldier in an army of 11,000,000 men."

Prohibition is right because it gives the laboring man a chance to be at his best, physically. No corporation wants a man in their employ who is not equal for the task delegated to him. Railroads have regulations that forbid the employing of a man who is addicted to strong drink. No person wants to ride behind an engine whose throttle is manipulated by a man dazed with strong drink. No patient wants a physician ministering to him who is so incapacitated by strong drink that he cannot properly diagnose his case. You may take any line of professional training and the demand of the public is for men who are clear in mind, steady in nerve, and on the job, which he cannot be if under the influence of liquor.

Prohibition is right because it is wrong to make beasts of our fellowmen, orphans of our children, and widows of our women. Prohibition is right because it puts the hard-earned money of the laboring man into food and clothing, education and comforts for his family, instead of pouring it into the coffers of the saloon-keepers. Prohibition is right because it seeks to elevate society instead of dragging men, women and children down to the stern realities of poverty, disgrace and crime.

There are a thousand and one reasons why prohibition is right, but we simply refer you to some of the wholesome effects of prohibition since the Eighteenth Amendment was added to the Constitution of the United States.

WHAT PROHIBITION HAS DONE FOR AMERICA.
"The removal of the open saloon which encouraged gambling and degraded politics.

"The reduction of the amount of consumption of alcohol beverages by 70 per cent within a remarkably short time.

"The elimination of liquor advertising which appealed to the crudest and lowest emotions to create new victims of the drinking habit.

"The protection of children and their mothers from the neglect and brutality of drinking fathers.

"An increase in savings that has given the common man and woman in America the highest economic and social position enjoyed anywhere in the world.

"The most efficient industry to be found anywhere because of the reliability and loyalty of sober working men and women.

"The reduction of many forms of vice and crime until cities are safer for law observing citizens today than they have ever been.

"The moderation of 'automobile' and 'postwar' crime which would have created terrible conditions in a country with twenty-five million autos were liquor not outlawed.

"The development of all types of schools so that millions of young people have a richer educational opportunity. High school enrollment alone in the United States increased from two million in 1920 to nearly five million in 1930—the most remarkable advance in the history of civilization.

"The foundation for a future rich in promise and opportunity for home life, for education, for government, for labor, for industry, and for the realization of religion."

Prohibition is right, otherwise, God would not have pronounced a "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness." The wicked seem to be in the saddle at times, but there is a day coming when they will meet their Waterloo, and sad will be their defeat.

Prohibition is right because liquor is wrong. Prohibition is right because it rescues the perishing, uplifts the fallen, and makes it easy for men to do right. There is not a single reasonable argument against prohibition, but there are a thousand and one for it. Lovers of humanity, let's stand for the prohibition of the liquor traffic first, last and all the time, and in so doing, we stand for God and humanity.

Dr. Alexander Bryce in his book, "Laws of Life and Health" reports that a medical and mental check of New York school children showed that 53 per cent of the offspring of drunkards were sub-normal mentally as against 10 per cent of the children of abstainers.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all of its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

Prohibition Number

The first issue in July we are to bring out a rousing PROHIBITION NUMBER of THE HERALD. The nation is stirred on this vital question, and you will want your friends to get this number, so get to work at once, send in their names so they will receive this issue which will be full of facts and figures about Prohibition.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD sent for the next six months. And don't forget to pray that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

My Dear Boys and Girls:

This being the week for our Prohibition Number, and knowing you are all interested in this great subject, I am giving you a wonderful prohibition story in place of the letters. You will thank me, I am sure, for this change.

Lovingly,

Aunt Bettie.

THE JUGGERNAUT.

"Aunt Lucy's dying!" cried a small child bursting into my room one dreary Sunday afternoon, "and she wants you all to come as quick as you can."

"Oh, poor Lucy!" exclaimed my wife rising hurriedly, "has she reached the end at last?" and both of us hastened to accompany the little waif toward the city's dump of human derelicts vulgarly called "Cat Island."

Lucy Iredell was an old schoolmate and friend of ours, at one time the personification of beauty, culture and happiness. Her parents had been well-to-do and had brought up their only daughter in the midst of plenty and even luxury. After graduation from Burton College, Lucy had married John Iredell, as stalwart and manly a specimen of humanity as one ever meets. He was a railroad engineer with an imposing appearance and a jolly heart. He was devoted to Lucy and no union of our acquaintance seemed so auspiciously embarked on the sea of life, but like that of the ill-fated Titanic, few matrimonial voyages had been so disastrous. As is often the case, the husband promising so much had really performed little, and by degrees had sunk to the position of resident of this most undesirable section. Lucy had clung to him, true wife that she was, till now she was dying in this dismal abode.

As we drove along my thoughts were as gloomy as the day as I contemplated the tragedy of human existence as shared by our friend: the privation intensified by memory of luxury, the unwholesome associations so inferior to those of youth, the utter absence of compensation for the sacrifice of former youth, beauty and happiness. Although we were passing through a section of palatial homes with which those in the "Island" were in such cruel contrast, I had not looked at them and my eyes observed only the somber atmosphere or the drab pavement. But a sudden gleam of light flashed across my vision and I looked up to view, not a streak of lightning nor a house bursting in flames, but a white marble mansion against which the western sun bursting through the fog had suddenly glanced. It was the home of Senator Blanks, the "people's representative," and its white Gothic front surrounded by an exquisite and fancifully decorated landscape gave an appearance of sumptuous wealth and extravagance. The mansion was on the top of an elevation which dominated the city and was admittedly pre-eminent in many respects. A splendid automobile was just gliding beneath an arcade to receive the "Honorable" from whence it sped noiselessly out into and up the avenue. Even the liveried chauffeur disdained a glance at the occupants of the modest Ford descending toward the river. But I could not forbear a self-complimentary thought as to the divine and ultimate valuation of our respective errands, for he was going to attend a fifty-thousand-dollar coming out party of a noted millionaire's daughter, where the laws he had made would become the jest of the evening.

Elegance and ostentation rapidly decreased as the street descended toward the river across which was the deadline of misery. Thus the abode of economic despair, as in the days of Feudalism, was in close proximity to all this array of luxury, extravagance and superfluity, but behind and beneath it—the former, slave like, begging at the back door of the latter. Even the "people's representative" was living in voluptuous magnificence through means accumulated mainly since election, while many of his constituents were living thus under his footstool in the most abject misery.

Once across the river, the barrier between the two sections most jealously guarded against invasions from the "Island," we were met by evidences of utter privation, filth and degradation. The streets were strewn with litter and slippery with mud; the sidewalks were mere cinder paths; the houses mere unpainted shacks set up on blocks. There was scarcely a grassy lawn, a tree or garden to be seen. A dull pall of smoke was hanging overhead from the factories beyond and the scene was desolate and hopeless.

"Ah," I thought, as I remembered the mansions on Sunset Hill, "are these the habitations of human beings or the unsanitary abode of the city's swine?" The odors as well as the sights and sounds that issued from the doorways would have suggested the latter. There was little evidence of sanitation, to say nothing of beauty and happiness. Of course on either hand was the bear-eyed toper and the sallow-skinned habituate.

Into one of the most forbidding houses we ventured to minister to our dying friend and to try to encourage her with the only hope of fallen mortals. I say "ventured" for who knows the dangers lurking in these deep sores of society, not alone from drink-crazed and drug-demoralized individuals, but from diseases which make a veritable nightmare of existence. A faint shriek greeted our ears, as we stepped upon the porch, followed by words of evidently painful protestation.

"Oh, stop him! stop him!" she was crying, and we were terrified to think what fiend might be tormenting the dying woman. Opening the door instantly we found her quite alone, however, but there was a strange look in her eye as if she had been in a dream or slight delirium. A wasted hand was extended from beneath the poor bedding, and a feeble smile made a last effort to brighten the once beautiful face.

"I am so glad to see you," she began; "for a week I have been unable to be up, and scarcely a soul has been here except little Julia. I believe I am dying and knew of no others to whom I could entrust my wasted body and commit the welfare of my poor husband."

While she stopped to regain her failing breath and my wife offered words of consolation and hope, I meditated on her last statement. John Iredell had brought her once carefree and happy life to this deplorable end. His uncontrolled self-indulgence and passion had blighted her happiness and hopes; his evident improvidence and neglect had placed her in this hole of iniquity; in reality, he had more cruelly murdered her than if he had shot her outright. Yet she loved him and was solicitous of his welfare. Her dying words were thus in harmony with her whole life, for urged on many occasions to desert her besotted spouse, she had always indignantly refused, and ever attempted to account for his degradation with kindness. To her it was John's "weakness" and bad companions, or the mere deadliness of alcohol itself that was to blame. She saw in him not a malicious enemy trampling over her rights, but a simple slave to a fierce and heartless monster whose bands he was unable to sever. Her misery was merely incidental to her efforts to rescue him or to alleviate his servitude. She had always criticised the system of government which allowed this monster of iniquity, this tyrant of devastation, this Juggernaut of oppression to exist. She had always with voice and pen cried out against the politicians and financiers by whom the "demon rum" was encouraged and licensed to debase and damn not only the poor habituates but more of the innocent and helpless.

"How happy we were twenty years ago!" she continued; "John loved me, and I fear I almost worshipped him." Then closing her eyes in half delirium she murmured as much to herself, it seemed, as to us, "I can see him now coming in from the station and catching me in his powerful arms, and I can almost feel his strong embrace and affectionate kiss. How brave and fine he looked as he passed our cottage in control of his great engine pulling the long train of cars filled with carefree people! But he began to drink, and I cannot forgive myself for giving him once, in a moment of utter thoughtlessness, a sip of whiskey we were keeping for medicine. Oh, that I could destroy it all before I die! I should then be supremely happy," and she opened her eyes in momentary excitement as if she almost dreamed the power was hers.

"John often tried to quit," she went on, "but never seemed able. Oh, how I have prayed and struggled to help him, but my passiveness toward the evil in early married life always looms as such a great sin that I cannot believe, it seems. Then he lost his place on the road and we have drifted downward ever since. Oh, that he might repent and die with me! Up there will be no saloons nor bootleggers. Oh, thou foul fiend drink!" she almost shrieked as the unseeing stare returned to her eyes, "Would I could call Heaven's everlasting curse upon you!" Then she sank exhausted into a kind of slumber while I recalled her intense hate for the whole business. Her own sufferings and disappointments in life seemed wholly the result of drink, yet she never failed to sympathize with the poor slaves of the monster of evil. To her alcohol had come to be the most tyrannical despot of the ages, a being, a personality whom she almost beheld with her eyes and fought with physical force.

Suddenly a heavy footfall was heard on the walk and she immediately awoke. "Ah, he is coming!" she whispered; "I do hope he is sober this time!" But her hopes were vain as usual, for as we looked out John Iredell staggered into the gateway. His large bloated form, unkempt clothes, livid face, revealing even at a distance the dissipation he had experienced, made a striking and pitiful appearance. At a closer view I noticed large purple spots on his face, but thought little of their significance till later. He reeled from side to side up the walk, but stumbled on the steps and fell with fierce oaths on the porch. I sprang to help him into the house, but as he arose he struck at me in uncertain fury and fell again from his own exertion. Lucy saw his attempt to strike and cried with all her strength to him, warning me away. Finally, he took in the situation dimly and tried to apologize. Then he enquired about his wife.

"I'm worse, John," she answered kindly, "I am going to die soon; won't you please try to meet me in Heaven?"

"Oh, no, you ain't goin' to die L-Lucy," he blubbered, and staggering to the bed he attempted to kiss her. But he only pitched headlong across her form and it was with difficulty I lifted him up. "Lucy's my only friend," he added, "She's my angel; I couldn't do 'thout her!" And he wept in drunken fashion as if his heart was breaking. "I'll get her a doctor," he went on, staggering out of the door. But he had started out with the same avowed purpose each day for a week without ever getting farther than the booze joint on the corner. But in going out this time he fell again on the porch and Lucy advised me to let him lie, thinking doubtless that he would sleep off his drunkenness there. Sure enough, he failed to stir further, and laying an old quilt over him at her suggestion, I sat down again by her bed.

While my wife attempted to make her comfortable, she continued on what seemed the one theme of her heart. "Oh that something could be done to prevent such shipwreck and suffering!! My portion of it will soon be over, I trust, as my sole dependence for rest and bliss is in the merits and atonement of the blessed Christ, but what of others? What of the innocent boys and pure girls foredoomed to this death?" Her voice had fallen to an almost inaudible whisper, but with a sudden start and an unnatural stare she cried, as she looked from one to the other: "Can't you save them? Can't you save them? Why, I can see them now catching each other's hands and verily dancing forth on the highway of life only to meet and fall before this terrible tyrant! Look at him there coming on his great Juggernaut of destruction which crushes all before it! Can't you see it coming down the broad way there drawn by crowds of men and even women? And all those poor sweet children and young people going on to meet it! Look how the poor slaves are tied to the monstrous car. See the red-lipped giant lash them with his whip and knock them down to be crushed by the ponderous wheels! Now he is smiling and trying to entice others to become his slaves by promising health and pointing to the ruddy cheeks and excessive hilarity of his dupes. See also his lieutenant ants, to whom he tosses gold, as they go among the throng seducing the unwary by offering samples and passing out advertising. And isn't that Senator Blanks riding by his side and speaking in his favor? Who is that on the other side with a mask over his face? They are holding his golden arms! Oh, watch the slaves fall exhausted beneath the terrible grinding wheels!" Then she attempted to scream but only hissed hoarsely, "The innocent women and children are perishing too, clinging to them and trying to draw them away. Stop him! stop him!" and she attempted to rise in her excitement, but the effort was too much and she sank again into apparent unconsciousness, the result of complete exhaustion. The watchers looked on in astonishment and with feelings of unspeakable sadness. Were these merely the ramblings of a fevered brain, the unnatural flare of the lamp of life as it goes out forever? Were they the last despairing attack of a soul that, worm-like but helpless, turns upon its destroyer? Or were they but repetitions of the imaginations and dreams she had often experienced during her long struggle with the monster of intemperance which had crushed her life and all beneath him?

The hectic flush had now faded from her face and left a deathly pallor; her hands were purple and cold; her nails were blue; her breathing was almost imperceptible, and her pulse was no longer felt. Suddenly her lips moved, and the old look of terror returned to her face, but her voice was no longer heard except in a whisper. Bending we heard her labored words: "Oh, they are near us now! Some are attempting to stop him but the king orders them shot; his lieutenants are armed! Ah, there's John pulling with the others, and he's so drunk he's about to get run over. Lord save him! I'll run and help him!" There was a slight motion of her body and in a moment she whispered while a wild and despairing look filled her eyes, "I can't! I can't! Oh, help! help! It's about to crush us both! We're going—un—" The word was not finished, and after a gasp or two and a slight shudder, Lucy Iredell was dead.

We straightened out the wasted form and closed the dull eyes, forever shut to the scenes of sin and woe, and hastened out into the air now darkened by the falling twilight. As we passed the prostrate husband, I noted a peculiar purple on his hands and face and that he had scarcely moved since he fell. Touching his brow I found him cold and dead. Then I recalled the purple spots on his face, indicating his heart was at last failing in its abnormal task. We summoned the undertaker and gave instructions for the burial of the two together. As she had clung to him through life, it seemed but just that in death she should not be separated from him. But as we drove home through the darkness which had now become intense, I could but think of the final separation at the great Day of Accounts, when character will decide association as well as destiny.

FROM THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

When we read that the underground booze business is as great as the highly organized and well-managed gasoline industry we feel confident that the research of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment was done by Amos and Andy.

They just seem to shovel in figures without supporting evidence. If a billion isn't big enough put in two billion. That's the impression we get from submitting the reports of the wet organizations to unprejudiced statisticians and economists.

The evidence from the colleges, from industry and from the social workers points to bettered conditions in spite of the organized effort to discredit prohibition. The decreased poverty from drink, the bettered living standards, the improved purchasing power this past decade, as reported by business everywhere; and our ability to weather the world depression better than the drink-ridden nations, all disprove the fairy story of the wets that America drinks more than before prohibition.

But that doesn't affect the Amos and Andy School of Prohibition Research. The wine growers, the brewers, the smart set that puts cocktails above the constitution and urges wholesale disobedience of the law, all support the wet cause. They must be served.

Hence Andy's figuring:

".....Seven million, Eight million....."

WHY PROHIBITION HAS NOT BEEN A GREATER SUCCESS.

Rev. A. S. Hunter.

Rev. O. R. Miller, State Superintendent of the New York Civic League, gives concrete facts as to the non-enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment in New York City. These facts are of general interest, as shedding light upon the prohibition situation at large. The articles are too long to reproduce here, and only a general summary, as gleaned from them is given here. If you are further interested, write to Mr. Miller, 452 Broadway, Albany, N. Y., and ask for the October and November issues.

We should bear in mind that New York State, under the governorship of Alfred E. Smith, repealed its own enforcement laws, and left the matter of prohibition solely in the hands of the Federal authorities. Mr. Charles H. Tuttle was the man appointed as United States District Attorney, to see to that; under the authority of Andrew W. Mellon, in whose department prohibition enforcement then was.

Mr. Miller cites five notorious cases, as samples of others. Helen Morgan, proprietress of one of the largest, if not the largest night club in New York City. She was frequently raided and arrested by the dry officers, but would get off free. The Waverly Club, 112 West 44th St., later at 113 West 47th St. Dinty Moore, 216 West 46th St., Herbert L. Pratt, multi-millionaire, Glen Cove, Long Island. Peter Anselmo, no address given, notorious bootlegger.

Some of these places were raided by federal officers more than 25 times, and contraband liquor found; but Mr. Tuttle did not prosecute. In some instances, he would accept a plea of guilty, and give a nominal penalty. Some of the bigger ones were given immunity for testifying against some of the small offenders, while the big fellows went unprosecuted. After several years of this lawlessness, and having been raided twenty-eight times, Dinty Moore was placed under $15,000 bond a year. Within a few weeks he was doing business as usual, and was put under bail of $1,000. The $15,000 bond was not estreated.

Herbert L. Pratt was proven to have smuggled in 240 cases of champagne from Europe, and admitted that he had bought it for $25,000; and that he had agreed to pay the Go-Bart Company $60 per case, if and when it was delivered at his home. Probably the latter was for transportation. Evidence showed that he was guilty of conspiracy as well as smuggling; but he went free on surrendering the liquor.

After Peter Anselmo's club had been raided 28 times, Mrs. Willebrandt sent special prosecutors from Washington to handle his case, and they secured criminal conviction in 19 or 20 charges against him. They were sent because of Mr. Tuttle's failure to act.

And this is the Mr. Tuttle whom the Republicans nominated for governor of New York on his own wet platform, against wet Mr. Roosevelt. We had ten years of that kind of shilly-shallying by the National administrations, two years Democrat and eight years Republican. During the eight years, Mr. Mellon was at the head of the enforcement department, and was directly responsible for what was done or not done. He is still there, though enforcement has been transferred to another department. While Mrs. Willebrandt was assistant United States Attorney, she did all in her power to have prohibition honestly enforced. The above Anselmo case is a sample. Those who have read her expose of the conditions in that department, know how her hands were tied by her superiors.

We are now told that, since the election is past, the Wickersham Commission will make an early report. Did they wait until after the election so as not to influence it? Or, did they want to know which way the cat would jump?

JANE ADDAMS SEES CHICAGO YOUTH BENEFITED BY PROHIBITION.

Jane Addams, one of the country's foremost social workers, with 40 years of experience in the slums of Chicago, in a recent book, "The Second Twenty Years at Hull-House," enumerates the specific benefits of national prohibition in her own city.

The public dance halls, catering to youth between the ages of fourteen and eighteen, which were formerly operated for the purpose of dispensing drink, have undergone a complete revolution. She pictures the present dance hall situation as follows:

"Thus under prohibition the large commercial dance halls in Chicago have come to be well chaaperoned with a standard of conduct enforced by the dance-hall managers themselves. Every boy and man who pays an entrance fee is examined by an officer for a flask; if a flask is found, it is taken away from him and in his presence the contents are poured down the sewer. At one of the large dance halls a few months ago, in one evening, out of forty-five hundred persons examined, only three were found carrying flasks. Such a regulation of course would have been impossible unless the entire liquor business had been made illegal." (From "Second Twenty Years at Hull-House," by Jane Addams. By permission of The Macmillan Company, publishers.)

In 1911, 328 public dance halls were investigated by the Juvenile Protective Association of Chicago. It was found that 86,000 people frequented them on Saturday evening, the majority of whom were boys and girls between fourteen and eighteen. Liquor was sold in 240 of these 328 places, while in the others, return checks were given to encourage the use of the neighboring saloons. By 12 o'clock, practically all the boys showed signs of intoxication. The dances were short, four to five minutes; the intermissions were long, from fifteen to twenty minutes, to give ample opportunity for drinking. A permit which allowed the sale of liquor from three o'clock in the afternoon until three the next morning could be secured for twelve dollars. This was allowed even though the city ordinance required that the saloons close at one o'clock in the morning.

Reforms were instituted, but no appreciable change was effected until the Eighteenth Amendment made the sale of liquor illegal.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson III.—July 19, 1931.

Subject.—Social Service in the Early Church. Acts 4:32-35; Acts 6:1-4; 2 Cor. 9:17.

Golden Text.—Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. Acts 20:35.

Time.—For the two portions taken from Acts, sometime shortly after Pentecost. For the last section, probably around A. D. 57.

Places.—Jerusalem; somewhere in Macedonia.

Introduction.—The world's need of social service is very great; but its need of salvation from sin is far greater. It is Christlike to feed starving bodies, but far more Christlike to save perishing souls. Social service can be made a good adjunct to salvation, but can never take its place. "Put first things first." The early Church got sinners saved, and then fed such as had need: the modern slogan says, feed the sinners in order to get them saved. I am not sure that this modern plan is succeeding. We are trying to run the train backwards; and there is some danger of its jumping off the track. The early church improved environment by salvation: we are trying to save men by improving environment. All the soup kitchens in the world can never put a sinner under conviction for his sins. Sandwiches and coffee are not a substitute for the Holy Ghost. Christians are not well fed men, but twice-born men. I may be mistaken; but I have a conviction that Jesus knew what he was talking about when he said: "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him."

I am not condemning the right sort of social service, but the sort that puts the service ahead of salvation. If the salvation of the people is put squarely to the front, an institutional church may be made to serve good ends. Nurseries to care for the little ones of such mothers as must work for a living are above price. Good playgrounds for small children who are otherwise shut in behind four walls, or forced to play on the streets, may serve good ends, if well managed. It all looks so good that one feels almost sinful, if he calls any of it in question; and yet there is a danger. A noted social service worker said to me not very long ago: "We are working hard at this job, and spending a lot of money; but I am not sure that we are doing much good. We are cultivating a kind of dependent spirit among these people, that I do not like. Of one thing I am certain: I am not saving them from their sins."

Do your best social service; and yet I show unto you a more excellent way: Preach a gospel that saves from all sin, and the people will improve their own environment. In the second place, by proper laws force the employers of labor to pay a living wage, and to treat their employees with the decency due to human beings. There are big manufacturers in this land who need nothing but tails to turn them into common hogs. If one could eliminate them, the problem would be easier of solution; but as the colored brother said about eliminating the eggs for the breakfast, our "eliminator seems to be broken."

Comments on the Lesson.

32. Of one heart and of one soul.—They were in perfect accord. They had all things common.—This has been abused two ways. Some who are too lazy to work for an honest living are sure that all property should be divided equally among all men. Others who are as close as the bark on a hickory tree in midwinter would have us believe that the early disciples made a big mistake, and that they had to correct it in order to live. The early Christians did practice a sort of communism that might be termed extravagant under some circumstances; but it was not such amid the needs of that hour. They did right; and we dare not do less in a time of dire need. "Whose hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" That does not mean that a good man must take his hard earnings to feed a lazy fellow who will not work for a living. St. Paul told the Thessalonians that if one would not work, neither should he eat; and that is good doctrine now.

33. With great power.—The power of the Holy Ghost. Witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus.—This was the heart of their preaching; and it should be of ours, if we are to save men; "for if Christ be not risen, our preaching is vain, and your faith is also vain." If he did not rise from the dead, his death was in vain. There was no atonement in it.

35. According as he had need.—Please note that the distribution was not according to the wild notions of modern communists, but according as men had need. If one had no need, he received nothing.

6:1. A murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews.—These were not Greeks, but Jews who had been born and reared in foreign lands where the Greek tongue was spoken. Those here termed Hebrews were Jews who had been born and reared in Palestine. It seems that the latter were receiving the big end of charity, and there was a bit of complaint on the part of the former, "because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration."

2. The twelve.—The apostles, as distinguished from other members of the Christian multitude. It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables.—Here is a lesson for all time; but do not press it to fanaticism. Paul made tents for his bread while he did missionary work in foreign parts. As the old cobbler said: "My business is to serve God, and I am mending shoes to defray expenses." So it is with the preacher. If his flock can support him, it is best to do so, and leave him free for full work; but if it cannot, then let him continue to preach the word and, like Paul, labor with his hands that his family may not suffer. Many good men have so done; and the blessing of God was upon their work.

3. Seven men.—I see no special reason for this particular number, except the fact that seven was the perfect number among the Jews. It is far more important to note the sort of men for which the apostles were calling: "Men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom." The church has suffered no little from dishonest men handling her finances. Better be careful as to who is elected to the office of treasurer.

4. We will give ourselves.—There is tremendous force in these words. The true minister of the Lord of God is a separated man. He must indulge in no bad habits; he must keep away from things of the world that would unfit him for his preaching; he must keep free from all worldly entanglements that smack of evil—in a word, he must "abstain from all appearance of evil." That is the negative side of his life. On the positive side he must throw himself into the work of saving men with all the force of his manhood backed up by the power of the Holy Ghost. That is giving himself to the work of the ministry.

2 Cor. 9:1-7. This is a clincher for what has gone before in our lesson. We might note that it was not a sort of universal charity that attempted to feed all the hungry people in the world, but that it was confined to the poor saints who were in need. It is all right to feed and clothe all who may be destitute; but so far as we Christians are concerned, our destitute brethren must first be supplied. This is important; and the church should not lose sight of it. It is a shame for the Church to leave her suffering ones to be cared for by some worldly secret order that does the work, and then boasts that it is better than the church, and thus robs our Lord of the glory due him. In about nine times out of ten the lodgemen are church members who are so using their funds as to exalt the lodge and rob the Christ.

Paul's collection reveals a peculiar situation in the church of his day. It was for the poor saints at Jerusalem; and Paul was gathering the funds from converts to Christianity in heathen lands. No doubt, many of the converts in those regions were Jews by race; but others were Gentiles. It was a case of the children feeding the old mother in her time of need.

There is neither time nor space for full comment on this last section of the lesson; but I wish to call special attention to the last verse as setting forth the true basis of all Christian giving. It must be free, cheerful, and with an eye single to the glory of God. Otherwise there can be no merit in it for the giver.

WHO BENEFITS BY PROHIBITION?

Wage Earners—whose wages were 8 Billions more in 1926 than in 1918, which is an increase of 25 per cent, while living costs are reduced 18 per cent since 1920.

Employers—who benefit by increased production and a reduced labor turn-over; by sober workmen, fewer accidents—and no more "blue Mondays."

Farmers—who buy three times as much farm machinery, and who sell 45 per cent more milk than in 1920,—and who rarely have a drunken farm hand.

Bankers—Twenty-three million new depositors since 1920 have increased deposits in the Savings Banks by 9 Billion dollars,—an increase of 60 per cent.

Insurance Men—who have sold 51 Billion dollars of new insurance since 1920 which is an 130 per cent increase. Sixty Million persons now hold life insurance.

Real Estate Men—who sold an average of seven hundred and forty-one new homes every day last year, and who find rents and payments easier to collect.

Manufacturers—Manufactured products in 1925 and 1926 reached 62 Billion dollars in value, which is more than the peak of after war-time production.

Merchants—who get much of the Two Billion dollars formerly spent in drink and who have thousands of buyers where they used to have hundreds.

Everybody's Wife—who shares in all this increased prosperity,—and rejoices in all it means to her family. Probably she has one of the 612,000 washing machines; surely she has one of the One Million vacuum cleaners, or some of the Nine Hundred Million dollars worth of furniture which has been sold each year since 1924. A million farmers' wives are enjoying the 1,000,000 bath rooms which were put into farm houses last year.

Everybody's Family—There is one passenger automobile to every 1½ families; and one radio set to every five homes in our country. Colleges have doubled their attendance in four years, and schools of every kind are full to overflowing.

This splendid condition is, of course, not due solely to Prohibition, but leading financiers and economists attribute to the 18th Amendment a "very large share" of our present prosperity.

Dr. T. C. Atkinson, Washington Representative of the Grange, says: "We shall not know the full measure of the blessings of Prohibition until three generations have passed."

IN OLD SALOON DAYS

When our Government Legalized the Liquor Traffic.

By Georgia Robertson

It was not the name saloon, or the brass rail, or the easy-swinging screen doors that made the saloon what it was—a place so vile that even the ardent wets say "It must not come back." If only non-alcoholic beverages had been sold in those saloons they would not have become breeding places for drunkenness, fights, shootings, and practically all crimes.

It was the alcohol in the beer, wine and distilled liquors sold there that caused the drunkenness, poverty, crime, and heart-breaking misery. If the same kind of beer, wine, and distilled liquors had been sold anywhere else—in groceries, drug stores, restaurants, hotels, or only in Government stores through mail orders—and had it been drunk in vacant lots, or deserted buildings, or in the homes of the people, drunkenness, quarrelling, fighting, murder, abuse of wife and children, sexual immorality, and other crimes would just as surely have resulted from its use.

Violation of liquor laws did not begin with the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act. Liquor dealers and their customers constantly violated both the week-day and the Sunday closing hours for saloons. They also violated the law against selling to minors and drunkards. Their slogan was "Dimes spent now treating boys will bring us dollars later." They located saloons outside the prescribed areas and defied the law to dislodge them.

The Liquor Dealer's Journal complained of the number of bootleggers and speak-easies that reduced their sales. The Government even then had officers hunting out illicit stills that were evading the liquor tax, not only in the mountainous regions but in our cities as well.

Neither did deaths from alcoholic liquors begin with the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment. "The liquor deaths in the United States during the saloon regime averaged 60,000 a year, or 1250 a week." Even the purest "good grain alcohol" is a rank poison to the human system. At the request of the liquor dealers themselves the Government placed all liquors containing one-half of one per cent, or more, as intoxicating; and no one seems in those days to have questioned its accuracy. Hip flasks were too common to cause comment.

There was "a well beaten path between the liquor dealer's place of business and the houses of ill fame." "He bribed judges and threatened district attorneys." He had a grip hand on political nominations and elections. State legislators and even United States Senators and Congressmen felt the power of his threats. It was because the liquor dealer himself was a constant violator of the laws of both God and man that our people arose in their might and outlawed him. This was not "put over" on him by any one but himself. It was the reaction upon him of his own deeds.

Bring back liquor—even wine and beer—and you bring back the liquor dealer and his drunken, crime-committing customers with all the evils of the old saloon! Instead of talking glibly about the evils of prohibition, talk about the evils of the Government-licensed, Government-protected liquor traffic of saloon days. Seventeen million youth have come to voting age since the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted. They know nothing of those evils; they hear only of the evils of prohibition!

Can you think of any plan whatever for the return of liquor, the enactment of which into law you would be willing to be solely and personally responsible for, and that you would also be willing to take the risk for the chance acclaim of its success, or to bear all the blame for the increased misery and suffering its failure might inflict on humanity? If you are not willing to submit your plans for the modification or repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act to this "acid test," then, in the name of humanity and country, stop interfering with the enforcement of prohibition by criticising it! Be consistent, and when advocating wiping out prohibition laws in order to make people stop drinking and stop wanting to drink, ask also that theft of your automobiles and other property be prevented by wiping out also the laws and penalties against theft and burglary!

CATHOLICS AND PROHIBITION.

By P. H. Callahan

Favoring Prohibition (Article Number Ten)

A couple of years ago there appeared in the Commonweal, the leading Catholic weekly, a letter from the late Father M. A. Lambing, one of the best known and outstanding clergymen of the Pittsburgh diocese, viz.:

"Why do some Catholics favor alcoholic beverages and despise prohibition? I have never known drink to do the church good, or prohibition do it harm; and I am near the eightieth year-stone and in the fifty-second year of priesthood. Priests are not less pious, zealous, hard working or influential than before the liquor traffic was outlawed, nor are the laity less religious and generous. The fact is that more and better churches and schools have been built since the advent of prohibition than ever before in the same length of time; the mass and sacraments are better attended, and Catholics were never so well united, organized or influential. This is the witness of my experience and not cited as the fruit of prohibition but as evidence that the church has not been injured by it, and to justify my inquiry.

"A second question is worth considering: If prohibition were done away with, what would take its place? And would the evils laid at its door be also done away with? Can the re-introduction of a law-protected liquor traffic be viewed with anything but dread? Also, if the contention be true that all the drink wanted can still be got, and that prohibition does not bind in conscience, why all this outcry against it by Catholics?"

"But to move the previous question: Why do so many Catholic favor alcoholic beverages and despise prohibition when the former has never done the church good nor the latter done her any injury?"

In a later edition of the same magazine he insists that:

"The public has a right to know why Catholics follow a course that scandalizes their fellow-Catholics, discredits their church, occasions and encourages men to violate a law at the risk of their lives. They must have a very good reason to justify such a course, and it does not seem impertinent to ask them for it, and they should welcome the opportunity to make it public through the Commonweal."

A CRUMB OF COMFORT.

And now the Congressional Modification League admits that repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment cannot be accomplished for at least ten years and that it may take longer. This, of course, is sad news to those wets who a few months ago were told that some of the biggest brewery concerns in the United States have installed latest improved machinery for beer manufacture and are all set to start the wheels turning on a moment's notice. They were led to believe that this would come to pass in a few weeks at the most. The league, however, throws out this crumb of comfort to the wets by telling them that any dry law may easily be modified during one session of congress "provided, of course, that a majority of both houses is favorable to modification." The intimation is that with the dry law modified by congress the Eighteenth Amendment need not worry the booze-makers, sellers and drinkers.

MEN OF MODERNISTIC TREND.

By The Editor.

THOSE preachers of Methodism who are so strongly tainted with modern liberalism and, at the same time, so eager to make themselves respectable as progressives and intellectual preachers of modern thought, will never bring a message that will produce a spiritual awakening, bring on a revival, and lead the lost multitudes to saving faith in Christ.

It would be amusing, if it were not pathetic, to note their efforts to give the God of the Old Testament a respectable place as a really high-tone, intelligent being among themselves. It is remarkable how eager they are to explain away the teachings of the Old Testament and, in fact, those of the Lord Jesus himself, and offer to the people a sort of dilettante God quite like themselves. They will find, as the starving multitudes have already found, that this God, whom they have manufactured, has no power to save lost souls.

One reason why the modernistic brethren are constantly crying that the day of revivals is past, is the fact that a real spiritual awakening, a mighty revival wrought by the Holy Spirit among the people, will be a sort of judgment day to them, and they would awake to the fact, and the people also, would clearly recognize the fact that they have been deceivers, the blind leading the blind. They would be left to draw their breath without their salaries.

These easy-going men are telling us that it is not worth while to try to save the old people, but we must take care of the children; by which they mean a species of their own sort of education is to take the place of regeneration. They will teach their doctrine of evolution and talk to the young people much of the new psychology, and leave them on the high sea of uncertainty amidst storms of doubt, without a pilot, to be cast upon the rocks of infidelity and gross immorality.

The imperative need of the times is a powerful gospel preached by men who steadfastly believe the Bible, Old Testament and New, whose souls are on fire for the salvation of the people, whose messages will bring a revival of power that will reach all classes, that will touch the aged sinner on the brink of eternity, the most lost and miserable wretches in the world, that will awaken and redeem whole families, parents and children.

I am coming to have a feeling that the time is about here for out-door preaching; for men to stand up on the streets, on vacant lots, and in the highways and byways of life and lift up their voices like a trumpet, and cry "Repent or perish!" The born-again, blood-cleansed, Spirit-filled preacher need have no fear that he cannot have a hearing if he will go to preaching with all of his might. He may suffer, but no man has a right to preach who is not willing to suffer for the sake of

PROFOUNDLY GRATEFUL.

We are profoundly grateful for the friends who are availing themselves of our fifty cent offer of The Herald from now until January 1, 1932. Subscriptions on this offer are coming in by hundreds. Perhaps we have never received a larger number of subscriptions on this 50 cent proposition than at the present time.

Crying in the Wilderness

The Herald is a voice crying in the wilderness of modern liberalism, skepticism, lawlessness, wickedness and unbelieving preachers, who are making their false statements and comforting themselves in their indolence by saying the "days for revivals of religion have passed."

We receive hundreds, I may say, thousands of letters from our readers telling us of the spiritual benefit they receive by reading The Herald. This encourages us to press on with the good work; but we need the help of all who are receiving help from the pages of The Herald, to give it a larger circulation. Now is the time to invest fifty cents or five dollars, or more, to put some good spiritual salt in your community. Solicit subscriptions from your neighbors and friends about you. Only fifty cents from now until January 1, 1932. There is no better way to invest a bit of your tithe money than in sending The Herald to some of your friends and relatives, or somebody you do not like very well. Send the name and address of this party, with fifty cents, pray for that person and expect good results.

We very earnestly request the members of the good old Herald Family to do their best to place The Herald in thousands of new homes during the next thirty days. We shall be glad to furnish samples to any one who can use them. Sure as you live, we are living in perilous times and the people who believe the Bible, trust in the Lord Jesus for salvation, and love human souls, ought to do their utmost to win the lost to Christ, to spread a saving gospel in the midst of a bold, defiant skepticism, which is destroying the faith of the people and producing most appalling spiritual death. Let every one who loves Christ, and who is interested in the salvation of the people, give some help NOW in the great good work of spreading the news of full salvation from sin, by faith in our blessed Lord and Saviour.

H. C. MORRISON.

the gospel he preaches. Multitudes are eager to hear a real preacher. The folks can tell when a man is the messenger of the Lord, and they are willing to hear a plain declaration of truth. No doubt, but the imperative need of the world today is preachers of the Word of God filled with the Holy Spirit, and with an agony of love for the salvation of the lost. You need not look to the modernists for anything, but to hinder the whole work of salvation. May God deliver us from the blight they are bringing upon the church.

The land is great which knows the Lord,
Where songs are guided by his Word,
Where justice rules 'twixt man and man,
Where love controls in act and plan,
Where breathing in his native air
Each soul finds joy in praise and prayer:
Thus may our country, good and great,
Be God's delight, man's best estate! —Alexander Blackburn.

Bow before him in stillness, believing that he looks on you and will reveal his presence! —Andrew Murray.

Monthly Sermon.

THE PRICE OF DISCIPLESHIP.

"And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Luke 14:27.

The Christianity of Christ is an aggressive Christianity. Its mission is to the uttermost parts of the earth. Its message is for all the people of every nation and tribe. It can make no compromises, form no alliances, agree to no armistice, or sign no treaties with any other religions. It boldly lays claim to absolute supremacy in the entire realm of divine power and worthiness of worship, and pronounces all and every other form of religion deceptive and dangerous idolatry.

The Christianity of Christ lifts up Jesus as the only and all-sufficient Saviour who, by the grace of God, "hath tasted death for every man," and is able to save to the uttermost. The religion of Jesus is the challenge of Almighty God against all other religions and forms of worship, whatsoever, that do not acknowledge the supreme authority of the Word of God and recognize and trust in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, crowning him King of kings and Lord of lords. Contemplating these facts, we may understand that when Jesus Christ said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth. I came not to send peace, but a sword," he knew full well that his claims were of a character so absolute that they must arouse the strongest antagonism against him and his followers; that the progress of his Kingdom involved battle royal against every form of sin, superstition and false teaching and that only those were fit for service in this holy war who loved him above all the ties of family and were willing to make the supreme sacrifice and follow him joyfully at all cost.

If you will go back and read the chapter from which we take the text, you will find that the text itself comes directly after the parable of the great supper, when the man who gave it sent his servants to say to those who were bidden, "Come; for all things are now ready." The Lord points out how they began to make excuse; one had bought land; he must see his land. Another had bought oxen; he must prove their training and strength. Another had married a wife and had no desire to attend the supper. The Master who had prepared the supper was angry and sent out his servants into the lanes and streets to bring in the poor, maim, halt and blind. The servant did so, but there

PUTTING OUT TO SEA---Luke 5-4.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

I.

Strange title, maybe, but it just seems to suit the message that is on my heart for this article. Yesterday I was at Corral, a small city in Chili, down by the Pacific Ocean. I noticed as we approached the harbor the spars and upper parts of a steamer that suffered shipwreck in a big storm that beat upon the coast. A wrecked ship is always to me a melancholy sight, and it is never without its lessons. The wreck need not have happened in many cases. I was anxious to know the cause of this wreck at Corral. The story went like this: The ship was loaded with wheat and was anchored just outside the harbor near a very rocky shore. The weathermen were advised that a storm was coming and they urged the Captain to either go into the harbor or put out to sea. He thought he was alright; he had four anchors out and he replied to his advisers: "Oh, my anchors will hold and I will be alright." They who knew the coast and the fierceness of the storms on the Chilean shores persisted in their warnings, but he thought he knew and protested that his four anchors would hold his ship. The storm King came on with his hosts of waves and winds and tempests and in his heart there was no mercy, and his fists were mighty. Stormy nature has no heart and no pity, and on the sea she knows no limit to her wrath. The captain looked on aghast and powerless as one anchor after another was wrenched by the storm King as though it were a thing of straw. Anchors and chains are of little account when the storm King is in a rage. One anchor went, then another, then the third and then the last one, and the ship was soon tossed like a mere chip upon the merciless shores, and no human power could save her. She was numbered with the multitude of ships that are buried in the deep. Captain and crew were saved, thank God, but the spars projecting above the harbor depths testify to the foolishness of a Captain who refused to heed the warning of those who knew and who was wrecked because he did not put out to sea.

II.

Now the moral of that wreck impresses me because I have known so many who suffered shipwreck of soul because they refused to put out to sea with God. What I mean is, they failed to embark upon God's great Ocean of Promise and Love and Power. They had been urged to launch out, but they hesitated, and when the storm broke they got wrecked. Many people and preachers are trusting to human expedients and are anchored in the wrong place. Rev. ——— was a big man, intellectually; he had a reputation as one of the intellectual giants of the Conference. He was a great reader. Methodist theology was too "narrow" for him, though he was pledged to fidelity to it. He wanted to be progressive and up-to-date. He was not going to starve his intellect by adhering to any one theology, no matter if his church vows were involved; he was going after more light; he was going to be a liberalist and shake off the fetters of a "medieval theology." So he took his liberty, became an out-and-out Modernist. Things of the Spirit made no appeal to him; for him to launch out into the deeper things of God was mere cant; he didn't believe in them. He continued to preach in Methodist churches but he was anchored in Unitarian-Modernistic sea; he did not hesitate to teach and preach his intellectual views to the Methodists who paid him well as he destroyed their faith and did vio-

SHOWERS OF BLESSING IN SOUTH AMERICA.

For the past two weeks I have been in a constant stream of revival meetings in Chili, preaching two and three times daily and rushing from one meeting to another. Last Sunday we spent about eight hours in three meetings. Usually our meetings last from two to three hours; night meetings will begin at 7:30 and often it is 10:30 before we are through. Our itinerary took us from Temuco to Osorno, Puerto Montt, Valdivia, Traiquen, Lantaro Victoria, and in every place we were blessed with real old-time revival power. One of the songs we sang had these lines:

"Lluvias de bendicion grandes
Es la promesa de amor,
Hoy te pedimos las mandes
De tu presencia, Señor.

Coro.

"Las lluvias grandes
Mandanos, oh Salvador,
Haz que sintamos de nuevo
Mas de tu gracia y amor."

This is the Spanish translation of "There Shall be Showers of Blessing."

We could not stay long in one place, so we had to preach vital pentecostal messages in every service. Sundays were high days of blessing and power. At the last point we preached morning and night in the Alliance Temple, and afternoon, to a crowded Methodist Church. Our last service was also to be held in the M. E. Church, but the crowd was too great and we had to preach in the Alliance Temple again, because it was very large. At all three Sunday services we had altar services. At night we preached mostly to sinners and when the appeal was made there were about forty seekers. At the last night, as we preached on "The Baptism of Fire," we had a wonderful altar service in which many from the various churches sought the Spirit's fullness, and many unsaved also came forward. It was like an old-fashioned holiness camp meeting, but we did not have to stand and plead for seekers; here the people have hungry hearts and they earnestly want redemption from all sin.

George W. Ridout.

lence to their theology. Bye and bye, he came to the sea of death; friends, anxious about his hope for the life to come, asked him how his hope was; he replied, "These things did not concern him." He had no testimony and left no hope. He sank beneath the billows without hope. He anchored in the wrong place and he never put out to sea with God.

III.

Rev. ——— was a young man of fine intellect, brought up 'mid the best environments. His church home was spiritual; he passed through many revivals and made a good confession of Christ as his Saviour. He was a good student, and when he went to college he made a fine record, standing high in his classes. While in college he imbibed much of the modern learning that took the edge off his Christian experience, and when he was about to graduate his professors, knowing he was destined for the ministry, took extra pains to induce him to go to ——— Theological School; here he went beyond himself in the modernistic books and studies he took up. He became so intensely modern in his gospel that when he went back to his home church to fill the pulpit over Sunday, the people who had been brought up on the gospel listened with painful amazement as he unfolded a new theology, a new faith and a new gospel. The young man anchored in the wildest kind of modernistic sea and when the storm broke upon him his anchors failed to hold; he was driven by the blasts upon the rocks and his faith became shattered in everything religious. He became an agnostic; the ministry had no place for him. He became a college professor in an institution where religion did not matter. He refused to put out to sea upon God's great Word, upon God's great Gospel.

IV.

The church at ——— had a good, long history of respectable standing. It had a fine building and a large membership. It was in a city where the population was made up greatly of working classes and the people went to church, and the children to Sunday school. It had some fine preachers in the long ago who preached the gospel of repentance and salvation and had some great revivals of religion, but of late years its preachers were of the modern mind and the spiritual life went down low, class meetings closed up and prayer meetings were neglected and the attendance at the preaching services fell off, many people going to the Salvation Army and to the Missions to get some spiritual food. One year the conference sent a pastor to that church who believed and preached the whole round of Methodist doctrines. Seeing the need of a revival in the church he preached the great doctrine of sanctification and the pentecostal fullness. In the fall he opened a revival meeting and the need of a clean heart, holiness of life, the baptism of the Spirit were all emphasized and many became convicted of their need and it was not long before there was a glowing revival on at the church where scores of people were saved and sanctified. There were some in the church whose only interest in these meetings was to criticise, oppose and complain. Some said the preacher was going to ruin their nice church with such meetings, and others complained that the revival was interfering with their plans and programs for religious education and other activities. Some officials took a very decided stand against the revival and wrote to the Bishop that, after the meetings are over, he should send down some connectional leader of the church and give a series of lectures on the Modern Study of the Bible or kindred themes so as to steady things and counteract the influence of so much holiness teaching, and if the good Bishop would come himself it would have a very healthy effect, as everybody understood that he had no sympathy with the second blessing, or the second coming, and had new and advanced views on the second birth.

The revival went on in power until more than seventy members of the church were converted who had joined on confession of faith, and who never knew what it was to be regenerated. Fifty or more of the most spiritual members sought and obtained the blessing of holiness. Two young men had their call to preach, and over a hundred sinners were converted in the meeting; prayer meetings were no longer neglected, but were attended by large numbers and, even after the revival closed, all the meetings had the evangelistic power in them. One would suppose that this would all mean a new and glorious period in the Methodism of that church, but a lot of the official members had anchored in the wrong place; their anchors of formalism, worldliness and modernism failed to hold when the pentecostal winds blew upon them. They refused to put out to sea with God themselves, and they were determined to have the church officially go the way they went. Conference came on and the Bishop was appealed to to deliver their church from fanaticism by sending them a preacher who would counteract the influences set in motion by the holiness revival. The Bishop responded to the appeal and when appointments were read, Rev. Dr. ———, was assigned to that pulpit. Now this Doctor of Divinity had a reputation for the most liberal views; he was modern to the core, half and half Unitarian-Methodist. He preached the two Isaiahs, and interpreted Isaiah 53 as having nothing to do with the Atonement. He preached character building as the great mission of the church and that regeneration was a process, prayer was subjective only, and it was a sign of weakness to expect objective answers to prayer; holiness belonged only to angels and God and the most we could do was to emulate the holiness of God in worship.

He put a stop to holiness meetings in the church; soon the prayer meeting was reduced to a handful, congregations dwindled and, in a couple of years, the church had a struggle to maintain itself; the flock had been scattered, the holiness people found it impossible to attend the ministry of one who did little else than destroy the doctrines of the church.

To this church had come the chance to launch out into the deep, but the heads said no! and wreckage came and defeat and failure, and that church has never recovered itself.

THIS, THAT, AND THE OTHER

Rev. Thomas C. Henderson.

I KNOW OF AN INDEPENDENT CHURCH

None of the larger cities of this country which is doing the work of the Kingdom of God in a most remarkable fashion. Its leaders insist that it is not "independent," but "totally dependent on the Lord." The church is not large as churches go now-a-days, but its activities are so varied and numerous that the entire time of two pastors is needed for its oversight. These two pastors have no set salary, though they are amply cared for. Over and above their offerings for their two pastors, this church's treasurer handled for actual Gospel work last year the magnificent sum of $26,289.06. This church makes up no budget, never has any sort of a drive for money, asks no one to make a pledge for the future, never passes a contribution plate in its services, allows the selling of no tickets, has no suppers nor banquets, nor entertainments. Boxes are provided into which the people can place their gifts. The Sunday school of this church uses the Bible without lesson helps in their class work. They have a group of spiritual young folk who are ablaze with evangelistic passion and who conduct street meetings, visit hospitals, homes, conduct Bible classes and conduct jail meetings and missionary institutes. Eighty-six new members were added to this church last year. Ten per cent of the members are actively engaged in missionary work in this or other countries. That is a report of which many larger and sectarian churches might well be envious. Indeed, there is a lot of sneering about "independent works" which is blind bigotry and nothing else. When it comes to sacrificial, soul-saving, scriptural and missionary work for God, many of the despised independent groups are putting the proud denominational organizations to shame. These smaller churches and missions do not have a ponderous system and institution above them to support and maintain, so they often give themselves more sincerely and with greater zeal to the first work of all Christians—the saving of souls.

The Warning Prophet was Never More Needed by any Generation than he is needed by this one. Popular opinion and action give the lie to this, and lots of preachers seem to think that popular opinion is right, so they have ceased to preach the offensive and stern truths of the Gospel which rebuke and warn this animal age. Too many preachers are nicely situated with a fair salary and with some degree of popularity, who do not give themselves to disturb and alarm their congregations. President Elliot said that the first quality needed in a college president is the ability to inflict punishment. The true Gospel preacher should be courageous enough and strong enough in his loyalty to Christ and righteousness so that he can fearlessly punish worldliness and sin. It is sinful for the preacher to keep silent about the truths which may cost him his job. That preacher who does nothing more than keep alive the rugged and unpopular truths of the Gospel and gives consistent witness to the reality of Gospel verities is doing a much needed and sure-to-be-rewarded task. Let not the faithful evangel of Christ get discouraged. This generation may not like your message, but it needs it. Do not tone down to suit the fashion of the hour or you will drift with this age to hell. Daniel was not wanted by the popular crowd in Babylon, nor by the young chap who ruled in the stead of his father—Belshazzar, but when the mysterious writing came on the wall of the royal palace, and fear gripped the wine-crazed crowd, Daniel was greatly wanted then. The young ruler ignored his message, but God kept his word and the centuries since hail Daniel with praise because he was faithful in the darkness and also faithful when the spotlight was on him. The Gospel will not fail. The Bible will not be destroyed, and some of us purpose that as long as God gives us life we will be faithful to God and men though hell unlimber its heaviest artillery and bombard us all the days of our lives.

There is Just One Step from Grace to Disgrace. While we were driving through a county-seat city in one of the central states, Mrs. Henderson called my attention to the generous advertising being given to a "show" which was to be put on in the largest theater in the city under the auspices of the "Grace Methodist Episcopal Church." The play was described as "a whirlwind of fun," "One continuous scream of laughter," etc. There is no denying it—that is not the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, but the Disgraced Methodist Episcopal Church.

A Sizable Department Store in one of the Cities Through Which We Travel Frequently is advertised as "The Cathedral of Fashion." It is quite true that many women make fashion a sacred thing and fairly worship it, but I think the title would better fit some churches in this country which by their parade of pride and their bid for popular favor are nothing other than Cathedrals of fashion.

A Nationally-known Preacher was preaching in one of our Oberlin churches, and in the course of his sermon he said, "My dear friends; you are all of you the children of God." A friend of ours, who has courage to match his convictions, spoke out in meeting and asked the preacher: "Friend, can you guarantee that statement to be true?" That was the retort perfect and courageous.

Here Are True and Sharp Words from the pen of Brother N. B. Herrell in the Herald of Holiness: "The profiteers, racketeers, grafters, traitors, hypocrites, criminals, crooked politicians and false ministers as well as the great mass of common sinners in our land go untouched, unreached and unrebuked, while the average pastor or church utilizes the time and talent of the evangelistic ministry to save his face or his profession. Many of the so-called evangelistic meetings are in purpose and in objective to save the face of the failing pastor or declining church, or to remedy a deplorable financial situation rather than the saving of souls. The evangelistic ministry has largely been reduced to a salvaging crew instead of being an artillery brigade preparing the way for an advance of a militant church evangelizing the world with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven."

THE WORLD CONFERENCE.

FOR THE PROMOTION OF HOLINESS.

"World Conference for the Promotion of Holiness," to be held for not less than two weeks, in Chicago or a neighboring city, Sept. 1-15, 1933, has taken form as a definite project and is now being announced.

The thought originated in 1930 with a man from Japan, one from California, and one from the middle west: Juji Nakada of Tokyo, Seth C. Rees, of Los Angeles, and C. W. Butler, of Cleveland. It was placed in the hands of a committee of the National Association for the Promotion of Holiness who, after one year of consideration, recommended action on June 11, 1931. On this date the committee was enlarged and John Paul, whose office is 1410 N. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill., was named as chairman of the committee for building a program and putting on the convention, and instructed to create an expense fund out of voluntary offerings to cover printing, postal and secretarial costs, and traveling expenses of chairman, and committee when it meets. This fund will be represented in an audited report to the committee and merged into the expense fund incidental to the cost of the convention itself.

The committee was advised to enlarge itself to whatever size might be necessary to assure representation of all denominations and of all non-denominational institutions or units generically related to the testimony and teaching of the deeper Christian experience accomplished through the baptism with the Holy Spirit, by faith, subsequent to regeneration, and who are laboring along the general lines illustrated by the "National Association for the Promotion of Holiness," in the United States of America. An effort will be made to include every group of Christian believers throughout the world, regardless of race, who agree with the central idea of the conference and who are adaptable to its fellowship.

The general conference will be conducted in the English language, but sectional meetings, many of which will be provided to accommodate natural delegation units, may be held in other languages as demanded. Some addresses may be given from other tongues in the general meetings, through interpreters.

The various Christian denominations whose highest bodies meet before this convention will be asked for an official expression relating them to its high spiritual aim, and delegations, without limit as to numbers, will be sought from every recognized segment of Christendom; for it is true that, with rarest exception, all denominations have members who believe in and enjoy the faith of Christian Holiness. Delegates will defray their own expenses excepting where they are backed by the organization selecting them, which may be a state or district association or conference, or a local church or school.

The program will be most compelling; one that people can afford to cross continents and seas to enjoy.

The object of the Conference will be: (1) To make a spiritual contribution to the institutions of Christianity commensurate with

LIMITING GOD.

Evangelist P. P. Belew.

THE great apostle to the Gentiles had such a conception of divine omnipotence that it required great difficulty to express it. He says that God "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." But he hastens to modify this fine conception by the clause "according to the power that worketh in us." This clause is the emphatic part of the text, and fixes responsibility for success or failure upon the church. The statement often heard, "God can work and none can hinder," is true only when rightly understood. God does not always choose to do everything that he can do. Christ was hindered in his working, at least, in one place by the unbelief of the people. It is said that one class "limited the Holy One of Israel." And it is the conviction of this preacher that the Lord is limited and the progress of his work retarded day by day even by his own good people.

WE LIMIT GOD THROUGH A LACK OF VISION.

There is danger that we shall sense the difficulties and fail to see the advantages. When the king of Syria learned that God was revealing his plans of war to Elisha, who in turn made them known to the king of Israel and thus thwarted the military tactics of the Syrians, he sent an army by night to take Elisha. Upon arising early the next morning and seeing the city surrounded by horses and chariots, the servant of Elisha sighed despairingly and said, "How shall we do?" But Elisha prayed and God opened the young man's eyes, so that he saw surrounding them and filling the mountain the Lord's horses and chariots of fire. It is good statesmanship to consider the strength of the enemy, but we should also look unto the hills from whence cometh our strength and see him who is able to do the exceeding abundant.

We need a vision both of our opportunities and of our resources. God has promised us an open door that no man can shut and guaranteed to supply all our need according to his riches in glory. Failing to comprehend this we often limit the working of God. We are not responsible simply for what we can do in our own strength, but for what we can do through divine strength. How often is it heard in prayer, "Lord, give us 'a soul' to-night," as if one soul were the limit of our expectation. Would it not be better to pray, "Lord, give us many souls?" Or even souls—anything except such smallness of expectation. Frequently the preacher says: "Is there 'one' here that will accept Christ?" The implication is that he expects only one and will be somewhat surprised if he should come. Why not say, "Let all who need spiritual help come now to the altar?" Then another says: "We must take a 'little' offering this morning." No need to emphasize the smallness of it; the donors will see to that part of it. Why not say instead, "Let us liberally support the work of the Lord by giving as he has prospered and blessed us?"

Once when a student in college and pastor of a church with only a handful of members, who were "poor as church mice"; with the church building in danger of being sold for debt; and himself receiving a salary inadequate to support his family, the writer arranged an eight-days' campaign with a nationally known evangelist. On Saturday night before the opening Sunday the streets were covered with a solid coating of ice, but the saints prayed and a snow covered the ice. The crowds filled the tabernacle, God gave a revival, and by Friday night a handsome sum was raised for the evangelist. On the last Sunday hundreds of dollars were given to save the property and the pastor received more than his usual salary. O Lord, enlarge our vision that we may not limit Thee.

WE LIMIT GOD THROUGH A LACK OF CO-OPERATION.

"We are laborers together with God." God might have preached the Gospel direct from heaven or used the angels as evangelists, but he chose rather to work through the agency of redeemed humanity. And since he has chosen this method the church is made responsible in a large degree for the salvation of men. In the days of Israel God cursed the inhabitants of Meroz, because they came not up to the help of the Lord in the battle against the mighty. Will he not likewise be displeased with us, if we fail him in the campaign for immortal souls?

Not only are we to co-operate with God but also with one another, and indeed co-operation with God implies and demands co-operation with one another. Someone says that co-operation multiplies by ten. Co-operation not only increases human strength but also enlists divine strength. Christ says: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." An imperfect plan with an hundred percent co-operation will accomplish more than a perfect plan with only fifty percent co-operation. Even though a church does not consider the methods of its pastor to be the best, the net results to the kingdom of God will be greater if the church co-operates with him than they will be if the church opposes him. As Christian workers our success depends largely on our ability to do team work. Obviously, then, if we fail in the matter of co-operation, we limit the working of God.

WE LIMIT GOD THROUGH A LACK OF PRAYER.

"Ye have not because ye ask not." For wise reasons God has made prayer the condition of certain divine favors. It has been said that no sinner is converted till someone has prevailed with God in his behalf. As the mother must pass through intense suffering to give birth to her child, so must the church experience the pangs of soul travail in order to have a genuine revival. Many say prayers, but few intercede. Real praying is hard work; that is one reason for its scarcity. We are too lazy to pray. Of course, when one has entered the inner sanctuary and his soul is flooded with the divine Presence, prayer is delightful. But while he is ascending the hill and battling against the static of worldly and devilish influences, it is laborious. But there is possibly no other exercise in which we may engage that gets such great results. Absolutely nothing is more emphatically taught in the Scriptures than that God answers prayer. Deprive me of this conviction and I am a ruined man. Convince me that God does not change people and things in answer to prayer and I must close my Bible in despair and preach no more. Let it be told to all the world that God does answer prayer; and that to the extent we fail to pray we limit the work of God and retard the progress of righteousness in the earth.

WE LIMIT GOD THROUGH A LACK OF FAITH.

"According to your faith be it unto you." It is possible to have faith for your own salvation and at the same time have little or no faith for the salvation of others. In addition to personal saving faith we should have faith for the success of the great cause for which God has made us responsible, faith for the supernatural and the extraordinary. The writer is certain that on several occasions he has seen the humanly impossible accomplished through faith; and it is his firm conviction that such will be the frequent experience of any one that will dare to believe God. I once knew an aged Christian lady, who was an object of charity, worth absolutely nothing in dollars and cents, to pledge five hundred dollars to the work of the Lord. And she got more than three hundred dollars of it the same day and the entire amount and twenty-five dollars over in one week. Do not wait to become wealthy before you contribute liberally to the Lord's work. Riches may never come to you; and if they did, you would probably become more stingy than you now are. For the most part the cause of holiness is not supported by the wealthy but by the poor of this world, rich in faith, who are willing to sacrifice and believe God. "Lord, increase our faith" that we may not limit Thee."

WE LIMIT GOD THROUGH A LACK OF POWER.

"This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and blasphemy: for the children are come to birth and there is not strength to bring forth." Who is the preacher that has not witnessed with an aching heart the disconcerting spectacle of a church unable to get sinners under conviction and have a revival? We have no sympathy with the idea that it is impossible to have a revival unless all the members of the church are up to par. Such a view is narrow and unscriptural. But the fact remains that a considerable portion of the church must be in a healthy spiritual condition to have a genuine, far-reaching revival. It is a sickly type of converts that is produced by an unspiritual church. Cold professors may compass land and sea and make proselytes, but have a revival they cannot. Paul was so desirous of this endowment that he gloried in his infirmities that the power of God might rest upon him. May God so charge us with his presence as to make us living dynamos of supernatural strength. The antidote for limiting God is to abandon ourselves utterly to the possession and leadership of the Holy Spirit. It was this experience that sent the early disciples forth as flaming evangelists of the risen Christ and it is the only hope of the church today.

THE HOLY SPIRIT IMPARTS VISION.

"Your young men shall see visions." The success of our great movement is largely due to the fact that men and women filled with the Holy Ghost have had a vision of possibilities that made them willing to "go out under the stars" and hew out a kingdom for God and holiness.

THE HOLY SPIRIT BRINGS CO-OPERATION.

Hear the sanctified Paul: "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." Truly Spirit-filled Christians are willing to go the second mile in service and sacrifice. The disposition to withhold co-operation, for insufficient reasons, from a good work savors of a lack of true religion. The spirit that will oppose and cause division over non-essentials is selfish, carnal, and devilish.

THE HOLY SPIRIT HELPS IN PRAYER.

"The Spirit also helps our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Such pangs of soul travail will frequently be felt by the sanctified heart. It was under such a dynamic urge that an illiterate and stammering blacksmith prayed down upon his community a wide-spread revival. It was through the passionate influence of the Holy Spirit that a little woman who had been an invalid for twenty years was able to pray to pass a revival in which one hundred were converted and her own body was completely healed. When the early church prayed the place was shaken. Indeed something is always shaken when a Spirit-filled people pray in the Holy Ghost.

THE HOLY SPIRIT INSPIRES FAITH.

"That ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost." How easy to believe for the supernatural and expect success when filled with his presence. In such an experience our faith does not stand in the wisdom of man but in the power of God. Then we look not at the seen, but to the unseen; not at the temporal, but to the eternal; not at circumstances, but to the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy.

THE HOLY SPIRIT GIVES POWER.

"Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Spiritual power must work in and through men, and is not an abstract something that may be had separate and apart from God. Paul prayed that God would grant the Ephesians "to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man." If we are short on power, it is because we are lacking in the Spirit's manifestation. If our strength is not equal to the task, let us wait in his presence to be so anointed that we may go forth conquering and to conquer through Christ.

YOU MAY BE WONDERING

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

HOW you can do some good! You are not in touch with the people, nor do you know just where the needy ones are, so I am bringing some suggestions to you that may help to solve your problem.

You have noticed our Special Fifty Cent Offer in THE HERALD in which we give you the opportunity to make some one's life brighter by placing in their hands the weekly messages of THE HERALD. You do not have to go outside your door in order to do this, but simply send us the amount you feel led to invest and we shall attend to the rest.

Jesus gave some very encouraging words to people who were, like yourself, seeking to lift up the hands that fall down, and to strengthen the faith of those whose circumstances in life may not be the most inviting. There are many behind prison walls who have been caught in the snares of the Devil who might be touched with a message that you may send them through THE HERALD. They have all the time they need, and will be inclined to read what may fall into their hands.

Then, there are dear hearts who are languishing upon beds of sickness in the hospitals who could be encouraged by reading some of the splendid articles THE HERALD contains each week. Your reward! It is sure, for Jesus has given you the guarantee that, "a cup of cold water given in his name" shall not go unrewarded. Jesus identifies himself with the suffering, needy one, when he says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

That prisoner! Yes, Jesus loves him and longs for his salvation, and when you give to him Jesus takes it as done unto himself. Jesus went all the way to Calvary for that unfortunate man or woman, and he wants you to help them to know of the great love where-with he has loved them. But there is no way for them to know of his sacrifice, except through the ministry of loving hearts who, like their Master, are seeking the lost sheep upon the mountains of sin.

You cannot visit the sick as they lie inside those four little walls in the hospital, but you can make it possible for Uncle Sam to take the glad news to them. How one of those fine gospel sermons or articles would cheer that heart that, perhaps, feels almost like giving up the fight. Yes, there are ways to help, as we have suggested, and I believe there are many who will want to invest part of their tithe in this way. If you do not

Do You Want to Gladden Some Lonely Heart?

In passing through our stock room the other day, I noticed they were unpacking some New Testaments. I examined one and found it to be one of the choicest Testaments I ever saw, very large print, good binding, and what many Testaments do not have, the Psalms in the back. A wish came into my heart that every person whose sight was dim, might be the possessor of one of these Testaments. I asked the business manager what the price was, and to my amazement, found that they were only $1.00; the price, to be sure is more, $1.50, but a special price has been put on this special book in order to get them into the hands of as many people as possible. If there is one who reads this, who knows of an aged person whose life might be brightened with a gift of one of these beautiful Testaments, why not put in your order now for that person's birthday or Christmas present, or, just for the sake of making some one extremely happy as they are going down the western slope of life's journey. I hope we may get orders at once for numbers of these Testaments. I am sure you will be pleased with the book, and your heart will be repaid in the joy that the gift will bring to that dear old saint who sometimes wonders if any one really loves them. Remember, the price is only $1.00, postpaid. Pentecostal Publishing Co. And the book is wonderful for its value.

Yours to help,
MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

THE WORLD CONFERENCE.

this age of critical testing. (2) To refresh the faith of the world's spiritual leaders through mutual fellowship in which points of agreement will be exalted around the undisputed Christ. (3) To examine ourselves and our methods in the light of testimonies and messages from our brethren and sisters who live under other skies, and thus to improve our grasp of realities and be more fully delivered from anything fictitious in our field of emphasis. (4) To seek in united prayer, a world-wide revival of pure and undefiled religion.

The simple themes essential to a personal full salvation will comprise the central idea, doctrinally. A diagnosis of sin, an emphasis upon repentance, faith, the new birth, and the sanctifying baptism with the Holy Spirit. The speakers on the program in the general meetings usually will be of that grade of intelligence which does not project an individual or sectarian theory in an offensive way. But there will be no iron rule saying that this or that doctrine shall be excluded from mention, and Christian tolerance will assure each speaker of perfect freedom to be himself when he presents his message to the conference.

Suitable auditorium space will be provided for exhibits of educational, philanthropic, and promotion work, with the privilege of sale of books, relics or commodities, from the various denominations, associations and institutions represented.

The above initial announcement has been approved by a fraction of the entire committee, representative of four denominations, and including the President of the National Association for the Promotion of Holiness.

Annual Meeting of The Board of Trustees of Asbury College.

(On account of our 4th of July skip this report has been delayed).

COMMENCEMENT at Asbury is usually marked with many high points of interest and moment; one of the outstanding events is the Annual Meeting of her Board of Trustees. They number thirty, hailing from all parts of the nation and foreign lands. A large majority of these faithful and sacrificing friends are usually on hand for this important meeting; this year was no exception, for they came from New York and California and from points between, near and far. Brother Ruth came from California, Mrs. Haskins, Dr. H. M. Shuman from New York, and Dr. Clarence True Wilson, from Washington, D. C., Dr. W. L. Clark, from St. Louis, Rev. John Thomas from Chicago, the Valade Brothers from Detroit, Mr. Brafford from Moundsville, Rev. H. A. Butts from Memphis, and Dr. V. C. Curtis from Mississippi. Space will not permit us to mention those loyal ones of our number closer home who are (using the slogan of our Alumni Association) "Always Assisting Asbury."

Our own and beloved Dr. Morrison was with us again and in his place in the Chair. His health seemed greatly improved. He looked well and preached better than any time we have heard him in recent years. He was again unanimously elected President of the Board.

President Akers gave a wonderful report before the Board which greatly inspired and encouraged all. After round-table discussion of Asbury's future with reference to her stand on Holiness, and standards for which she was raised up, Dr. Akers reaffirmed his desire and determination to keep the banner of full salvation afloat at topmast, to keep Asbury hot at heart and effective on the field. At this moment the spirit ran high and all the Board stood and sang together heartily, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

W. W. Cary, Business Manager, rendered a complete and highly satisfactory report of his stewardship in the business office of the college. Words of commendation were expressed by numerous individuals and the Board went on record as to its appreciation and approval of the fine work done by Mr. Cary in administering the finances of Asbury College.

The general depression had to be considered, also the fact that here in Kentucky, the home of Asbury, we encountered the worst drought during the past year that had occurred in the history of the state. In spite of these facts his report was favorable and gave grounds for faith and encouragement. Practically each and every member of the Board gave some expressed desire to attempt, personally and otherwise, to assist Asbury with her finances during the ensuing year.

With mutual faith and confidence the Administration and Board of Trustees renewed their pledge of faith and hope for a bigger and better Asbury. The Board also fully authorized Dr. H. C. Morrison to establish and charter Asbury Theological Seminary, and elected him as President of the same. It is the aim of the Board to maintain Asbury as a high grade and accredited College with standards acceptable anywhere, together with Asbury Theological Seminary co-ordinated and co-operating, and to continue to send forth teachers and preachers to the ends of the earth fully sanctified and trained for the task.

Somehow, we feel that it is not asking too much of you, dear friends of the great Holiness Movement, that you pray often and earnestly for us, turn students our way, aid financially when possible, pray for the Administration and Board of Trustees, and come to see us as often as possible.

Friends, new and old, departed from the Commencement occasion saying it was "great to be here," and with reassurance that Asbury Will Not Fail Him who has raised her up, nor his people who have so loyally and liberally supported her through the years. Prospects for next year are most encouraging. Reservations indicate increased enrollment of new students and promise of the return of old ones for next year.

O. H. CALLIS, Sec'y.

Board of Trustees of Asbury College.

Indian Springs Holiness Camp.

DOWN in Georgia, just one mile from Indian Springs, Georgia's famous health resort, is situated Indian Springs Holiness Camp Ground. If the life-giving waters of these springs have brought health to the afflicted multitudes who have thronged there since the days of its savage proprietors, the Holiness camp ground bearing that name has been even a greater blessing to the thousands who have attended its ministry of healing for the sin-sick souls of men.

It was founded Christmas week of December, 1889, by the selection of a ten-acre tract on which the large tabernacle now stands. The first meeting was held in August, 1890, under a large tent, rented for the purpose. In 1893 it was incorporated under the laws of Georgia in the Superior Court of Butts County, under the name which it now bears.

Rev. W. A. Dodge, Rev. G. W. Mathews, and Rev. H. A. Hodges were the prime movers in the enterprise destined to prove such a mighty force in the on-going of the kingdom of God in the earth, even to its uttermost parts. Under their godly leadership the hand of God was upon it from the very beginning; and "if God be for us, who can be against us?" Soon the Lord had raised up as their helpers such stalwart men as J. W. Evans, J. S. Betts, T. L. Thrower, Joseph Mabbett, Charlie Tillman, R. F. Burden, Rev. H. P. Meyers, F. C. Benson, M. D. Smith, and others whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

In such an undertaking, large funds were needed, and the Lord saw that such friends were not lacking. Through the love and liberality of those princely laymen, Betts and Evans, the present commodious tabernacle was made possible. It was their generous aid, coupled with the gifts of that godly layman, Wright Garbutt, that built the present hotel, accommodating more than 200 guests. Besides all this, the splendid water system on the grounds was the gift of Brother Betts. More recently, the substantial cement floor and the beautiful and comfortable pews, were the gift of that outstanding layman in Georgia Methodism, R. F. Burden, now the honored president of the Board of Trustees. The useful and attractive waterproof enclosure for the tabernacle was from that devoted friend of the cause of holiness, M. D. Smith. The attractive and comfortable Singers' Cottage is from the loving, generous heart of that elect child of God, Miss Maud Jones. Numerous smaller contributions, but no less generous, from a host of friends of holiness throughout Georgia and elsewhere have made possible the splendid Young People's Tabernacle, the Dodge Memorial, for the free entertainment of pastors, the Mathews Memorial, for the free lodging of pastors' families, the Parsonage, for the free lodging of local preachers and other workers, the Workers' Cottage, the Boys' Camp, two large buildings of 24 rooms each for light housekeeping, added lands, needed repairs, rest rooms in different parts of the grounds, a sewerage system, a light plant, etc. Approximately 100 other cottages privately owned furnish accommodations for some 1500 people on the grounds. Hundreds—even thousands—come in cars, returning home for the night, making this the largest camp in the South, and one of the great holiness camps of the country. As those with eyes to see view the beautiful grounds of this encampment, and survey the achievements of the past, they can but feel, "Behold what God hath wrought!"

The date of the approaching encampment is August 6-16. The leaders this year are, Dr. H. C. Morrison, Rev. Joseph H. Smith, and Dr. John Paul. Dr. J. M. Glenn will have charge of the work with young people and that with children. Charlie D. Tillman will be in charge of the music.

Mrs. T. H. Clarke, of Sebastain, Fla., will have charge of rooms. Rates for two in room, $1.75 each a day. More than two in room, a slight reduction is allowed. Others coming for meals, 50c each. Write her at above address until August 1st, for reservations, then Flovilla, Ga., care camp ground.

Friends of holiness everywhere are earnestly requested to join us in prayer that the approaching meeting may be the best of all history.

J. M. GLENN, Sec'y.

IN THIS BUSY AGE

young women who are struggling, trying to live Christian lives, need a message of encouragement—a message that really creates in one a desire and determination to find time for the deep devotional life.

The little book, "Mary of Bethany," is one of the fullest, richest messages on the devotional life we have read. She had nothing too precious for Jesus and to read this wonderful little book will encourage, inspire and enrich any heart.

The price is only 25c, or 5 copies for $1.00. Order some to hand out just for the good they will do. It will be doing good preaching. Pentecostal Publishing Company, Louisville, Ky.

---GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD---

KODAL, INDIA.

Dear Friends of The Herald Family:

A little over fifty years ago the renowned Bishop William Taylor of the Methodist Church came to India on one of his missionary trips for which he became so famous. His purpose and object were to do work among the Indian people, speaking through an interpreter. When he arrived in Bombay he was greatly impressed with the need among the English-speaking people, especially the Anglo-Indian, a race which has arisen in India as a result of intermarriage between Europeans and Indians. The thought came to Bishop Taylor, Why not bridge the gap between the west and east through this group of people? So he began revival services among the Anglo-Indians with the hope that God would raise up a host of workers who, in turn, could be used to evangelize the Indian people.

Campaigns were held in a number of the big cities with fruitful results. Like a mighty fire the revival spread and great numbers were won to Christ. Churches were immediately organized to conserve the results and today these churches are still carrying on.

It was our privilege to hold services in some of the churches founded by Bishop Taylor. Last week we wrote of our campaign in the Bangalore Church which has been a spiritual center and was started when he first came to India. Following this series we went to Madras for a three-day campaign in Vepery Church. Rev. Hilmar, the missionary pastor, gave us a warm invitation to come to Madras for a revival, but owing to limited time we were only able to remain for three days. At the very first service the church was well filled and the crowds kept increasing. We found a great hunger for the gospel and with every invitation a large number of seekers came forward for prayer. The presence of God's Spirit was very manifest during our short stay and many were blessed.

We also stopped off in Bombay but were only able to stay there one day and night. Rev. Clark, of the Bowen Memorial Church, another church founded by Bishop Taylor, arranged a service for us on the night we were there. A good crowd came out and filled the church. We would have liked very much to have remained in this city for a two-weeks' campaign for we realized an intense need and a real yearning for a Holy Ghost revival. Bishop Badley invited us to stay at his home over night and his good wife and daughter did everything in their power to make us comfortable. We found the Bishop a very spiritual man and very enthusiastic for an evangelistic program. The Methodist Church in India is greatly blessed with bishops of real missionary vision. Bishops Robinson, Badley and Chitambar are truly men of God and our contact with these leaders has been a source of real inspiration and blessing.

The India Holiness Association and interdenominational organization, which has for its objective the spread of scriptural holiness throughout India, invited us through Brother Tracy, who is the president, to hold a holiness convention in Mahabeshwar, a missionary hill station near Bombay. There is a language school there and a number of missionaries come to find relief from the terrific heat of the plains during the summer months. The services were held in the Union Church every morning and evening for four days. Many heard for the first time messages on sanctification and holiness. Many manifested a deep hunger and some sought definitely for this second work of grace for cleansing and power, while others saw more clearly the teaching of the word of God on this subject.

Revs. Beels and McKay, of the Nazarene Mission, with their good wives, royally entertained us and our stay in their homes was a time of real spiritual fellowship.

God has opened doors on every hand for us and we are finding abundant opportunities for service in this needy field.

Please continue to pray for us.

Yours in His service,

Asbury College Foreign Missionary Team.

MIDDLEBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.

From May 6 to 19 we held a meeting in The Pilgrim Holiness Church in Middleburg, Pa., the Rev. Robert H. Heckart, pastor. This meeting was held under rather unfavorable conditions. The membership was small and a goodly number of them lived in the country. The farmers were behind with their work, and some of them acted as though their work was more important than the work of soul-saving. The work of salvation began early in the meeting, and some very clear cases of pardon and purity were had. Then the rain poured constantly for two days and nights which proved another drawback. After the rain stopped the people attended in large numbers and the work of salvation was in evidence again. The attendance was largely made up of people from other churches in Middleburg and other towns and cities, a goodly number of them being members of Pilgrim Holiness Churches, together with the pastors of them. These rendered valuable service in the different meetings, and testified that they received blessings and help from them. Some quite unusual cases of repentance, conversion, and entire sanctification occurred in the meetings and many Christian people testified that they received gracious fresh anointings. The last Sunday afternoon of the meeting was advertised as a rally of the various Pilgrim pastors and churches from different towns and cities. The people came in large numbers and filled all available space, and the blessed Holy Spirit was consciously present to bless and save. To God be all the praise and glory. The pastor continued the meeting after we closed with them.

We had royal entertainment in the hospitable home of the pastor who, with his good wife, extended to us every courtesy and anticipated our every need. The pastor is a young man of diversified gifts, and already has become prominent in different activities of the church, and has made good in every place of responsibility in which he has functioned.

Two dates for meetings which we intended to hold have been cancelled, and any one desiring to have those dates should address us 1350 Grace Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

J. L. Glascock.

OKLAHOMA CITY, TABERNACLE.

For nearly three weeks we conducted a revival campaign in the Oklahoma City Tabernacle. The singer was Prof. L. C. Messer, who used to travel with Bud Robinson. Messer is a live wire and a worker worthwhile. The special soloist for the campaign was the noted Virginia Shaffer. She is a talented singer and a deeply consecrated Christian. Her songs were greatly enjoyed by the people.

We met our old friend, Rev. T. J. Adams, formerly of Ozark, Ark. He attended most all of the services and stood by us loyally. He is a "tall sycamore" in the kingdom, big in body, gifted in memory and strong in the faith of full salvation.

We had the privilege of attending services at St. Luke's Church, the large Methodist Church, South, of which Dr. Forney Hutchinson is the popular pastor. Dr. Hutchinson attended the Tabernacle campaign several times. He treated us with great courtesy and cordiality. We met a number of former Kentuckians who greeted us with the old-time Kentucky hospitality, among them were members of the Lincoln county Adams family and Mrs. Jeffrees, sister of Rev. J. B. Kendall, evangelist.

At Purcell, Okla., we visited a life-time friend and old school-mate from the mountains of Kentucky, Mr. Hiram Garland and his brother Albert, of Hamilton, Ohio.

Rev. A. T. Puntney, an old Asbury boy, teacher in the State School at Edmond, Okla., attended the services and had us to address the Rotarian Club of his city. Dr. M. A. Beason, formerly of Meridian, Miss., has recently been elected president of the College at Edmond.

It was our privilege to attend chapel service at Bethany Nazarene College. It is a fine school and doing a great work. We took dinner at the hospitable home of Dr. A. T. Williams, one of the General Superintendents of the Nazarene Church.

We are now in a revival in the Methodist Church, Ruston, La., with the altar full of seekers. We go from here to Gibsland, La., and thence to Chicago, Ill., for a revival in Paul Rader's Tabernacle.

Yours in the work,

Andrew Johnson.

MIANGO, AFRICA.

Dear Friends: I wish you could have peeped through my eyes last night and seen what I saw flooded in the soft African moonlight. I am sure it would have moved your hearts to pity and to prayer. It was the death dance carried on by a group of raw pagans on some flat rocks under the full moon. But this is not the beginning of my story and I must go back to the why and wherefore.

In January Miss Moulding returned from her furlough in England and was stationed at Oro with me. Soon after this Mr. Playfair, our Field Director, insisted that I go for a rest on the beautiful Banchi Plateau of Northern Nigeria. Mr. and Mrs. Playfair, with little Clyde and me, made this trip in a Ford Station wagon. We were two weeks on the way and visited nine mission stations. In all we traveled about six hundred and fifty miles. A book could be written about this trip, but I can only give a few details.

Our first Sunday was spent at Patigi on the Niger River in the Mohammedan Nupe tribe. The new chief with his courtiers filled the humble mud church building and although he is a follower of the false prophet and came to church only to show friendliness to the white man, we know that the word of God which went forth that Sunday morning will not return unto him void, and we believe that some of the seed fell on good ground and will bring forth fruit. It was at Patigi when vainly trying to buy food that we were presented with some crocodile eggs. We broke one and decided we would leave eggs off of the menu that morning!

Our second Sunday was spent at Karu among the pagan Gburi tribe. What a difference we found between these simple, humble people and the self-righteous Moslems. We also found in many a real hunger for the word of God. Mr. Gibson, one of the missionaries there, is treating hundreds of natives for that most loathsome disease called yaws. Scarcely a family in that whole section is free from this terrible affliction. It is very contagious and most repulsive. We saw people with nose and ears eaten off and some whose faces had become featureless. Mr. Gibson treats them with a series of injections and is having marvelous success. In this way the love and friendliness of the natives are won and though they come to be made whole physically there are some who go away made whole spiritually.

Mr. Playfair's Ford was the first car to ever go into Karu and you can imagine the stir it made among the people. Many were the grunts and "ahs!" and "ohs!" of wonder at the seeming magic of the white man. We had been told that it was impossible to get the car in and out of Karu. This news did not daunt Mr. Playfair, however, for there were only twenty-three miles of no road, over rocks, across dried-up river beds and through brush. With the help of willing natives, ropes, shovels and picks the car was safely taken through to a point about sixteen miles beyond Karu where we again had a road.

In our entire trip there was only one place where we were forced to go into the railroad, put the car on a freight and take a two-hour ride in the queer little Nigerian railway train. In our journey we had to cross many dried-up river beds, go through some shallow rivers with water above the running board and cross deep rivers on rafts made of logs placed on rows of native dug-out canoes and poled over. There were many crude bridges made of logs and soil, some extremely narrow and others looking very weak and shaky. After nearly going through one we decided to lighten the load afterwards by getting out ourselves and leaving all the risk with Mr. Playfair and the Ford.

As we did our traveling in the daytime we did not see many wild animals. We saw many types and sizes of monkeys. Mr. Playfair says that when he travels at night he sees antelope, wild dogs, leopards and lions. He almost ran into a leopard one night and was sorry afterwards that he did not.

Climbing the Banchi Plateau was most interesting. At one place there is an eighteen hundred foot rise in one mile of road. The scenery was beautiful and must be even more so in the rainy season, when all is fresh and green and the harmattan dust is not everywhere in the air. This fine sandy dust comes from steady winds blowing down from the Sahara desert in the middle of the dry season. It is very uncomfortable at times to nose, throat and eyes and also much to be dreaded by any who may have "that school-girl complexion." The harmattan looks like a fog in the distance and greatly limits the range of view.

The S. I. M. Rest Home is at Miango, four thousand feet above sea level. It is lovely and cool here, such a change from the heat we have had at Oro the last few months. The thermometer registers about 65 degrees each morning and evening and on one exceptionally cold morning was down to 50 degrees. When I first came it was such a change that I actually suffered from the cold, but now it seems delightful. There are ten missionaries here at present who have come for recuperation.

WILMORE, KENTUCKY.

Dear Herald Family:

'Tis glorious to report another soul-saving revival. Yes, right in springtime, farmers never so busy, schools just closing, housecleaning, garden-making and yet, right in the face of all, the church was crowded from the start. Some nights Boosters with two and three trucks hauling scores of high and sixth and seventh grades, would pack that church with the young eager to hear about the One who had come to rift all clouds, take away every sorrow, unload all heart-breaking burdens, giving all smiles for frowns, joy for sorrow, turning laughter loose inside until we all rejoiced in seeing that red-blooded crowd of wideawake young people getting so blessed.

It is easy to pack the church and crowd the altar when God's people are willing to pay the price. There must be sincerity and sympathy. The young will listen if they are led by those who are really in earnest and not working up something for the numbers or a glowing report, and go into it for real salvation. We are praising God for this golden gateway through which hundreds are being led to salvation.

Let's all get to Lake Arthur Camp, July 10th to 19th. This is our sixth year with this glorious camp. That President is the man for that place. He is bringing that big camp to the forefront. Rev. Howell is a man who has great business foresight as well as hindsight. He knows how to plan for a growing camp. We had a great camp last year, the best in twenty-five years, the president said publicly.

We are slating for fall and winter revivals; just a freewill offering is all we ask. We go to a fine Baptist Church in October. We must do thorough work. Thorough work will build up the church; thorough work will be an asset to church, community and pastor.

Yours in his happy glad service,

Will J. Harney.

SCOTTSVILLE, KENTUCKY.

I am in the midst of a great tent meeting at Scottsville, Ky. Crowds are increasing every night and the interest is deepening. Numbers are coming forward for prayer. Friday night a number of Cavalrymen who were on their way from Camp Oglethorpe to Camp Knox, were at our services and many of them were touched and moved forward.

I find this, everywhere, that men are hungry for the gospel, but it is getting harder and harder to get enough engagements in our churches to keep constantly busy; but the Lord is not confined to the church walls. Anywhere, everywhere, he is seeking to make himself known. I am ready to go anywhere, with or without a tent.

was still room at the supper table. Then the Lord said, "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." He adds, that those who were first bidden shall not taste of my supper. Evidently the parable was intended as a rebuke to the Jews, to whom salvation was first offered, and who rejected it, and Jesus is opening up to them the future of their ruin. Having rejected God's invitation to salvation, God rejects them, and sends the Gospel to the Gentile world. He will offer the Gospel to the outcasts of humanity; those who are spiritually and morally maimed by sin, blinded with wickedness, and dwell in the neglected highways and hedges of spiritual destitution, shall be sought after and brought into the Kingdom of grace and mercy. But those honored people, those chosen ones, to whom he first appealed shall be left out for the starvation of their proud souls.

Jesus was speaking plain words here. The interested multitudes followed him and he turned to them with the words of the text. He puts the standard very high. They are to understand that men have permitted business and pleasure to keep them away from the Gospel feast. They have many excuses: One is busy attending to land; another is engaged trying out oxen; another is enjoying the companionship of the recently wedded wife, and thus Jesus teaches us that the world is preoccupied with money-making and pleasure-seeking, and refusing to come to him for salvation. He now sets up a very high standard. If a man will come to him, he must not permit his father, mother, wife, children, brethren and sisters, or his own life, to stand in the way of his surrender, consecration and devotion to his Saviour and Lord. "Then the text, "And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple."

Thus we see that the Christianity of Christ exalts itself over all religions. Over the claims of all men, all human occupations, all human affection, Jesus at once claims absolute supremacy. Those who would follow Jesus must first of all make up their minds to a great forsaking. They must cut loose from business, pleasure, family, friends, any and everything that would hinder genuine devotion, glad obedience, and zealous following of Jesus. This does not mean that the Lord Jesus would not have us industrious, diligent in business, and affectionate with regard to all family ties and obligations; but it does mean that none of these things is to hinder us from a devoted following after him.

We must not overlook the fact that having broken away from any and all hindrances and incumbrances we are to take up his cross. Let it be remembered that the Christianity of Christ involves a cross, and the cross means crucifixion. It means death to selfishness. It involves painful separation and readjustment. The cross means that we are not to shun reproach. We are to be faithful disciples who are glad to bear witness to the godhead and supremacy of our Lord. We are to testify that he is our personal Saviour, that in him there is all-sufficiency; that he, and he alone, can pardon and cleanse and keep those who commit themselves to him.

It means much to follow Jesus. Jesus is moving. He is active. He is going and he does not have a place to lay his head. He is going into Jerusalem when he knows it means brutal treatment, stripes, a crown of thorns, a robe of ridicule, the spittle of hatred and the cross of agony. Those who would be his disciples must follow him when it involves misunderstanding, misrepresentation, loss of prestige and influence among the proud and worldly; when it involves persecution, loss of friends, loss of money, and, if God will it so, loss of life. Multitudes in the past have followed Christ when it has meant all of this, and we have not heard that they have ever regretted their devotion, the sacrifices they have made, the burdens they have borne, and the conflicts through which they have passed.

We have among us today a class of religious teachers who would have us modify the claims of our Lord. They suggest that we compromise with other religions, that we have a sort of piece-meal salvation, taking out the better part of the teachings of heathen philosophers and mixing it in with the teachings of our Lord Jesus. They would tone down the very sweeping statements of Christ with reference to his supremacy. They would hush up the testimonies of his disciples that he, and he alone, is the supreme Teacher, the only Saviour, and that in him all fullness dwells, and that all other religions must surrender to the sway of his sceptre and bow at the foot of his Cross.

It seems that much of present day Christianity has no cross; in fact, no Christ. It makes no sacrifice; it has experienced no separation. It knows nothing of death to the world and to self. We have multitudes of churchmembers about us everywhere who dress like the world, act like the world, seek their pastimes and pleasures with the world. They run after that which the world pursues and find their pleasure in that which the world enjoys. The teachings of Christ being true—and they are true—these people are deluded. They are not the disciples of Christ. They are busy with lands and oxen and wives, money-getting, pleasure-seeking, Christ-forgetting, and yet seek to comfort their deluded souls with the thought that they are the Lord's and in that Great Day will be accepted.

The Lord nowhere teaches that you can give him an hour in church on Sabbath morning and the rest of your time to worldliness. There is not a hint anywhere in his Gospel that you can give him a part of your money, be it a copper or a million, and give your heart to selfishness and sinful pleasure. The teaching of the chapter from which we take the text is comprehensive and clear; nothing can be permitted to come between the soul and Jesus. He must be first. He must be crowned Lord of all. This is not the exaction or whim of a cruel master; it is the supreme tyranny of an all-prevailing and unutterable love. It is the conquest of a love that gave itself to die to redeem men, to win them, to draw them, to make them his own by a love that gladly surrenders, that joyfully consecrates, that follows carrying the cross with songs of triumph. Those who have made the separation, who have taken up the cross, who have experienced the marvelous thrill of the crucifixion of self, bear witness that they have come into a realm where the sun always shines; that they have found the pearl of great price; that they enjoy the companionship of a Saviour so great and glorious that every sacrifice is met with a blessing that far more than compensates for any and all denial and suffering.

Those who separate themselves from the world, if need be, break the tenderest ties of friendship and family relations, to go out with Jesus to bear his cross, to follow him through evil as well as good report, bear witness that they have found the fountains of life; that they have satisfied the thirst of their immortal spirits; that Jesus Christ is able to save to the uttermost and to meet and gratify all the longings of the human soul; that, like the ancient Apostle, they glory in the Cross, by which the world is crucified unto them and they are crucified unto the world.

Beloved, have you made the separation? Have you taken the Cross? Are you a true disciple of Jesus? Have you found in him rest for your souls? Do you experience the thrill of his love and power that saves to the uttermost? Have you committed to him that which he is able to keep unto that day when he shall appear and we shall appear with him in his glory? If so, you are blessed indeed. If not, make haste to make the supreme surrender, the entire consecration. Take up the Cross with its crucifixion and reproach; die to self, and arise in newness of life to follow Christ and shine with him forever.

Having a Good Time in the Woods

Some thirty years ago we opened a camp meeting on the old Morrison farm a few miles south of Glasgow, Ky. It was rather crude. We held the meetings for some years in a tent, and finally erected a tabernacle. The seats were uncomfortable boards, on poles, rough side up. But in spite of all these difficulties the Lord blessed us in the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of believers. We got two fine preachers out of those meetings who are now successful members of the Louisville Conference, and have won many souls to Christ.

The timbers of the old tabernacle were rotting away, the roof had decayed, and for some years the meetings had run down until it was practically out of use. Several summers passed without any camp meeting. When the Lord raised me up from my sick bed I went down, preached twice in the place; the people became interested and we tore down the old tabernacle and have built a new one. We got steel girders affording fine space without any posts. We have a good metal roof. Many of the neighbors gave splendid work, others made contributions, and for the past few weeks I have been down with a bunch of carpenters and some laboring men clearing up the debris of the old tabernacle, building a nice platform, pulpit and comfortable pews. Things are now getting in good shape, and some of us are believing that the Lord will do great things at Pentecostal Park, the name of the camp ground.

We had intended to hold the meeting in July, but being a farming community the people are very busy, so we have arranged to have the meeting August 20-30, covering the fourth and fifth Sundays. We are believing for the salvation of many souls. Join us in prayer.

We have built a summer house, very cheap, but will be a comfortable place for our workers to sleep. I handled nearly every piece of timber that went into it, and my health seemed to improve all the time. I spent my nights with my cousin, Mr. J. E. Watson, of Glasgow. We were up every morning a little after four o'clock and Cousin Jimmie took me and the workmen to the camp, where we were on the ground before six o'clock in the morning. I bought a quart bottle of sweet-milk, a small loaf of whole wheat bread and a half pound of breakfast bacon. At noon I cut me a forked stick, built a fire, broiled my bacon, made a sandwich of it with my whole wheat bread, washed it down with sweet-milk and had a real feast.

I plowed this ground fifty-six years ago; now there are beautiful trees on it; it is a lovely grove. There is one poplar tree growing where I plowed fifty-six years ago, that measures eight feet in circumference. It seems impossible that such a tree should grow in a half century, but we measured it with a tapeline, more than once. A number of fine poplars were cut off these grounds, taken to the sawmill and sawed into heavy timbers for the tabernacle.

I have had a delightful time in these blessed woods with the workmen. Several men gave me free days labor. My cousin, James Watson, worked a day in laying floor in the amen corners of the tabernacle. He is 76 years of age, straight as an arrow, and it was simply wonderful how that man could fling plank around and use the hammer and saw. It felt like a revival; the brethren were in such good humor and the love of God seemed to be on the place. It was great to be there among the scenes of my boyhood. I believe we have about as comfortable seats as I ever saw at a camp ground, except the splendid pews that our beloved Brother Burden gave to Indian Spring camp a few years ago. My heart is crying out for the salvation of the children of the men and women I knew and loved back in my boyhood. Remember the date, August 20-30. Pray for us.

For information, write to Josh Barber, Glasgow, Ky., Rt. 4. Visitors who want to stay on the ground should bring their bedding. We will undertake to furnish cots.

Your brother,
H. C. MORRISON.

Dr. Ridout's Itinerary in South America.

August 1—Buenos Aires, Argentina, care Rev. F. Ferguson, Gaona 2578, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

When work finished in Argentina, will go to Brazil. Address care Rev. W. G. Borchers, Rua Jose de Alencar 176, Campinas, Sao Paulo, Brazil, South America.

The Rev. J. C. McPheeters is doing a splendid work at Glide Memorial Church, San Francisco, and is attracting a large number of hearers every Sunday. He is faithful to every interest of the Church and carries out the program. On Wednesday, June 17th, he and many of his membership observed a Day of Prayer and Fasting, which our Bishops asked for. The first service was from 6:30 to 7:30; then there was a service from 9:30 to 10; noon service from 12:00 to 12:30; afternoon prayer meeting from 3:00 to 3:30, and the evening service from 8:30 to 9:30. At all of these services there was the administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and during the day a goodly number of people were at the services and spent much time in prayer.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

Don't You Want Some

extra copies of the fine Prohibition Number? We have printed an extra supply, believing the advocates of Prohibition would want to get some of them to distribute in their community. We let you have them at the rate of 3 cents per copy, or $2.00 per hundred.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all of its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD sent for the next six months. And don't forget to pray that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

A KING WHO COULD NOT SLEEP

Mrs. Geneva Mendenhall.

In the Bible we read of three great Empires which rose and conquered all the lands about them, only to be overthrown in turn by some greater and more powerful nation. The first of these was Assyria, the kingdom which carried the Ten Tribes of Israel into captivity. The second was the Babylonian kingdom by which the kingdom of Judah was captured and the Jews carried away into a strange land. After the Jews had lived many years in the land of Babylon, the Persian Empire sent a vast army under the great commander, Cyrus, who took the city of Babylon, slew their king and set up Darius to rule over the city.

Among the Jews in Babylon was a very wise and brave man by the name of Daniel. He had lived in the king's court for many years because his advice was better and his wisdom greater than all the other wise men of the nation. Darius, the new Persian king, placed Daniel next in power to himself because of his great knowledge and understanding. This angered some of the other princes so that they planned a way to bring down the king's displeasure on Daniel.

Although the Temple had been destroyed and the city of Jerusalem was in ruins, Daniel turned his face in the direction of God's house and prayed to Jehovah three times every day. Knowing this, the jealous rulers persuaded the king, who was a vain man, to pass a law that for thirty days no one should pray to nor ask a gift or favor of anyone except the king. This foolish law pleased the king so he wrote it out and sealed it and sent word of it throughout the kingdom.

The jealous rulers watched Daniel and when he made his three daily prayers, just as he had always done, they hurried to tell Darius, the king. When Darius heard this he knew that the law was a mistake, but since the Persians never changed a law, he sadly and unwillingly gave the order for Daniel to be led to the lion's pit and thrown down to the wild beasts. Then the soldiers placed a huge stone over the mouth of the pit so that no one could let Daniel out.

That night a light shone all night in one of the rooms of the royal palace. The king could not sleep. He had not eaten nor tasted wine all evening but walked to and fro, back and forth, across the marble floor of his royal room. Before the sun was up the next day, he wrapped himself in a long cloak and taking his servant, hurried to the mouth of the pit. Having come to mourn, he was greatly surprised to hear Daniel's voice speaking to him. They drew Daniel quickly from the depths of the pit as he told them how God had closed the lion's mouths and made them gentle so that he was safe even in their midst. This made the king very happy and he sent out a decree through all the land for the people to worship the God of Daniel who was the only God who could save men.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am a little girl eight years old and will be in the fifth grade next year. I live about a half block from Asbury College. That is the College I am going to when I get big. I was taking music lessons, but I stopped taking for the summer. I wanted to stop taking to have a vacation. I live in Wilmore five miles from High Bridge. I like to live in Wilmore fine. My daddy is pastor of the Methodist Church here.

Helen Davis.

101 Lexington Ave., Wilmore, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am not a little girl or young girl, in fact, I have almost reached the half century mark, but I am young in my soul because "I am a child of the King." I enjoy reading your page ten in The Herald. I don't miss anything in this helpful messenger of God each week. We don't take the Sunday papers, of course, and only one other Christian paper, so Sunday afternoon we especially enjoy our Herald. I love little children, and I am so glad Jesus didn't take a big man or woman and tell us we must be like them, but he said, "Unless you become as a little child." Isn't it sweet to think as a little child we can take everything, joy, sorrow, disappointment, sickness, trouble, and all our blessings to our Father and thank him for them and ask him to guide us day by day. God gave me three children of my own, two boys and one little girlie. Our boy is being trained for service in God's vineyard, my girlie is a missionary. I was so happy when Jesus asked me to give them to him.

Mrs. C. F. Eckman.
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: May I join your happy band of boys and girls? I am a little girl eight years old. I am in the third grade at school. I like my teacher very well. I have brown eyes and hair. I saw you and Bro. Morrison at the camp meeting at Wilmore. I like to hear Bro. Morrison preach. I will close for this time, with love to Aunt Bettie and the cousins. Please print my letter, Aunt Bettie, as this is my first.

Clara Mae Whitaker.
Rt. 2, Mt. Eden, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am a little Georgia girl; was five years of age July 3. I want to join the happy Christian band of girls and boys. I am too little to read but my grandmother takes The Herald and she reads page ten to me. I enjoy the letters very much. I have a baby sister three. She is very sweet. I hope Mr. W. B. will not get this as I want to surprise daddy and mother.

Rosemary Jones.
Vinings, Ga.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Just a line to let you all see I am still among the living. I remember so many of you in prayer. Miss Tenry, are you still making hoods? Mae Woods (I remember not your name since married) what has become of you? Mrs. Earl Frantz, how are you? Mrs. Davidson, won't you please write to the Children's Page again, or address me, Protestant Home, Rt. 9, Wash. Ave., Evansville, Ind. I got one of your Gospels of St. John and enjoyed same immensely. I must now bid you adieu. May God's choicest blessing rest upon you all. Kindly remember us in your petitions to the throne of God. Yours in the mighty name of Jesus.

Lizzie M. Perry.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I think Aunt Bettie is just wonderful to let us have a whole page every week in The Herald. I don't see how any one can get along without it. I always read page ten. I praise the Lord there are so many boys and girls who want to live Christians. I can remember when we children would not think of missing Sunday school any more than we would miss eating our breakfast, and after coming from church and Sunday school and dinner over, we never went out to play but would take our paper and book and go upstairs to our room and read and keep quiet, for it was the Lord's day. Mother was superintendent of the Sunday school for eighteen or twenty years until she resigned in her old age. How I loved to hear her explain the lesson. Boys and girls, do you love your father and mother and do everything you can to make them happy? More than anything else in this world would I could kneel by my mother's side again in that quiet hour at twilight and listen to those Bible stories she would tell us about Daniel, how wicked men put him in a lion's den; and God closed the lions' mouths, and Daniel came out unharmed. She would tell us about Jesus, how he healed all manner of sickness, opening the eyes of the blind. She told us how he rose from the dead, and when the women came to the tomb, an angel sitting there said, "He is not here, he is risen." She would tell us how he lived in heaven now and sees and knows everything we do or say, and if we are not good and love him we are crucifying him again in our hearts. Whenever I taught Sunday school classes

I tried to bring them into a nearness with Jesus, to make the way so plain they could not reject him any longer. The first sentence our lips ever framed were, "Now I lay me down to sleep." Father and mother are singing now in the glory land.

Florilla Pinney.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Please, Aunt Bettie, make the children sit a little closer so that I can have a seat. Thanks! Daddy is a minister of the M. E. Church, South. I am not a Christian now, but I expect to be some day. I live on a farm of about 100 acres. I like farm life very much. One gets so much nice sunshine and the air he breathes isn't always filled with soot and smoke. Cousins, I must hurry home with these groceries, but before I go, see if you can guess my middle name. It begins with U and ends with S, and contains four letters. I shall send something to the first one who guesses it.

Pauline U. Campbell.
Rt. 2, Box 104, Rockhold, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Virginia reader join your happy band? I have been reading The Herald for some time and am glad that my husband is a subscriber. I enjoy reading everything in it and find it a great help to me as I have been sick. I am able to read and am glad to say I am improving. I ask all the Christian readers to pray for me. God has wonderfully blessed me. He saved me from sin in early life and is so kind as to let me live. I am the mother of eight dear children; six are Christians, the other two are five and seven years old. My husband is a Christian, too. God bless all who prayed for my healing. I am much better. I love all God's people and pray for the sinners to learn to know how good it is to be a Christian.

Mrs. I. J. Jamison.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Would you let a little girl from Illinois join your band of happy girls and boys? I have light hair and blue eyes. I am five feet tall and weigh 76 pounds. I am in the sixth grade. I have a little sister five years old. We attended the camp meeting at Cincinnati, Ohio, last year and expect to go again this year. Daddy is a landscape gardener for the I. C. R. R. We also have a greenhouse. I will answer all the letters I receive. I will send my picture to all who can guess my middle name, which begins with M and ends with N, and has six letters in it.

Esther M. Youngman.
808 W. Washington St., Newton, Ill.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let an Ohio girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I go to Sunday school every Sunday. My birthday is February 3. I have brown eyes and hair. I am in the fourth grade at school. Louise Manley, I guess your first name to be Wilma. I hope Mr. W. B. is sleeping when this letter arrives. I hope to see this letter in print as it is my first letter. I will answer every letter I get.

Martha Henson.
Rt. 4, Wooster, Ohio.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Would you let a little boy from the rice city of Louisiana join the band of boys and girls? I am nine years old. My birthday is Feb. 21. I am in the third grade. I have a little brother four years old. I go to two Sunday schools, at M. E. Church in the morning, and at Mission Church in the afternoon. Mother and I take turns reading the Bible and having prayer. We read the Sunday school reading and talk about the lesson. Mother gets The Pentecostal Herald from a friend. My middle name begins with O and ends with N; it has four letters. Guess my name and write to me.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Here comes a Tennessee boy to join your happy band of boys and girls. Grandmother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you allow a little Iowa girl to join your happy band of boys and girls? I am ten years of age. My birthday is August 5. Have I a twin? If so, please write to me. Who can guess my middle name? It begins with L and ends with E, and has six letters in it. I am trying to live as a little Christian. Here is a poem I have written:

Last night as I had gone to bed,
And covered up my poor, tired head,
I felt the darkness round me creep,
And soon my thoughts were lost in sleep.

Shall I now tell you what I dreamed?
I suppose you may laugh at me,
For I realize queer it seems,
Since I'm only a child, you see.

I saw the blessed God of all,
From his home above the skies,
Look down upon the world so small,
With those kind, holy, tender eyes.
Those eyes were brimming full of tears,

For sinners whom he wants to save,
For Jesus sees our future years.
In fighting Satan, friend, be brave.

When our God saw this sinful world,
And the sinners committing crimes,
He cried for them, God's truth he hurled,

At this poor world in sinful times.
Their hearts were pierced by God's true word.

And at his feet they all did bow.

Of Jesus' love they gladly heard
And wives and husbands made no row.
They rushed to God with tearful eyes.
Hard hearts were tendered, one and all;

Satan was taken by surprise—
God answers every sinner's call.

When I awoke I found that I'd Received some of God's wondrous love;

In heaven I know I'll abide,
And oh! I'm glad God lives above.

FALLEN ASLEEP

HOLLY.

Our dear old friend, Brother Joe Holly, passed to his reward Feb. 21 of this year, at Peoria, Arizona. He was born March 4, 1856; was converted and united with the Methodist Church when he was eighteen years of age. He was sanctified about forty years ago and became a leader in the Holiness Movement. He was instrumental in leading more souls to Christ than any layman I ever knew. He was a man who was true to his convictions. When the fight against holiness started in Texas he joined the Holiness New Testament Church and lived in it until death. I never knew a truer, more devout man in my life. He was 75 years of age, lacking seven days, and was ready when the summons came. He leaves a wife and ten children to mourn his departure.

NAPIER.

On Saturday morning, Oct. 18, 1930, at 7:35 o'clock, the death angel visited our home and took from us our dear father, Fletcher W. Napier. He was born July 27, 1847, age 83 years, 2 months and 21 days. He was married to Frances E. Hanes, Dec. 24, 1874. She departed this life May 13, 1923, age 70 years, 4 months and 12 days. To this union were born eight children, three boys and five girls, all living except one daughter, and a number of grandchildren. He also leaves two living brothers. He professed faith in Christ in early life and joined Mt. Union of which he was a member for 67 years. He wandered back some and didn't live up to his duty, but was reclaimed and from that time lived a devoted Christian. I remember hearing him say just a little while before he departed this life that he had been holding family prayer for fifty years. He would pray much day and night, not only when he would call us around the old hearth-stone before we went to bed. Father has awakened me of a night so many times praying. Sometimes now I can almost hear him praying. I honor and love the memory of my father and mother. They have been a great inspiration to me and I would not give the recollection of them for mints of money.

They are gone but not forgotten,
Never shall their memory fade;
Sweetest thoughts shall ever linger Round the grave where they are laid.

The flowers I lay upon their grave
May wither and decay,
But the love I bear for them
Will never fade away.

No one knows the silent heartaches,
Only those who have lost can tell
Of the grief that's borne in silence,
For the ones I loved so well.

I shall never forget the advice my father gave me since I was a small child. He always tried to teach us children to do right and live for Christ. He lived a Christian life, and now his good teachings and Christian example are living after he has gone. They were like bread cast upon the waters to be gathered after many days.

Father was an humble man, plain, thoughtful, sincere and faithful. He possessed a depth of thought that was remarkable. The threads of honesty, truth and courage seemed to be woven into his very nature. Father had an unusually common memory, and kept it well. He had been a Sunday school superintendent in his church for a number of years. He was constantly exhorting the young people and children how to live. Some of the things he has said will never be forgotten.

We children have lost a loving father; a vacant place that never can be filled, and the church a faithful member. He took pneumonia fever and only lived a week. He was a patient sufferer. As long as he could talk he was telling saint and sinner how to live. It seems that all was done that loving hands and medical skill knew to do. It is hard to give up the dearest treasure on earth, but we know that we shall meet father and mother again if we live right.

His funeral services were conducted in the church he loved so well (Mt. Union) by Rev. I. W. Napier. His funeral was largely attended. His friends were numbered by his acquaintances. Father, I loved you in life, I love you in death, and so long as my life lasts I shall sweetly cherish your dear memory.

When our life's work here is ended,
Then we're coming by and by,
There to join the happy family,
In that Home beyond the sky.
His daughter,
Velva Napier.

CRUMP.

W. S. Crump, aged 84 years, recently passed to his eternal reward after an illness of one week. He had been a member of the M. E. Church for fifty years, and had stood for second blessing holiness as taught by John Wesley. When one of the family asked him how he felt, he said, "I feel like I shall soon be in glory."

I never had a truer friend than Brother Crump, and I hope to meet him some sweet day in the land of unclouded day. He enjoyed the blessing of sanctification. God's ministers always found a welcome in his home. He suffered during a long lapse of years, but his sufferings are over and he is now resting on the shores of sweet deliverance. The funeral was held in the Hughes Springs M. E. Church by the pastor, W. D. Gray, and the pastor of the M. E. Church, South, Rev. R. E. Ledbetter. His body was laid to rest in Hughes Springs Cemetery. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

A friend and brother,
S. H. Golden.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

A reader asks that all who read this, to please pray for her husband, that he may be brought to repentance and faith in Christ.

A reader asks that we pray for her and her family that they may rely more upon God, and for a young lady that she may find employment.

Mrs. A. G.: "Please to pray that I may have the peace of God in my heart and that my burden may be lifted. I am saved but want to be filled with the Holy Ghost. Pray for my wayward husband that conviction may take hold upon him, and that our home may not be broken up."

Prayer is requested for a mother of seven children who is in bad health that she may be healed, and for a sick daughter and unsaved husband. Also pray for a mother and three children that they may find work this summer so they can pay their honest debts.

Mrs. S. J. C.: "Pray for my son who never attends church; for my daughter who has passed through a severe trial, and for my husband that he may live closer to the Lord."

E. P.: "I want The Herald readers to pray definitely for me that I may be sanctified."

T. W. Fly: "Pray that the Lord may heal me of my nervous and mental trouble."

R. M. F.: "Pray for me that I may hold fast to the nail-pierced hand, and for others in my home, that they may obey God's word."

Pray for a revival in the town of Culpepper, Va. The meeting started July 4.

Please pray for God's intervention and for the divine healing of a girl who has suffered much. Her healing means much. She is saved and sanctified and is a firm believer in God. Also pray for her father who must, it seems, enter the hospital next week.

Adam Clarke---Great Commentary

Dr. Clarke was one of a long succession of men who, in every age of the Christian Church, have applied the best energies of their intellect and heart to the study and interpretation of the Scriptures. The seven gifts which, according to Augustine, the true expositor of Scripture must possess—reverence, piety, science, fortitude, prudence, cleanness of heart, and heavenly wisdom—were his portions.

The studies of his earlier years always had a bearing on this great work. From the beginning he felt the need of being taught by God to understand his own word. Referring to this, he says: "No man ever taught me the doctrine I embrace; I received it singly by reading the Bible."

Sufficiently critical to aid the inquiries of the more serious student, and yet sufficiently popular to serve the purpose of general edification. He gives a lucid view of the several books of Scripture, as to their dates and authors, their scope and connection; he expounds the original text in a manner adapted to the deficiencies of the reader; he elucidates difficulties in chronology, history, and oriental manners; he develops the grand doctrines of revelation, and applies the whole to the great concerns of human salvation and duty.

One leading feature in its character is independence in thinking. While he availed himself of the labors of others, the great number of his expositions are emphatically his own.

DR. ADAM CLARKE'S COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE

is one of the noblest works of the class in the entire domain of sacred literature. It is a thesaurus of general learning.

Its luminous expositions of the Law and the Gospel; its earnest and forceful appeals to the conscience of the sinner and the unbeliever; its rich counsels for the well-understood wants of the Christian's inner life; its endless exhibitions of general knowledge; and its valuable aids to the students of those holy tongues in which revelation took its first recorded forms—all will render this book the companion and the counselor of multitudes as long as the English language may endure. The man who accomplished it achieved immortality, his name having become identified with an indestructible monument of learning and religion.

We commend it as the most spiritual commentary published. Six large volumes, good paper, good binding, new type.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson IV.—July 26, 1931.

Subject.—Christianity Spread by Persecution. Acts 7:59, 60; Acts 8:1-4; Acts 11:19-21.

Times.—Not definite. Around A. D. 36, A. D. 43, and A. D. 64.

Golden Text.—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. 1 Peter 2:10.

Places.—Jerusalem, Antioch and Babylon.

Introduction.—Pentecost introduced into the Church the Dispensation of the Holy Ghost; and from that day to this a New Testament Christian has been a person who has been regenerated, and subsequently baptized with the Holy Spirit; and a standard New Testament church is composed of wholly sanctified persons. A group of regenerated persons is on its way to entire sanctification, but cannot qualify for that standard until it has obtained that blessing. And herein lies the ground of persecution. As in the case of Ishmael and Isaac, the non-spiritual persecutes the spiritual. As long as the disciples were endeavoring to do their work without the baptismal power of the Spirit they were not a serious menace to Judaism; but when they were filled with his presence, there was in them a supernatural force to be reckoned with; and that reckoning meant fearful persecution on the part of the enemies of the cross of Jesus Christ.

Before his crucifixion Jesus Christ ordained and sent out eighty-two disciples to proclaim his gospel; but if they won a single soul we have no record of it. When they received the baptism with the Holy Ghost, everything underwent a change in their ministry. On that first day Peter's little sermon (little from the human standpoint, but mighty in God's view) resulted in the conversion of three thousand souls. Shortly after that event, there was another immense ingathering; although the record is a bit doubtful as to whether there were five thousand new converts, or a sufficient number to bring the multitude of disciples up to that figure. Day by day many were being converted, so that the Christian group was growing apace. We have no statistics; but some have reckoned that shortly after the days of the Pentecost the number of disciples in Jerusalem reached the number of fifty to sixty thousand. As there was no church organization, it is hardly probable that the apostles themselves knew the number of adherents to the truth.

This rapid increase in conversions to Christ aroused the envy of the Jewish leaders, and brought on persecution. There was mockery on the day of Pentecost, but no open persecution is recorded. When Peter was the means of the healing of the cripple at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, he and John were thrown into prison, but were released with threats and orders to speak no more in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. In the fifth chapter of The Acts we have an account of a very grave persecution that came near resulting in the murder of several of the apostles, if not of all of them. The number of the disciples was multiplying rapidly, and the jealousy of the high priest and his followers grew intense, for they were Sadducees who hated the doctrine of the resurrection which was being proclaimed by the apostles. Gamaliel's sensible speech calmed the agitation and saved the lives of the apostles.

The persecution against the Church culminated in the stoning of Stephen after he had delivered his masterly discourse to his maddened enemies. He was gloriously imprudent—might have saved his life, if he had been more moderate in his remarks; but he would have lost his soul. Prudent men seldom accomplish anything worth while. See Mark 8:35.

Following the death of Stephen, persecution became more bitter than ever, heading up in one Saul of Tarsus, the arch-persecutor of the early Christians. He it was who sanctioned the murder of Stephen, and dragging both men and women to prison, gave his voice against them as a member of the Sanhedrin. He was so maddened against them that he persecuted them even unto strange cities, until the glad day came when Jesus unhorsed him on the road to Damascus. That was a blessed day for him, and a great day for the Church. But from that day till Nero had his head chopped off out on the Appian Way, the once mad persecutor had to suffer many things at the hands of those who had persecuted his Lord.

The Jewish rulers thought to destroy the Christians by persecutions; but they little understood the purpose and the power of God. The more they persecuted the followers of Christ, the faster they grew. Paul never forgot the shine on Stephen's face. As some one has said, persecution feeds the Church—"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." It has ever been thus. In our day church membership has become too easy and too popular. We need the fires of a bitter persecution to burn out a lot of dross, and to stir the heart of God's people. The early Christians won their biggest and best victories against the wildest persecutions. They faced the fires and beasts of pagan Rome, and overthrew heathenism. In more recent years Protestantism has braved the persecutions of Roman Catholicism, and has established itself around the entire globe. We have nothing to fear from persecutions. Let them come. Satan will but defeat himself.

Comments on the Lesson.

7:59, 60. Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.—Stephen did not believe in soul-sleep, but expected to be conscious in the presence of his Lord. Kneeled down.—If one is so afflicted that he cannot kneel down, then let him pray sitting or standing; but I must confess that I have heard few soaring prayers uttered by standers. They creep fairly well, but have no wings. Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.—Maybe he was quoting the words uttered by the Master when the Roman soldiers were driving the nails through his hands and feet. None but a follower of the Nazarene could utter such a prayer at such an hour. Stephen demonstrated the truth of Christianity in his dying hour. He fell asleep.—That is beautiful. In other places the dying Christian is spoken of as going to sleep; but it refers to the death of the body. The spirit will return to God who gave it, and will be forever joyously conscious in his blessed presence. I take no stock in soul-sleeping; for the Bible teaches no such doctrine.

8:1. Saul was consenting unto his death.—The death of Stephen. Saul was a member of the high court that tried Stephen for his life. He voted against the prisoner. Except the apostles.—This is a puzzle. I can see no reason why the apostles were permitted to remain in Jerusalem when all the other Christians were scattered abroad. God's hand was in it. Philip, one of the seven deacons, went into Samaria and held a gracious revival there.

2. Devout men carried Stephen to his burial.—They buried his dead body; but he lived on in the Church more mightily than while he was preaching in Jerusalem. It was fitting that they "made great lamentation over him; for a great man had fallen among them."

3. Saul, he made havoc of the church.—There is a certain sort of beastliness about that sentence. The word havoc signifies devastation, utter ruin. He had no mercy whatever, but acted as a madman.

4. Went everywhere preaching the word.—There were no cowards among them. They all went to preaching, both ministers and laymen. I have a conviction that the Church needs something of that sort now, something to break up the stale ritualistic ice—any good thing to start a revival fire to burning.

11:19. Travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch.—When they got started the missionary spirit took hold on them; they went on preaching and establishing churches. Preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.—Not only were they prejudiced against the Gentiles, and did not believe that salvation was intended for them; but it was in the plan and purpose of God that the Jews should have the first call to the Marriage Supper. The day would soon come when they would put it from them, and judge themselves to be unworthy of eternal life; and then God would send his messengers to preach to the Gentiles. That day came; and it was a sad one for the Jews. Blindness in part happened to them; nor has there been among them any great revival since; but Israel, thank God, shall have another call.

20. Men of Cyprus and Cyrene.—Descendants of Jews who had lived in those parts. Cyprus is an island in the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea. Cyrene is in north Africa. Grecians.—These men seem to have been Greeks who had first been proselyted to Judaism, and then converted to Christianity; although some have contended that they were Jews who spoke Greek. That matters little. At the time of our lesson they were Christians.

21. The hand of the Lord was with them.—The hand stands for power. The Holy Spirit was in them; and that made them powerful soul-winners. I would like to repeat what I have so often said in these notes: The baptism with the Holy Ghost is the one and only hope for the church, and, through the church, for the world. Amen!

BIG STILL SEIZED.

The two largest illegal whisky stills ever seized in this country were captured in New York the other day by federal prohibition agents. The stills were in an old brewery, the front part of which had been transformed into a garage. They were hidden in the rear part and were estimated to have cost $750,000. Agents also found 15,000 gallons of finished alcohol. Several arrests were made.

Rev. Albert Cook, 1318 Coronada Terrace, Los Angeles, Cal., is available for meetings in all churches of any denomination who desire a revival. He held some good meetings in Northern Ohio two years ago and would like to labor in that territory again this fall. A free-will offering is all that he asks for his services.

A plan to solve the problem of evangelism through the summer has been born in the hearts of some of the pastors of the M. E. Church in the Alva District, Oklahoma Conference, for their respective charges in Byron, Yewet, Timberlake, Cleo Springs, Jet and Seiling. A tent was secured from the Evangelical Methodist League, Wilmore, Ky., the first meeting being held at Byron, Rev. Joe Himes, pastor. The interest and attendance increased daily: the last Sunday afternoon seventeen bowed at the altar, most of whom gave clear testimonies as to having received what they were seeking. The Bible teaching of sanctification and regeneration was emphasized and honored of the Holy Spirit. A good meeting closed at Cleo Springs, July 5. Prayer is requested for this campaign.

We will be glad to hear from any holiness folks that want to co-operate with an evangelist and his wife in establishing an old-fashion, second-blessing holiness church in their community. We preach a full gospel, including the pre-millennial coming of Christ.—Evangelist Samuel Thomas, 117 Eagle Drive, Indianapolis, Ind.

Prof. Blish R. Shaw, General Delivery, Los Angeles, Cal., has open dates as song leader and guitar player. He can assist in camp or revival meetings. Address him as above.

The Maumee Valley United Holiness Camp Meeting will be held at Napoleon, Ohio, July 23 to August 2, in the large camp meeting tabernacle located near the South Side Schoolhouse on South Perry Street. Engaged workers, T. Howard Jones, evangelist; singers and young people's workers, Miss Goldie Cornell and Miss Opal Flanders, of Athens, O. Missionary day, Thursday, July 30. This will be a united camp meeting of the various holiness churches of Northwestern Ohio. For information write Rev. C. C. McNall, 232 Brownell Ave., Napoleon, Ohio.

Both preach and will take full charge of music, children's services, young people's services as well as regular revival services. Doctrinal standards same as emphasized in Pentecostal Herald. Entertainment and freewill offering. Write or wire Rev. Ray E. Harrison, Conesville, Ohio.

On account of change of dates, I have an open date starting July 19th, to assist in revival meetings as singer and young people's worker. Address me at Clinton, Ky.—Moody B. Cunningham, singing evangelist.

Carlock, of Blairidge, Ga., and Rev. Charles W. Grant, of Whitesburg, Ky., who will lead the singing, and Mrs. Grant will preside at the piano. Rev. E. D. Corlock will lead the Young People's service. Address J. Hillary Finch, Pres. Aliceton, Ky.

AN EFFICIENT HELPER.

Rev. Sam Maxwell, professor in Asbury College, owing to a cancellation of a meeting, has from August 23 to September 23 open for engagements. This is a fine opportunity for any one who wishes a heaven-sent revival to secure a man who believes in and holds such revivals. Address, Rev. Maxwell, Wilmore, Ky.

SUGGESTIVE LETTER.

Dear Pentecostal Herald:

We greatly appreciate your messages of holiness, strong editorials, your courageous and aggressive fight for prohibition. We noticed a call sometime ago for all churches and organizations who desired to unite in the promotion of the doctrine of holiness, to plan some kind of connectional fellowship to give expression to this desire.

I believe there is a yearning in all of our hearts for such fellowship, and was glad to notice in The Christian Witness of June 25 the announcement of initiative plans for a World Conference for the promotion of holiness. The work being done at Asbury, Taylor, John Fletcher, beside many denominational colleges, is encouraging. The enemy will point out our mistakes with the hope of discouraging the work, but the Lord causes the wrath of man to praise him. Let us profit by criticism; it may be we are unable to see our faults and our friends may not have the courage or wisdom to tell us.

Wichita Camp Meeting.

We are looking forward to the Kansas State Holiness Camp at Beulah Park, Wichita, Kan., August 13-23. This camp has stood for interdenominational work, and for the strong, clear presentation of God's Word on all of the cardinal doctrines relative to salvation, without apology. We have a strong team of workers, and ask that our constituency pray that we may see a great victory in the salvation of souls. In an ad that will appear in this paper in due time, you will see our list of workers and needed information. We plead for the cooperation of churches, associations and people, everywhere, who are interested in a great revival, to pray, attend, and support this camp in every way, possible.

Yours for the promotion of holiness,
J. E. Wilson, Pres. K. S. H. A.

AN APPRECIATION, HEARTFELT.

By H. H. Jones.

I want all The Pentecostal Herald readers to know how much I appreciate the way Dr. Morrison and all members of his Publishing Staff have stood by me in my effort to be of help to the 80,000 destitute coal miners in this southwestern section of Kentucky.

I am now forty-nine years old. When I was about twenty I attended Carvosso Holiness Camp Meetings in Todd Co., Ky., and heard Dr. Morrison preach. God blessed his wonderful messages and heaven and earth would kiss in those glorious services. My young heart was set on fire for the Kingdom of Christ under this holy preaching by Dr. Morrison, who quickly came to be one of the world's mightiest preachers—not solely because of his wonderful eloquence and fine personality, but because he laid his all on the altar of our Lord. Dr. Morrison, at that time, was young and strong in body, mind, and spirit; he has not changed, save to grow stronger. I have never lost that zeal and fire poured out on me in those days. That is why I'm working patiently with these 80,000 people who have so much propaganda of Satan sown among them.

I want to thank every reader of The Pentecostal Herald who has helped me in any way, either to buy a bucket of honey, or to send me money, or prayed for the success of the work. Dr. Morrison bought the honey and gave me money besides. The Pentecostal Publishing Co., has given me all the advertising I have done in connection with this missionary work. Dr. Morrison has written the appealing editorials just out of his big heart. Members of the Publishing Staff have bought my honey and sent me money. I want every one of you to pray that God will make it possible for me to spend the entire summer among these dear people, distributing the old clothing Dr. Morrison has asked you to send to Mr. T. O. Dillingham, Nortonville, Ky., and preaching to them in tents and teaching them in their hot huts. I want to show them what Communism is doing to hurt them. I want to get them to reach agreements with the operators, in the name of Jesus Christ and their starving wives and children, and be able to go to work this early fall. Please help me to save the bodies and souls of these people. If an agreement is not reached by early fall, I fear the worst for this coalmining section. The old clothing you send helps me, because it causes these people to love me and to love the church; it gives me access to their hearts, and thus permits me to be able to teach them and show them what to do. I shall have to have financial help if I give my time to these dear people. I am evangelizing without a set salary, and unless people with hearts of mercy make it possible, I will be forced to turn away from this destitute field and labor where I can make a living for my own family.

I want every one who reads this to get a new subscriber to The Herald at once and send it in, as a praise offering, for the help The Herald has given in this work.

THE LIFE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

By Rev. James R. McIntire, 1491 W. 51st St., Los Angeles, Calif.

What Others Say About the Book.
Dr. Charles Reign Scoville, Evangelist.

"The Eighteenth Century emphasized the idea of God the Father; the Nineteenth Century tremendously stressed in all Christian literature the deity, of Christ the Son. The Twentieth Century is naturally and fortunately emphasizing the personal presence of the Holy Spirit dwelling in and working through both the individual Christian and the church, the organized body of Christ. Your scholarly, scriptural, inspirational book, The Life of the Holy Spirit, is timely, born for kingdom interests in this crucial hour of human existence."

Rev. H. H. Peters, Secretary Illinois Christian Missionary Society.

"I would be delighted if I could give such publicity to your book as to enable you to sell many, many copies. It is a fine book, well written and with a great message."

The King's Business, Monthly Magazine, Bible Institute of Los Angeles.

"This is an excellent setting forth of the teaching of Scripture concerning the Holy Spirit. The book is good in theology and eschatology. It is free from extreme teachings. Its message is valuable and vital."

SHALL WE HAVE MERCY OR SUFFER JUDGMENT?

By The Editor.

IT will be remembered that it was some forty years after the crucifixion of our blessed Lord Jesus Christ in the city of Jerusalem, until that city was besieged, captured by the Romans, and visited with a destruction scarcely ever known in the history of the world.

* * * *

Our Lord Jesus saw this destruction coming when he stood on the Mount of Olives and wept over the doomed city. He had this in mind when, on his way to Calvary, he said to those who bewailed him, "Weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children." He knew that the judgments of God were bound to follow the rejection of his mercy.

* * * *

It was ever thus, and always will be so. God offers mercy. He delays judgment, but when his laws are trampled under foot and his mercies are rejected, his judgments are sure to follow. "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." They are fearful; in the nature of things, they must be so. When people will not have mercy their sins must have their full and awful measure of judgment.

* * * *

There are only two things God can do with sin. One is, to pardon it; the other is, to punish it. Those who will not have the pardon must suffer the punishment. One of the most severe features of the punishment arises out of the fact that those who receive the punishment had pardon offered to them, but spurned it. When the punishment comes, along with it, they carry the memory that pardon was offered them, and they refused it, and because of this fact, they are compelled to say Amen to their condemnation.

* * * *

A century and a half ago God raised up Methodism "to spread scriptural holiness over these lands." The men equipped for this task were mighty men of God. They had marked intelligence; they were students; they were consecrated; they were filled with the Spirit; they were on fire with an evangelistic zeal; they lifted up Christ everywhere as a mighty Saviour. They offered him to all men as a Saviour from all sin. They made much of the blood of the crucified One.

The message of the early Methodists appealed to head and heart; it aroused the intellect, made the people think, stirred the conscience, and impelled the people to pray. It quickened the emotions of sleeping and dead souls, set people to testifying, witnessing for Christ, and praising God for salvation. There was never anything more safe and sane than early Methodism, with its powerful preaching, its deep conviction for sin, its weeping penitents, the shouts of the saved multitudes, the pressing on of its converts for entire sanctification, which established the souls of the people in perfect love.

This powerful revival circled the globe, spread over the Christian world, and touched all the mission fields on earth. For a century it was indeed "religion in earnest." There is no way to estimate the blessing it brought to human souls, and the general benefit it was to society in all walks of life. Methodist preachers were indeed soldiers of the cross. Their very earnestness made them students of the Bible and the best books, and eloquent messengers of God to the people. They were known enemies of wickedness of every kind. They rode forth powerful crusaders against sin and worldliness, and Spirit-filled messengers of the good news of salvation in the precious blood of a Christ, mighty to save to the uttermost. They were soul-winners. People who heard them preach were cut to the heart and made to cry out, "What must we do to be saved?" Their ministry and lives made the children of God to hunger and thirst after righteousness. The revivals they held—and they were all revivals—touched and blessed all Protestant denominations, while hundreds and thousands of Catholics were won to Christ through their ministry.

There was a relaxation of the high tide of spiritual power; the rending of the nation, separations, strife, civil war, and a thousand evils contributed to the cooling of evangelistic zeal. There arose a generation who "knew not this Joseph" of original Methodism, with its doctrine and experience of personal holiness through the cleansing blood. God saw the marshalling of the hosts of evil and the coming of the floods of sin, and he lifted up a standard against them in the revival of the original doctrines, methods, and experiences of the early Methodists. He got ahead of the moving picture show, the lust for gold, the dance craze, the automobile war, with untold thousands, the World War, with its harvest of millions, and the following plagues of famine, disease and death. It was the purpose of God to give us a revival that would have stayed for a score of years the wicked influences, and prepared the world to meet the evil forces that Satan was raising up to carry on these wars against God and humanity, as we approach the end of the age.

The Holiness Movement was not a human invention; it was divine intervention. The war in Methodism against the doctrine, experience, consecration and life of early Methodism was one of the most ignorant and unfortunate movements in the modern history of the Church of God. The judgments of God are now manifesting themselves. The spiritual blight is beginning to be felt. Seminaries are teaching dangerous heresies; pastors and official boards have closed their churches against revivals. Young Methodists are being taught all sorts of false doctrine; the common people who once furnished a vast field for evangelism, out of which Methodism brought thousands to Christ into better living, better homes, cleaner clothes, better food, better citizenship, from among whom came mighty men for the pulpit and strong, clear-headed citizens for civic life, and thousands of young people for schools, and colleges, the ministry and mission fields, are now being neglected; a part of them are being drawn away into most dangerous fanaticism, but the majority of them are furnishing fruitful soil for the sowing of the dragon's teeth of Communism, revolution, lawlessness, and conditions that will shake the foundations of society and, may break down the republic. The judgments of God are coming upon the earth, and the blind leaders of the blind are deaf to the mutterings of the thunders of indignation and the gathering clouds of a holy and just wrath.

One of the saddest features of this condition is an abatement of consecration, zeal and holy enthusiasm in the Holiness Movement, nor is it worth while to seek to hide our faces from this sad fact. The people have been browbeaten, on the one hand, by an unbelieving ministry, and trifled with, on the other hand, by an enthusiastic fanaticism that was as false at heart as it was unsound in head. There have been men with a good degree of culture, and a timid claim of the experience of entire sanctification, with an uncertain sound; the sheep have not known their voice; have feared to follow them, and there has been confusion, uncertainty, the appearance of ambition and selfishness which have caused the chariot wheels of full salvation to drive heavily. Many who were once aflame with glad testimony and holy zeal have become conspicuously quiet. They seem to have little protest left in them against wickedness, and almost no joyful testimony.

* * * *

I came back from the mouth of the grave with a great conviction to build up a Theological Seminary. For months I have wept and prayed and written with an earnest cry to God's sanctified people to help build up this Seminary. We have a consecrated, sanctified group of Professors, a drove of sanctified young men who are longing for the advantages it affords, yet thousands of the Lord's sanctified people appear to be entirely indifferent; not a dollar nor a dime from them to help prepare a ministry to preach a full gospel. My soul is burdened and distressed. I know with all my head, and all my heart, and all my experience, and every faculty within me, that the gospel of Jesus Christ, as preached by the early Methodists, is perfectly adapted to the times in which we live and, if proclaimed by a blood-washed, Spirit-filled ministry, will attract the multitudes from the educated and cultured, to the most skeptical, lewd and lost among the wrecked and ruined outcasts. I know it is so for I have seen it done. It is being done where the full gospel has a fair opportunity.

MOUNTAIN PEAKS OF GOSPEL TRUTH.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

I.

I am writing this article on the train in Chili, South America, as we speed through from the South to Santiago. Out of the train windows we see all day the snow-capped mountain peaks of the Andes. They look beautiful, especially, when the sun shines upon their snowy vastness and reveals their majestic cliffs and crevices. These mountains, if they could speak, would talk history of a thousand or ten thousand years. Long ere America was discovered by Columbus they were here. When Moses stood upon Sinai to receive the Law, the Andes stood guard over South America. When Alexander was conquering the Eastern world those mountains stood unconquered in the West.

II.

These mountains remind me of that range of revealed sublimities set forth in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. They rise up in majesty and glory and make all other systems and religions look small and insignificant. Think of some of the great outstanding truths of Revelation.

The Adorable Trinity,
The Divinity and Lordship of Jesus Christ,
The Atonement,
The Great Redemption,
The Cross and its message,
Justification by Faith,
The Witness of the Spirit,
Holiness and Pentecost,
The Great Beyond—Heaven and Hell,
The Second Coming.

What an unfortunate thing has happened the pulpit of today; it amounts almost to tragedy. So many preachers have quit living within range of those mountain peaks of revealed truth and are spending their time and strength on phantoms of passing thought and reveries of modern intellectual speculations. They have left the mountains of vision and come down into the valleys of illusion and delusion, and when they preach no one is led up into the heights, no one is led to a holier faith in God, no one becomes more possessed of the full assurance of faith.

III.

Canon Lidden, that great evangelical light of the Anglican Church, preaching in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, in 1872, said in a sermon on Isaiah 25:9: "Great discoveries, great unravellings of truth in science, in literature, in geography as well as in higher subject matters have been, as a rule, the fruit of perseverance. The mountains of truth, if ascended at all, must be climbed by the virtues of patience and humility, one on either side of perseverance to lead the way. Nothing is more fatal than the offhand, peremptory spirit which takes up a popular subjection as if it embodied the wisdom of an entire philosophy, and at once disposed of the truth against which it is directed—the spirit which says so constantly, 'If I cannot see my way through this or that, then I will give up the whole matter.' Truth is too vast, too majestic a thing to be trifled with in this way; and they who thus deal with her miss her altogether."

"Tertullian said in his day: 'Our little children can answer the questions which are in debate among the philosophers.' We know who created this wonderful universe with all its mysteries of teeming life. We know who placed us here and why he placed us here, and how we may fulfil his high purposes respecting us. We know, too, how marvellous is his love to have committed such knowledge to such puny intelligences as ours. . . .

REVIVAL BLESSINGS IN CHILI.

The Holy Spirit works among all nations to produce conviction, conversion, sanctification. There is not much difference! At our meeting in Victoria, Chili, a woman at the altar was weeping very much. My interpreter talked with her; she was seeking the Spirit's baptism and her fear was that she had quenched the Spirit. At the close of one of the meetings a mother came up with joy bringing her daughter who had found Christ in the meeting. An ex-preacher who had gone into business told me he wanted the blessing I was preaching and that he hoped to get back into the ministry. The Spirit had showed him many things in the meetings. An educated German woman and her husband (both born in Chili) were at the altar for the Baptism of the Spirit last night. They did not get through, but she said she intended to keep praying until she got the blessing. She was greatly burdened for her relatives, all of them well to do people. She wants the power that will make her life a blessing.

Joy is always a characteristic of a real revival. After the meeting closed Sunday night a group of about fifty young people and others got in a group in the center of the church and with a banjo player to help, they sang song after song of rejoicing, and though it was nearly eleven o'clock at night, they were singing as we left the building.

In one of our meetings a large group of people, young and old, came into the Temple singing. They marched up to the altar, and all bowed; some one began praying and then they all broke out in audible prayer. It was to some folks, I suppose, a bit out of order, but a few events like that would take the stiffness and starch out of lots of churches, both in Chili and U. S. A. Those folks had enthusiasm for Jesus; they had been out holding an open-air meeting and they were bringing the fire into the meeting.

The audience last night was over a thousand people; the aisles were filled with people standing, and the altar space and pulpit steps crowded. After we preached there were so many seekers and people wanting to be prayed with that it was nearly eleven o'clock before we could get away. This is strenuous business, but every day I live I praise God I obeyed the inward voice and started for South America where full salvation evangelism has boundless opportunities.

We have before us in our possession a body of fixed truth, unchanging truth."

Among the ancient prophets of the Christian Church Justin Martyr takes a high place. He tells us that he sought the repose of his soul in many a philosophical system and, last of all, he sought Plato, but all failed to satisfy him. He says: "In Christianity I found, for the first time, the only certain and healthy philosophy of life. Gladly, if I could, I would impart to all the same dispositions which I now possess, not to forsake the instructions of the Saviour." He speaks of Christ as "The glorious Rock from which a living water ever flows into the hearts of all who seek through him the Father of all." Christ is the "Word of Truth and wisdom burning and shining brighter than the sun, penetrating by his rays into the depths of the heart and soul."

I think back of the pulpit of my youth and the sermons I heard and the sermons I read from such preachers as Spurgeon, Talmage, Parker, Simpson, Moody, Cookman, etc., they were freighted with the gospel and vital with divine certainties. No speculation, no mere human opinion, no human philosophy, but the wisdom and the Gospel of God in Jesus Christ. I often think that the pulpit of forty years ago was emphatically a more vital, eloquent, effective gospel pulpit than it is today. Thousands of pulpits utter no saving gospel today; preachers are preaching second-hand stuff acquired in modernistic seminaries and picked up by the wayside instead of out of the Word of God. Look over the books and periodicals read by the average preacher of today and it is small wonder that the pulpit is so devoid of great preachers.

I was reading of one of the Methodist (?) Bishops who said to a newspaper man that he didn't preach theology any more. Strange statement for a Bishop whose vows required him to preach the doctrines of his church and the Word of God.

When a preacher refuses to preach theology it may be set down that he is preaching "another gospel." How does he stand in the light of Galatians 1:8: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Then Paul further speaks: "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

One of the surest tests of a sermon is seen in its efficacy to lead souls to Christ. The modern gospel produces no conviction for sin; it leads no souls to the mourner's bench; it brings on no shouts of joy from souls newly redeemed from sin; it brings no power from on high to dead churches.

V.

Gibbon, writing on the Fall of the Roman Empire, mentioned as one of its causes that the "minds of men were gradually reduced to the same level; the fire of genius was extinguished." This states the case with us in this twentieth century—the tendency of modernism is to reduce everything to a common level. Take a group of graduates from a modernistic theological seminary; their professors have extinguished the inner light and the fire of spiritual genius in them and reduced them to a common level of doubt, distrust and disloyalty to the doctrines of revelation. They go to the pulpit with no certain message and they have no witness within themselves.

Then some have lost the vision they once obtained upon the mountain top with God. A good writer has said: "Recall the time when you knew without any doubt that the Spirit of God spoke to you and brought you to a state of mind where you saw what God wanted you to do. If you obeyed that vision, it would have led you on to an emancipation in your life. Obedience to a right vision always leads to a larger life, but it leads also to a life of more discipline. Every enlargement of vision has to be paid for by increasing concentration. Any experience which is out of the common-place rut has to be paid for in an added concentration of the life. There are moments in all our lives when

... the spirit's true endowments

Stand out plainly from its false ones."

"We are inclined to be ashamed of the vision we get because it marks us out as being different from other people, and we are afraid of being considered 'speckled birds.' The vision will mark you out as different, but if you take your direction from the vision, you will not only make a path for yourself but for others also."

VI.

In our meetings in Chili I have been strongly led to preach from the Acts of the Apostles and everywhere the Chilean preachers are saying loud "Amen" to preaching of this kind. Time and again have I declared that in the Acts of the Apostles the Lord laid down the plan and program for the church in all ages and among all nations. Many of their preachers feel that the greatest need of Chili is a real Holy Spirit revival of religion. The church in Chili is fast becoming independent of foreign missions; in fact, some of their preachers resent the idea of receiving foreign support. In a little while "foreign missionaries" (so-called) will be a thing of the past in Chili; the Hoover movement certainly demonstrates that when the church gets its Pentecost it can carry on without outside aid. Then again so many of the "for-oreign missionaries" have been tainted with modernism and time is not long past when the native preachers and leaders hearing that a new foreign missionary was coming would at once begin wondering how much of a modernist he was; they naturally expected that missionaries trained in Modernistic Universities and Seminaries would be modernistic and they dreaded it.

They had a Union Theological Seminary here at Santiago. Money was raised for the building out of "Centenary" funds. An outstanding Modernist from America was in charge. He ran it on modernistic teachings; young fellows were taken into it to train for the ministry who were totally unfit; result was that in a few years the thing dried up and the Seminary was closed and many a God-fearing, Bible-loving, evangelical Chilean preacher thanked God when the Seminary closed its doors.

Now my friends, as you read these things you are constrained to say: This condition of things is shocking. Exactly so! Yet please remember these same things are taking place on mission fields in many lands. What can you expect of Mission Schools and Seminaries and Bible Training Schools when those in charge are trained in the most modernistic schools of the United States? They are bound to be modernistic in their teachings and spirit and their output is going to do more to withhold the growth of the church and the extension of the kingdom than a whole regiment of communists or a troop of free thinkers.

YOUTH PERSONALITY FILLED WITH THE HOLY GHOST

Rev. R. A. Young, M. A., B. D.

(Preached at Pacific Youth Convention)

"He breathed on them and said unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." John 20:22.

"It seems to be but a small thing to be saved from sin,—I want to be filled with all the fulness of God."—Wesley.

I want to speak to this great gathering of young people on the subject, "Youth Personality Filled with the Holy Ghost." First, we will deal with the work of the Holy Ghost in Youth Personality; second, the purpose of modern youth being filled with God's Spirit.

Permit me, young people, to call your attention to this fact—all have personality, but all may, or may not, have the Holy Ghost. Much has been said about personality in the circle of educators, however vague and indefinite terms have been attributed, very often intangible to the mind of the student. Stripped of all the abstruse terminology and limbs, Personality is the outward expression of genuine, refined, sympathetic and virile manhood or womanhood. Genuine, because our modern youth readily detects the fraud, and the cheap things of life from the beautiful and spiritual.

WORK OF THE HOLY GHOST.

Who is the Holy Ghost? Jesus had drawn the disciples away from their fishing-boats, their places of daily employment, and inspired them with personal ambitions for holy living and service to humanity. As their leader, he directed their work and settled their doubts. While they were unlearned and weak, he inspired them with a mission deserving for priests and kings. Oftentimes Jesus hinted to them of his going away and assured them that, though he was to die and leave them, he was going to the Father to prepare a place, a mansion for them. But his going was not without a promise: He said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." The Holy Ghost is a Divine Person, one worthy to take the place of Jesus Christ. Surely he must be wise and strong, tender and true, to carry out the mission of Jesus Christ in the destiny of humanity.

To be filled with the Holy Ghost, we must submit ourselves to the cleansing, purifying and sanctifying grace of the Holy Ghost. And though God does vitalize our personality, he does not destroy it when he fills us with the Holy Ghost. While Moses sacrificed the dignity of a prince, the riches of royalty and the luxury of a palace, he did not sacrifice his learning, his ambitions, his visions, his holy convictions nor his personality to be used in the hands of God to lead Israel out of bondage. Let it be settled forever that the Holy Ghost can dwell in the heart of modern youth without destroying personality.

This may be illustrated by the electric wire. How can the electric fluid or current fill and transform a dead wire into a live one which we dare not touch? How can a magnetic current fill a piece of steel and transform it into a mighty force which, by its touch, can raise tons of iron. What electricity and magnetism do in iron and steel, the Holy Ghost does in the soul of modern youth who believe on Jesus, follow him wholly and trust him with all their hearts. This is what Mr. Wesley felt when he said: "I want to be filled with all the fulness of God." The Holy Spirit comes to dwell, to inspire, and to set the personality aflame with the very life of God.

Since we were made in the image and likeness of God, and since we want our personalities illuminated with light and life, and all our powers electrified with power divine, and since we want the steel of our personalities shot through and through with magnetic currents, so that by touching the world we may have a part in lifting it to God, let me call your attention to the text. Jesus is saying to us, as he did to the disciples, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Yes, the marvellous change in personality wrought by the coming of the Holy Spirit has always been, and still is, the challenge of thinking men down through the ages. Shall we continue to make them think?

Moses in his leadership, the writing of the Pentateuch, can only be answered in that, God's Spirit inhabited his human personality and directed his soul and life. St. Paul, the master mind of all times; his zeal for the Church, his epistles, his sacrifice, faith and loyalty, and his revelation of Jesus Christ, of which there is no comparison, can be answered only on the basis of human personality plus God—the Holy Ghost! Time nor space permits me to draw from the illustrious gallery of the saints to further reveal this fact. What God has done in the past, young people, he will do again for us in this great Convention.

WHY MODERN YOUTH NEEDS THE HOLY GHOST.

1. It is amazing beyond words how the Holy Ghost gives power to "overcome the world." The prayer of Jesus was, "not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." The world masters and enslaves youth who has not the Holy Spirit. The world, like a giant, offers to one, money, at the price of his conscience and character and he falls down and worships. To others, the giant world offers power, fame, pleasure, and American youth falls, only to be deceived. It took Pentecost to deal with Peter and James and John as to their places in the kingdom of God. It mattered but little whether the right or the left of Christ in his kingdom was to be their place, after they were filled with the Holy Ghost. The facts are, they would not have changed places with Herod the king, or with Caesar. Power to overcome the world is the birthright of every Spirit-filled child of God. Oh, that young people who are facing the colleges, universities and the merry-go-round of modern social life would now and forever crown the Holy Ghost in their hearts. Young people need the Holy Spirit to guide them through the uncertainties, dangers and duties of life. They need divine guidance to steer them through the many influences which seek to defect and mislead.

2. Youth needs the Holy Ghost to give "Power over the flesh." "Ye are the temple of the Holy Ghost," and God expects to live in the "house beautiful." What we call desires, passions and appetites are not, in themselves, sinful and only become sin when diseased and abnormal. The cure is the coming of the Holy Ghost in his cleansing power. Even then, they are avenues through which we may be tempted. When the soul of youth is out of harmony with God, sin seeks satisfaction in sensual excesses, and the unlawful gratification of carnal appetites, passions and desires. The purpose of the coming of the Holy Spirit is not to destroy these desires, but to purify and to regulate them. He reinforces the soul with the love of God and gives power over the fleshly appetites. Just as the electric current transforms the dead wire into a live one with power, heat and light, so does the Holy Ghost flood our bodies with divine life, light and power and grace to overcome. He destroys the carnal mind and gives us the mind of Christ.

3. The coming of the Holy Ghost will also settle the question as to the power and personality of the Devil. The persons who deny the personality of the devil will also deny the personality of God. Young people, the Devil is no respecter of persons. After the baptism of Jesus, his first battle was with the Devil. He comes as an angel of light to deceive, and as a roaring lion to devour. However, the soul that is filled with the Spirit can outwit its chief enemy. Clad in the whole armour, we have the victory.

In closing, let me say, that mighty men inspire and train others to be strong and mighty in the battle for righteousness. David laughed at Goliath, for he was a forerunner of a race of fearless, invincible warriors and giant-killers. Was it not Moses who inspired that great host of God's people, toiling, sweating, begrimed, seemingly hopeless, to lift their heads and cry to God for help? Under his leadership they were inspired with a national spirit and soon they defied Pharaoh and his mighty armies.

Great lives are built on great promises. That promise is, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." There is no other way to spiritual success. You may have the experience of a clean heart by admitting the presence of the Holy Spirit. Such an experience and acquaintance with God may be maintained, deepened and broadened by obeying God. Let us open all the faculties of our soul to the Holy Spirit and fashion our lives according to his truth and doctrine. Let us become co-workers with God, heroes of faith, leaders of men, builders of empires, teachers of righteousness, preservers of manhood and womanhood as a Memorial of Modern Youth.

BEAUTY, BANE AND BLESSING OF WOMEN.

Joseph H. Smith.

"The King's daughter is all glorious within." Psalm 45:9.

WOMAN'S instinct for adornment is as constitutional as man's instinct for acquirement. As covetousness and avarice are but corruptions and perversions of acquisitiveness, so vanity, extravagance and immodesty are but corruptions of a lawful passion for beauty.

Bible injunctions concerning woman's adornment are not against the fact of her adornment, but as to the where and the how of it: Her propriety in adorning herself is thus recognized by Peter: "whose adorning let it be, etc.," again "Holy women who trusted God adorned themselves." And by, Paul: "That women adorn themselves."

Hence it would appear that God, who has in so many ways, and so many places, shown in Nature his own love of beauty, and has furnished so many displays of it for our admiration and pleasure, seems to have chosen woman as subject of best possible reflection of his beauty here on earth. Man may be his best sample of freedom and of strength; but it is reserved for woman to better exhibit his beauty. Beauty is, therefore, the precious treasure and the sacred trust of womankind. Yea, and it is a chief possible blessing or a bane. Second only to cautions and warnings against covetousness of men, are the counsels, admonitions and examples given concerning vanity and immodesty among women. Beauty has made for the ruination of many maidens, and the wrecking of many homes.

In Solomon's time, the brazen woman with her effrontery, and "the strange woman" with her seducings to the house of death, affected in extravagant form the beauty of her sex to lure her victims. And now, not only professional harlots, but the women bandits on our highways, the 'gold diggers' of Movie-dom, and the professional divorcees are chief patrons of the 'beauty parlors.' And some of these are the fashion leaders for much of the rest of woman-kind. It has ever been so that our greatest treasures are made the chief prey of the enemy of souls. Riches, not in themselves wicked, become the strong barrier to some in the way to eternal life. So, beauty—far from being evil in itself—is turned to blast the love and the life of many fair daughters of our land.

Chief among the perversions of the Beauty instinct stress is to be laid upon its misplacement. Instead of the hidden man of the heart it is turned outward to an exhibiting and an adorning of the body. Physical, instead of spiritual. Women forget that their body is but a transient cocoon from which is to burst directly a seraphic spirit that may vie in beauty with angels in the skies forevermore. They would adorn themselves with 'plaiting of the hair,' and 'wearing of gold,' and putting on of 'costly array'; and, at length, in effort to display their grace of form, they will stifle the voice of the guardian of their youth, and proceed to an im-modesty of exposure that carries themselves and others to the very threshold of lustful license and vice. This is to woman's desire for beauty, what gluttony is to our appetite for food; what plutocracy is to possession of wealth; and what idolatry is to the temple worship of God. The deification of the body, to the desolation and defilement of the soul, is like the worship of sticks and stones in place of the worship of the true and living God. The perversion of Beauty from the inward to the outward; from what fosters the spiritual to what furthers the sensual, is the dishonoring of God, the debasement of woman, the defilement of society and the death of men.

And it is to be deeply regretted that the drift of the beauty instinct of the womanhood, and the direction given to it for the girlhood of our day is outward, rather than inward; to the flesh rather than the spirit. The clear and emphatic command of God's word is to "Let it not be that outward adorning." Specific samples are cited, as the 'plaiting of the hair'; the 'wearing of gold or pearls,' or the 'putting on of costly array.' And it is to be noted that these three (with the immodest exposure of some part or other of their bodily form that is almost certain to ensue) cover the whole circle in which the perversion of woman's beauty instinct has ranged in all generations and in every land. Depravity has many new fashions, but only a few old types. And God's own estimate of this farce of woman's real beauty is thus expressed in Proverbs 31:30: "Favour (or a fine form) is deceitful and beauty is vain."

And, perhaps, before we turn to the rightful place and sort of her true beauty, we shall do well to see how flagrant this perversion may become, even among the daughters of Zion, and how vehement is God's displeasure towards it. We will turn to Isaiah 3:16-24, and while the quotation is a little long, we cannot afford to omit any of it. Its outline so completely lists a modern woman's "Beauty" outfit, and its imprecations are astounding and alarming.

"Moreover the Lord saith, Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet: therefore the Lord will smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the Lord will discover their secret parts. In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon, the chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers, the bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the headbands, and the tablets, and the earrings, the rings and the nose jewels, the changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles and the wimples, and the crisping pins, the glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils. And it shall come to pass that instead of sweet smell there shall be stink; and instead of well-set hair baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girding of sack-cloth; and burning instead of beauty."

"Their flesh, perhaps their greatest care, Shall into dust consume:

And they receive a just desert For all that they have done."

But now let us turn to the real Beauty and the rightful Adornment of woman. This is properly: "The Beauty of the Lord's house," "The Beauty of Zion." "The Beauty of Holiness." (These all are Scriptural terms). Yea, the "Beauty of the Lord!"

Here we might note a seeming paradox; for of him, it is said: "He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." And yet: "He is the fairest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." Something like that is the Beauty of Women. Veiled, as it may be, with simple homeliness from the gaze of wanton eyes, it nevertheless blooms within with the beauty of the Rose of Sharon and the sweetness of the Lily of the Valley. Nor is this an unadorned or unjewelled beauty. "In the sight of God," the ornament she wears "is of great price." Beside it, gold and pearls and diamonds vanish into insignificance. As an heirloom, it is handed down to the household of faith by "the holy women of old." It is a staple, and always "becoming for the King's daughters, and that for all 'occasions.'" "It is the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."

And here are some of her vestments: "modest apparel," "shame-facedness," and "sobriety." And her wrappings are "good works." Some of these are specified as the "bringing up of children," "lodging strangers," "washing saints' feet," and "relieving the afflicted."

That elect lady, Susannah Wesley, of whose physique or physiognomy we have seen no picture, and have heard nothing at all of her wardrobe: but so beautiful was she, that Adam Clarke cites her by name as an illustration of the woman described in Proverbs 31:10-31. Such truly is the "Beauty of Holiness." No one can overestimate its worth or blessing. It is still fresh and lustrous when decrepitude and disease have bent and twisted the figure, wrinkled the face, parched the lips, and dimmed the eye. Her comeliness is never out of style, either for earth or for heaven. Like a certain lily, its bloom is most fragrant in the darkness of the night. Her jewels radiate on the pathway of her children long after she has gone above. As pure white diamonds show best in simplest setting, this true, inward Beauty of Woman appears the brightest in simplest attire and plainest home. The spirit, thus adorned, does not need to be diverted of its ornament, or invested with change of apparel to appear in the presence of the King.

None of God's beauties in Nature, nor any in Woman's face or form, are more than samples or shadows of his—and of her true and essential Beauty of Holiness. For it is written that: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." (Psalm 5:2) What, then, is true of the Church as the Lamb's wife, is true of a good woman's real beauty. "The King's daughter is all glorious within." Veiled in modesty, and arrayed in simplicity, she "appears" to best advantage in her regnancy in the home. For fading flowers of fashion, choose ye, rather my sisters, the Beauty of the Lord!

Heresy Today Not Orthodoxy Tomorrow.

Bishop Warren A. Candler, Atlanta, Ga.

ONE of the cant phrases of heretical preachers and teachers is that "the heresy of today is the orthodoxy of tomorrow."

The newspapers report a prominent preacher in New York as using this overworked statement. Evidently his purpose in repeating it is to bolster up some of his own eccentric preachments and liberalistic notions.

This favorite dogma of heretical men proceeds on the erroneous idea that revealed truth is of a changeable nature like the mutable systems of science and the fickle speculations of philosophy. But about the truths of a divine revelation there is a certain finality that in the nature of the case cannot belong to any of the conclusions of unaided human reason.

The science that was current in the days of Martin Luther is now obsolete, but the great doctrine of justification by faith is still true and ever will be.

The theories of electricity which were believed and taught fifty years ago are now derided as utterly untenable; but their passing away has not affected in the slightest degree the doctrine of Christ's deity.

Moreover, all church history contradicts the cant which declares that "the heresy of today is the orthodoxy of tomorrow."

The Apostles had scarcely passed away from the Church on to the "Church of the First-born" above when the variegated heresies of the Gnostics appeared. Has any form of gnosticism, from that day until the present time, been regarded as orthodox?

In the third century—about A.D. 250-260—Sabellianism was brought forward by Sabellius, a celebrated African heresiarch, who revived a subtle theory of the Trinity which had been taught and discarded before he was born. He gave it new standing by his ingenious explanations and specious arguments. But has Sabellianism ever attained the stability of orthodoxy?

Shortly after the middle of the third century the theories of Arianism were propounded by the famous author by whose name they are called. Arius was handsome and prepossessing in person, astute in debate, and eloquent in speech. For a season it seemed that the whole Christian body had discrowned the Christ and had gone after Arius, so much so that when the young deacon, Athanasius, opposed Arianism, it was said: "It is Athanasius against the world." In various forms the tenets of Arius have been revived; but in neither ancient nor modern times have his teachings become accepted as acceptable orthodoxy.

Nestorianism was a theological vogue from about A.D. 420 to A.D. 430. But it passed away, and lo it could not be found after its short-lived popularity.

So also Eutychianism, arose a little later, flourished for a time, and then withered away, never again to be revived.

In all the forms of heresy there is nothing to give it permanent acceptance by devout men of well-balanced minds. Our present-day rationalists, sometime miscalled "modernists," are in this state of "unstable equilibrium." They agree not among themselves, and often one of them reverses all his own teachings within the brief space of ten years.

The preacher in New York is teaching for doctrine many of the dogmas of Celsus which Origen refuted overwhelmingly. Does the metropolitan parson vainly imagine that he can give them in this age the orthodox standing which Celsus could not impart to them in his day?

Dr. William E. Channing, who lived and preached in our country a generation ago, was vastly superior in both native ability and learning to the sensationalists who are trying to play the role of daring heretics at the present time, and his divergence from the tenets of evangelical Christianity was far less than their erratic lucubrations. But he could not win for his teachings recognition for orthodoxy. Even Channing's small detours from the main highway were too rocky to attract any considerable number of the faithful to walk therein.

There is no slightest reason for anticipating that the pratings of the puny heretics of our day can reach a more creditable and permanent position in the theological world than did the able dissertations of Channing. Far from such stuff becoming the orthodoxy of tomorrow, it will be lying in the confused rubbish of forgotten folly within the next ten years.

That symbol of doctrine which we call the Apostles' Creed has outlived all the heresies in opposition to it, and it will continue to live through all the years to come; for it embodies the essential principles of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints."

At the present time many are crying for what is termed "the reunion of Christendom." All concerned should bear in mind that the fulfillment of any such ideal must rest for its basis upon the Apostles' Creed—the only formula of faith universally accepted by all the great churches. If they cannot unite on that, there can never be anything that will so much as approach "the reunion of Christendom."

Certainly the changeful and kaleidoscopic dogmas of our heretics possess no unifying quality. On the contrary, they are disputatious and divisive. They are freakish forms of speculative philosophies; and nothing is more certain that the world will never accept freakish systems, nor follow theological freaks very far. Such systems attract attention as curios, but they never command abiding confidence.

"The heresy of today will not be the orthodoxy of tomorrow," any more than it is today. It will be discarded and forgotten tomorrow. Such has been the end of numberless heresies which have been exploded by the archaeologists in recent years.

For example, the Mosaic authorship of the entire Pentateuch was denied not so long ago on the ground that the art of writing was not known to the Hebrews. But tablets discovered have shown writing in Ur of the Chaldees as far back as the days of Abraham.

Statements of fact found the Old Testament which heretical critics declared for years to be incredible, have been verified by the archaeologists. Professor A. H. Sayce, of Oxford University (England) has said most truly: "Whenever the biblical history comes in contact with that of its powerful neighbors, and this can be tested by contemporaneous monuments of Egypt and Assyria-Babylonia, it is confirmed even in the smallest details."

In like manner heretical questionings of historical matter in the New Testament—statements in the Acts of the Apostles especially—have been shown to be utterly groundless. Though accepted most emphatically yesterday, they are rejected today, and will be derided tomorrow whenever they are recalled by informed persons.

For example, it has not been very long since the critics averred that St. Luke was in error when in his account of St. Paul's visit to Cyprus he called the governor of the island a "pro-consul," whereas the critics said Sergius Paulus should have been called "pro-praetor," because Strabo and Dion Cas-sius named Cyprus as an imperial district, and its governor should have been called, therefore, a "pro-praetor." But later it was discovered that the same historian, Dion Cassius, had recorded that while Augustus did hold Cyprus as an imperial province for a time, he eventually exchanged it for another district, and thus it became a senatorial province, and "pro-consul" was the proper title for its governor. Still later, coins of the time were found, and these also called the rulers of Cyprus "pro-consuls." Still further, General Ceanola, in his excavations on Cyprus, came upon a coin bearing the inscription, "In the pro-consulship of Paulus." And so Luke was right after all, and it is evident that his narrative is no "pious make-up," or the writer would have fallen into the error of using the word, "pro-praetor," which had generally been the proper title for the governor of Cyprus, but was not the proper title when Paul was there.

The heretics of today are too hopeful by half when they dream of being considered orthodox tomorrow. They will hardly be considered at all tomorrow.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

Thinks Prohibition Number Fine!

My Dear Dr. Morrison:

I began reading THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in May, 1898. It has been a source of great helpfulness to me and my ministry furnishing much meat for the thoughts of my mind, the meditations of my heart and the words of my mouth. For these 33 years every issue that has reached me has been full of inspiring and edifying information. Please let me say, the last issue, the PROHIBITION NUMBER, is the finest and fullest of the most needed information I have ever seen. A copy ought to be in every American home and carefully read and deeply pondered by every member of the family. God bless you good and give you many more fruitful years of editing and preaching.

A Methodist Preacher.

Note: We have a number of copies of The Prohibition Number left and will be glad to mail them at the rate of 3 cents each, or $2.00 per 100 copies. Order today; tomorrow may be too late.

The Two Lawyers.

This is a book with a warp of fiction and a filling of facts. It presents the Methodist doctrine of entire sanctification, and the war which has been made against the doctrine in the Methodist Church, in clear and striking fashion.

A certain pastor was preaching a series of sermons against the holiness people whom he called "second blessingists." Two prominent lawyers in his church became so interested that they turned to the Methodist authorities as printed in the historical and doctrinal books of Methodism, and found their pastor was densely ignorant and bitterly prejudiced. They called his hand, and one of the lawyers offered to debate the subject with him publicly. The outcome was quite confusing and amusing. The pastor soon arranged to move into another conference on the pretext of his wife's poor health.

The book has valuable history in it, clear-cut doctrinal discussion; is written in attractive style, and can be read profitably by young and old. It has had a remarkable influence on the minds of many. One woman bought and placed six copies among prominent men in her congregation, which swept away their prejudices and led most of them into the experience of full salvation. The book is printed on excellent paper, bound in cloth, and is an attractive volume of 240 pages. Price is $1.50. The sale of this book has passed quite beyond the thirty thousand mark. It has a powerful influence in the removal of prejudices and the inculcation of spiritual truth. Order a copy of The Pentecostal Publishing Co., Louisville, Ky.

Lessons from a Famous Compromise

C. V. FAIRBAIRN.

Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, it is said, "And the Lord was with him, because he walked in the first ways of his father David, and sought not after Baalam; but sought to the Lord God of his father, and walked in his commandments, and not after the doings of Israel. Therefore the Lord established the kingdom in his hand; and he had riches and honor in abundance; and his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord."—2 Chron. 17:1-5. But in the very next chapter we have the record of a great mistake which this good king made. He himself "walked not after the doings of Israel," but "he joined affinity with Ahab," the king of Israel. This "joining affinity" was the marriage of his son, Jehoram, to Ahab's daughter, Athaliah. The evil results of this God-forbidden union were very far-reaching; in 2 Chronicles we have the account of the almost immediate results.

Later Jehoshaphat visited Ahab, "and Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance." When Jehoshaphat had feasted well, Ahab "persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead." Feasted, fattened, flattered, Jehoshaphat replied, "I am as thou art, and my people as thy people; and we will be with thee in the war."

Jehoshaphat had not only committed himself, but also God's brave soldiers in the behalf of one who was an enemy of God. A more sober thought came and he said to Ahab, "Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord today." He wondered what God thought of this combination of interests. Accordingly Ahab assembled four hundred prophets and they all with unanimous voice cried, "Go up, go up. The Lord speed thee." But Jehoshaphat was somewhat sceptical and said, "Is there not some other prophet of the Lord around here, that we might enquire of him?"

"Yes, there is," says Ahab. "There is yet one man, by whom we may inquire of the Lord: but I hate him; for he never prophesied good unto me, but always evil: the same is Michaiah the son of Imla."

Then, to a servant, perhaps an officer of the guards, "Fetch quickly Michaiah the son of Imla."

This officer evidently thought that prophets formulated their messages in accord with their own hearts; and, possibly anxious to do the prophet a good turn, he volunteered this piece of worldly-wise advice, "Behold the words of the prophets declare good to the king with one assent; let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of theirs, and speak thou good."

The old prophet's shoulders straighten, a flush of holy indignation overspreads his countenance, his voice rings out, "I am not here to conjure up messages either in line with or contrary to any private feelings I may have. As the Lord liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak."

Once in Ahab's presence, the king speaks. "Michaiah, shall we go, or not go to Ramoth-gilead to battle?"

"Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into thy hand," is the word of the prophet.

Ahab may not love the truth, but his own heart so condemns him that he knows that God, who is greater than his heart, can not thus endorse him, so he thunders at the prophet, "How many times shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the Lord?"

"Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the Lord said, These have no master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace."

"And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, but evil?"

Poor Michaiah! Blamed when he prophesied smooth things, and hated when he told the truth! Not only did he so speak to the king, but he also exposed the lying of the other prophets. For reward, Zedekiah, one of the prophets, slapped his face, and Ahab sent him to prison to live on bread and water. He carried to jail a crimson scar from the prophet's stroke, but he also carried a conscience void of offence. He had been true to the God who commissioned him, and true to the sinners who through him alone were able to hear from heaven.

At last the allies faced the Syrians at Ramoth-gilead. Ahab, pretending to show high honor to Jehoshaphat, goes into battle in the armor of a common knight, while Jehoshaphat, by Ahab's advice, goes clothed in his royal robes. This almost cost him his life; for the king of Syria had said to his officers, "Fight neither with small or great, save only with the king of Israel." Thus admonished, they pressed the battle toward the one in the royal robes so fiercely, that Jehoshaphat had to cry out and reveal his identity; "and it came to pass, that when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back again from pursuing him."

FACTS FROM THE FIRING LINE.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."—Hos. 4:6.

Prohibition has wrought miracles of moral, social and economic redemption, but thousands of dregs do not know it. Every pastor is urged to reprint the following Fact in the Church Calendar, or read it from the pulpit to offset the destructive wet propaganda which appears in many of the secular newspapers. A new Fact appears in this place in each issue.

"Next to the establishment of the Christian Church and the founding of the common school the coming of the 18th Amendment has done more for the welfare of childhood and youth than any advance in the history of civilization."

You may disguise yourself, Ahab; you may divert attention to your royal ally; you may do your best to secure yourself from attack: but you have made God your enemy and "He is mighty in strength: who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered?" "Be sure your sin will find you out."

Amongst the arrows which sped across the field of battle that day was one shot by a Syrian archer in his simplicity, but it was directed by the very finger of God. It located Ahab despite his disguise. It found a vulnerable point. It "smote the king between the joints of the harness:" and though he bravely "stayed himself up in his chariot against the Syrians until the even, about the time of the going down of the sun he died."

After the battle, "Jehoshaphat returned to his house to Jerusalem. And Jehu the seer went out to meet him, and said, Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord. Nevertheless there are good things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast prepared thine heart to seek the Lord."

Soon "Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers" but despite the "good things" that were found in him, despite his war on idolatry, despite the fact that personally he "prepared his heart to seek the Lord," an awful harvest came of his compromise and joining affinity with Ahab, a prince of sin. "Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.—And he walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab: for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord.—And it came to pass that he died.—And Ahaziah his son reigned.—He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly."

So we read in 2 Chronicles, and the more we read and further we go the picture becomes darker and darker. It is but another lesson revealing that when God said "Come out from among them, and be ye separate," he meant what he said; and that implicit obedience is the most reasonable attitude toward such a reasonable admonition that any man or woman can assume. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

Hope.

When storm clouds arise and hurricanes sweep,

And wild waves roll over life's troubled deep,
Like an angel, Hope, with her wings unfurled,
Speaks peace, sweet peace, to a guilt-stricken world.

'Mid darkness thick, and the tempest's shriek,
And the clash of the wave, and the lightning's freak,

Hope, Hope beaming forth like the noon-day sun,

Gives light and life to the grief-stricken one.

While away, away, o'er the wreck-strewn deep

Ten thousand souls through the darkness sweep

With dim growing eye and fast fleeting breath

To the storm-girt shores of eternal death.

Hope, Hope, bright star in the galaxy Love,
Descends from her radiant seat above,
And with the effulgence of glory, bright
Enrobes the curtains of drearish night.

When the vision fails, and the spirits sink,
And Death with his knife is cutting each link,
And the waters of Jordan cold and chill,
And the quick beating pulse forever is still,

And the sightless eye enveloped in night,
And the golden bowl deprived of its might,
As the body returns to the lifeless sod,
Hope, Hope bids the soul mount up to God.

W. C. CARTER.

The New Universal Graphic Dictionary is distinguished by such outstanding features that it adapts itself for general use. It contains hundreds of new words that have recently come into use. The entry words are printed in large bold face type, two lines high, while the definitions are in a smaller, but easily-read type.

----GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD----

KODAIKANAL, INDIA.

Dear Friends:

The world has been following with keen interest the cry of "Swaraj" (self-government) in India. What will be the place of Christianity under Swaraj? There have been many speculations. Some believe that when independence comes the Indian attitude toward Christ will be more favorable than at present. Opposition to a western government would naturally arouse prejudice against a religion whose leaders come from the west. If the source of bitterness is removed, India will more readily see Christ in all his beauty as Savior of lost humanity. Others fear that if India were to be granted complete self-government, anti-Christian influences would be greatly multiplied.

An interesting sidelight was ignited by the statements of the famous Mahatma Gandhi when he said, regarding foreign missionaries, "If, instead of confining themselves to purely humanitarian work and material service to the poor, they limit their activities, as they do at present, to proselytizing by means of medical aid, education, etc., then I would certainly ask them to withdraw. Every nation's religion is as good as any other. Certainly India's religion is adequate for her people. We need no conversion, spiritually."

By this statement Mr. Gandhi has called down upon his head an avalanche of arguments, criticising his position and defending the Christian. B. T. Badley, missionary bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, states: "Mr. Gandhi said at the beginning of his statement, that, 'if instead of serving the poor we were engaged in proselytizing them,' Mr. Gandhi, when he gets Swaraj, will ask us to leave India. How can an Indian say that? Cleanse our villages, wash our sores, heal our sicknesses, rid us of the rag, the fly, and the vermin, promote our health and comfort, but do not give us spiritual regeneration, says the Mahatma! I must tell Mr. Gandhi that no government invited us to preach Jesus in India. We have been commissioned by Jesus Christ, and no government on earth can drive us out. (Cheers from his Indian congregation). Inspired by the love of Jesus we have left our homes and the good bracing climate of our countries, and have come to live, work and die with you, and no one can send us out. We would offer non-violent 'satyagraha,' sit in the heat, in the dust at your doors, and die of starvation."

Dr. E. Stanley Jones, whose love for the Indian leader is well known to be long and lasting, writes to Mr. Gandhi:

"I may interpret you wrongly, but you seem to feel that it is wrong and illegitimate for one man to share with another his faith, if the sharing means that the man might desire the faith of the sharer. In this I deeply disagree with you. I feel that it is a fundamental human right and a fundamental human duty to share what he finds precious in any realm. . . . Science is founded upon the idea that whatever discovery is made in one country becomes the property of the whole race. Science, therefore, sets itself to teach these truths without extraneous pressure, save the pressure of the inherent worthwhileness of the truth itself. As religious men, we claim the same right to do the same thing in the same spirit. . . . The only refuge is in truth and reality, and if what I hold is not that, then the sooner I find it out the better. Having made myself clear I would like to ask, most respectfully, some questions, if you do not mind.

"Would you deny that fundamental right to share with every man everywhere what seems precious to the holder?

"Would you refuse to the Moslems of India under Swaraj the right to share their faith by legitimate means?

"Would you deny the right of the Mahasabha to make Hindus out of the animists of the hill tribes as they are now doing?

"You suggest that the religion of one nation is as good as that of any other. Do you really seriously hold that Mahatmajai? Is the science of one nation as good as the science of any other nation? Would you make science national? Is not truth, by its very nature, universal? Is there any such thing as local truth? Do not two and two make four in India as well as the west? Is this also not true of religious truth?

"While we (the Christians in India) are ready to relinquish political privileges, we find that you are going farther and are apparently asking us to relinquish what, to us, is a spiritual privilege, namely, the right to share Christ with others. Do you realize that the position you are now taking makes it impossible for the Christian Indian to have any part in the new India?

"You state that India does not stand in need of spiritual conversion. You surely do not mean that, do you? I certainly could not say that of my country. It does stand in need of spiritual conversion and tens of thousands are working at the task. I believe that the whole world needs this, including India. The ink with which your interview was written was scarcely dry when two hundred lay dead in the streets of Cawnpore. The mob that lynches a negro in America, and the mob that lynches a Hindu or Moslem in India both stand in need of spiritual conversion. But not only mobs, but men in ordinary life, motivated as they are by selfishness and lust, need moral and spiritual conversion. I feel that in Christ I have something so infinitely precious and saving that I cannot help but share him with all men everywhere. When you speak of the coming Swaraj and say that you are prepared to deny us that right, then do you not go beyond your legitimate limits? I can understand that a backward barbarian country, out of fanaticism, or out of sheer backwardness, might be prepared to take such an attitude, but I hardly expected this of Mahatma Gandhi, the man we have revered and honored."

We praise God for the outstanding spiritual leaders we have come in contact with in India. Men who stand for the fundamentals of the Word of God and the things of the Spirit, who are prepared to stand true to their calling in the face of any crucial test that may come. Let us pray that God may endue them with an abundance of the wisdom, strength and spiritual power in this hour of such vital importance to the cause of Christ in India.

Yours in him,

TRAVEL LETTER. Tilden H. Gaddis.

Greetings to The Herald Family:

The Peniel Bible School students, teachers and a host of friends at Hong Kong were at the pier and after singing and music and a beautiful farewell service on deck, our ship drifted out as they and we sang, "God be with you till we meet again."

We were privileged to have Rev. Kilbourne and his wife and Rev. Rice and his wife travel with us to Shanghai, where we were graciously received and abundantly blessed with the hospitality of the Oriental Missionary Society's workers. We had been invited as workers for the Shanghai convention, but could not remain, owing to other engagements, so contented ourselves with one service while our boat was in port, leaving the next morning for Japan. God set his seal on our short visit with these good people who are doing such a great work in this land.

Passing through the world's famous and exceedingly beautiful Japan Inland Sea, and touching this nation of flowers, birds and sunshine at Kobe, we squeezed ourselves into an electric train and were hurried to Osaka, the "Pittsburgh of Japan," and thence to Nara, to view the largest Buddha in Japan, which is of bronze and 53 feet high. Near it is the "Big Bell" weighing 48 tons which we rung for five sen. Of course we fed the deer in the park, as all visitors do, and after a Japanese meal rickshawed (if that's the right word) over this old city which, for eighty years, was the Imperial capital. It is a fairland of temples, pagados, shrines, flowers, trees, and stone lanterns, all set in a beautiful park of 1200 acres, with 700 tame deer wandering everywhere. The cherry blossoms were beautiful. The open country had rice fields, terraced hillsides and every foot of ground full of flowers, fruits and gardens. Houses built like doll houses, and its girls and women dressed like dolls, their hair arranged in the most fantastic shapes, decorated, padded and supported on wire frames until it is no wonder they sleep on wooden blocks to preserve its beauty. The worshippers are throwing money on the sand and into large boxes before the shrines, clapping their hands to attract the attention of the curious idols, one with 100 hands, another many heads. Seven trees, all different but interwoven into one, is a place of worship for the Shintoists.

It was our good fortune to visit Japan in the season of cherry blossoms, and to be in Tokyo on the Emperor's birthday, which is a gala occasion. And what can we say of Kamakura, with its fifty-foot idol, of Mt. Fuji, perhaps the most perfect mountain in the world, of the quaint villages we visited, of men working in mud and water up to their hips in rice fields, and a hundred other things of interest. Japan seems very orderly after topsy turvey China and one is amazed at the wonderful buildings erected since the earthquake. These little black-haired imitators are trying to imitate Western cities in architecture as well as in clothes and habits, and are in the crisis of change when most anything can be seen. The masses seem to have single-tracked minds that run in circles and are slow in their thinking. I must still take off my shoes and get my socks dirty walking on their mat floors, but I did escape the bath where twelve others who needed it as bad as I, had left the germs of their skin disease and where several maids are bound to assist me in a process which I always felt I could manage better alone. Also these Japs are very open to the point of indecency about certain natural functions. In China they are always washing clothes to place on dirty bodies, but in Japan they are always washing bodies on which to replace dirty clothes. The Japs have a form of politeness always bowing to friends on the streets and in trains, and when parting at a boat they bow and bow and bend until it gets funny; even servants bow you farewell like they hoped you would be forever happy.

The streets are common battlegrounds between pedestrians and vehicles. To take a picture or argue with a taxi driver draws an audience large enough for a street meeting. Thus we see Japan with its quiet, busy, moving little people full of smiles, beautiful temples, parks, silk bazaars and colorful streets brightly lighted at night and swarming with a gaily dressed multitude who pound their way along on wooden clogs. When it rains I noticed they just shift to a higher set of clogs which lifts them up out of the mud, and with a beautiful colored parasol over their heads continue on their various ways.

A visit to the missionary compound at Tokyo where Bishop Nakada is doing a great work was enjoyed. We find the Japs an open-hearted people, and while we labored less among them than among others yet saw some good fruit. From Yokahama we embark for home in the Heian Maru, the newest of the motorships on the N. Y. K. Line and find a congenial group of passengers; some fifteen missionaries and Christian workers, and I am privileged to share my stateroom with a Presbyterian Missionary from Canton. On the first Sabbath we are invited to conduct the divine service in the First Class Lounge and it was a blessed time indeed. There was an unusual assent to the truth, both in sermon and song, and in all it was so enjoyed that we were asked for an evening of music on the following Thursday. There was such a good spirit in this that between the entertaining features, some gospel truth was given to the assembly which packed the lounge and the adjoining hall. They encored again and again and would not let us go until we had given a two-hour program. We had prayed that God would definitely bless the music and singing and he did, until many wept as spiritual songs were sung. On the second Sabbath we were again asked to conduct the religious service and truly it is like a revival meeting with conviction on the people, and the presence of the Lord so real. We find many hungry hearts on board, some have lost money, others have lost companions; to several, life seems a disappointment and they are willing to hear of one who can change discouraged souls into happy Christians.

What a glorious ending to the experiences of a trip which has taken us into thirty countries and led us to minister to many peoples, 600 in one land and 800 in another claimed saving grace, beside the many in other places; in all, we expect to meet thousands in Glory as a result of this ministry. The way opens for our return to eighteen nations with plans for reaching a greater number of people with this gracious truth. God has protected and blessed us in soul and body without a mishap or discouraging circumstance through 35,000 miles of land and water, but happy surprises all along the way. The cost of the travel was less than we had figured, and God raised up friends to help us in places that would have been difficult. We return to the home field with a greater vision and a heavier burden for this suffering, bleeding, sinful world. The change has been a rest from the eight years of strenuous evangelism, while the experiences and knowledge gained are of great benefit. I feel we are better able for the battle than ever before. In his name we continue the fight of faith, knowing that with him, we shall finally and eternally win.

A GREAT MEETING.

Capital View M. E. Church, Atlanta, Ga., Claude Hendrick, pastor, had one of the most gracious revivals ever held at Capital View, May 17 to 30, 1931. It came to a close Sunday night, May 31st. Eighty members were received on the closing night. The spiritual life of our church was deepened, scores of people were blessed under the full gospel preaching of Evangelist Harry S. Allen of Dallas, Tex. Brother Allen preaches the gospel of Christ under the power of the Holy Spirit. Sinners are converted and the church is quickened with new zeal and power. We have never worked with a more consecrated, spiritual man than Brother Allen. He is a man of much prayer and power in the pulpit. Our prayers follow him to his new field of labor and we hope to meet him on the firing line sometime next year. We love him and esteem it a privilege to commend him to any one wanting an effective evangelist.

Egbert R. Drake.
Member of Official Board.

QUINCY, KY.—TOMPKIN'S CORNER, N. Y.

I am reporting two revival meetings. The one at Quincy, Ky., held in May, resulted in gracious victory. In the words of the pastor, Rev. K. E. Hill, "It is the best revival the church has had in years." Numbers of people were blessed at the altar. Among them an old man above ninety years of age was saved for the first time in his life. People from other churches were saved. Fifteen members were added to the Methodist Church.

The meeting at Tompkin's Corners, Elmira District, New York Central Conference, resulted in an unusual awakening spiritually in the church and community. The pastor, Rev. Ford Crippen, God's man, had done much to prepare the way for the revival before the evangelist arrived. Pastors should do so much more than many are doing. From the first large interest was manifested. Delegations from neighboring churches came throughout and were blessed. One church out of Elmira had a large delegation twice; the people were blessed and went back to their church with new inspiration and grace. This is the way it should be. The meeting was run in the old-fashioned style. The people saw the difference and enjoyed it. The world is hungry for something real. About seventy-five seekers were at the altar; some twenty-five are coming into the Methodist Church. The community, pastor, and District Superintendent are rejoicing in the great new life that has come to the church. To God be all the praise. Pray for us now at Hollenback, Pa.

John Hicks.

It can be done! Who will help in this tremendous task! Who will help to send forth a Spirit-filled ministry! Who will help to rescue the perishing! Who will join us in prayer, day and night, to build up and equip a wholly-sanctified ministry to go forth with the saving message of God! Will not a multitude of our readers join us in prayer, in a cry to God that the Holy Spirit may awaken and move the people to help us in this blessed and most important task! There is an obligation resting upon those of us who claim full salvation, deep as the pits of doom, and high as the glories of heaven, to let our fellowbeings know that the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, cleanseth from all sin.

Bishop Beauchamp Has Passed Away.

The news of Bishop Beauchamp's death was a shock, and cause for grief in the entire church. It was well known that he was not, and had not been in robust health for some time, but we hoped for the best and believed he might remain with us for some years.

Bishop Beauchamp was a delightful and brotherly Christian man. He was a good Bishop. He had strength of character and the spirit of Christ. There was nothing harsh or dictatorial about him, at the same time he had a proper appreciation of the dignity and power of his office. He was beloved by his brethren.

In the not distant future there will be a very decided change in the College of Bishops of the M. E. Church, South. Three of the great men in Methodism, Bishops Candler, Denny, and DuBose, will have passed the age limit before the meeting of the next General Conference, three years away. It is to be hoped that their lives may be extended for some years, and their services available in the church they have loved so well.

It would seem, with the present state of the College of Bishops, it will be necessary to elect from four to six new bishops the coming General Conference. With the death of Bishop Beauchamp, and the retirement of the three above mentioned bishops, we have the loss of four active bishops. Some other members of the College, it is said, are not in robust health.

At last General Conference, which met in Dallas, a little more than a year ago, three new bishops were elected, all pastors, young men of unquestioned ability. They are busy men and we hear nothing but praise of their devotion to the best interests of the church and the confidence and love with which they have been received by their brethren, everywhere. They are all preachers of marked ability.

An Interesting Communication.

I am publishing below a letter received a few days ago from a reader of THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD. It is easy to see why this brother is in trouble. The time has come for plain language and positive action. The people have a perfect right to refuse to support, and to rebel against preachers who are constantly attacking the Bible. We give our brother's letter, verbatim, as it comes to us.

"Dr. H. C. Morrison,

"Dear Sir:

"We have a minister who preaches that Second Thessalonians would never have been written if Paul had not been trying to correct the mistakes he made in First Thessalonians.

"He also says that Adam was not the first man created. He says the woods were full of men when Adam was created.

"He furthermore states that the Bible is full of mistakes and mistranslations. "Do you believe these statements to be true?

"Please answer through the columns of THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD.

"I am a firm believer of the entire Bible as the infallible word of God."

Evidently, the pastor referred to is steeped in modernism, and is undertaking to show his people that the Bible is not a divinely inspired Book. My suggestion to this disturbed brother is that, with a group of devout members of his church, he visit the pastor and have a respectful, but plain talk with him on the subject of his preaching. If he cannot explain himself to the satisfaction of his members, that they notify the preacher that he will not be regarded longer, as their pastor, and will not receive their support. This brother does not indicate his denomination. If he belongs to either branch of Methodism he, with a group of brethren, should notify their presiding elder or district superintendent. If they cannot get action out of him they should communicate with the bishop. If he will not act, they ought to hold services among themselves, refuse to hear or support the skeptic who has been sent to them for their pastor. There is no law or religion in Methodism to compel the laity to recognize or support a skeptic. I do not believe the bishops of either Methodism are prepared to indorse such false teaching as is indicated in the letter above printed. If there is any such bishop it should be known.

We are aware of the fact that men strongly prejudiced against the second coming of our Lord Jesus, have tried to make much out of the second verse of the second chapter of Paul's Second Epistle to Thessalonians, which reads thus: "That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand."

There are those who endeavor to make it appear that St. Paul is taking back something, or explaining away something he had said with reference to the coming of Christ. Those brethren may get all of the comfort out of this they can; it is quite probable that some of the early Christians, when under severe persecution, were not only eager for the return of the Lord, but in their eagerness got ahead of the divine program and expected his appearing almost immediately.

Paul evidently sought to caution and comfort them, but he by no means, retracted anything he had written or said on the subject. Notice the emphasis he gives the coming of our Lord in this Second Epistle: "To you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe because our testimony among you was believed in that day." This does not sound like Paul was taking anything back on the subject of the coming of our Lord in this Second Epistle, which he stated in his First Epistle. Reading this second chapter of Second Thessalonians the apostle assures us of a falling away, of a fearful state of apostasy, of the mighty working of the wicked one, "whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

It is going to be very difficult to adhere to the Bible with its prophecy, the teachings of Christ and the apostles, and get rid of the second coming of our Lord. I will not, and do not counsel comeoutism to anybody; stay in the church, be faithful, be in prayer, keep the love of Christ burning in your soul, but refuse to support infidel preachers; have courage to stand up for God and his truth, and he will bless and sustain you.

The Wet Women.

We clip from the Courier-Journal of recent issue the following, which we want the readers of this paper to read and ponder most carefully. These women propose to secure the names of one million women to a petition, to Congress, asking them to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment. They seem to feel that the country will go to ruin if we cannot get the saloon back, with all of its elevating and soberizing influence. For misrepresentation and hypocrisy, we have never seen anything in print that surpasses this. Read it:

New York, June 18 (AP)—The Women's Modern Union announced today that it will petition Congress and the President with the signatures of more than 1,000,000 American women urging the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

The petitions, authorized by M. Louis Gross, national chairman, appeal on behalf of mothers "who feel deeply the responsibility for the welfare of the coming generation," and have watched with "greatest anxiety the growth of intemperate habits in this country."

They will be circulated to members of the Women's Modernation Union throughout the country, and read, in part, as follows:

"We see everywhere about us the disastrous effects of these habits . . . Men, women and children whose characters are ruined, whose health is undermined, whose energies are sapped and whose respect for honest work is destroyed.

"We are almost afraid to think of the probable effects of this state of things on the men and women who are growing up to take over the inheritance of the present generation, which has been so deeply infected by the alcohol poison, and we believe that they can only be saved if a speedy end is made to the present system, the only fruit of which has been the fostering of a spirit of lawlessness.

" . . . We are convinced that as long as national prohibition remains in force all efforts to make the people of the United States sober and temperate will be hopeless. . . ."

Similar petitions will be circulated at the 1932 national political conventions, the chairman said.

Think of it! "Mothers who feel deeply the responsibility of the welfare of the coming generation, and watch with anxiety the growth of intemperate habits in this country." The feature of this hypocritical rot which should arouse the indignation of every decent man and woman in the nation, is the fact that these women are trying to deceive the people and make them believe that they are really working for temperance and sobriety.

There is one thing about a large class of liquorites you can count on; they will claim to oppose prohibition in the interest of sobriety. More pitiable falsehood never came from polluted human lips. May a merciful God confuse and overthrow the enemies of men, women and children, and everything that brings peace and happiness to the human race.

It is high time for the decent, law-abiding people of this country to become aroused, and righteously indignant against this motley host of liquorites, and marshal all of the forces of truth and righteousness against this impudent, godless host of sin and crime, falsehood and deception.

Bread Cast Upon the Waters Returns

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

WE have what we call a "Missionary Fund," whereby we are enabled to send THE HERALD to many missionaries in the lands of darkness and superstition. The friends of THE HERALD have, from time to time, contributed money by which we have sent THE HERALD to many faithful workers on the foreign fields who, we believe, will read and be helped by the weekly messages of this God-honored paper. We think it will interest our readers to give a few of the letters that have recently come to me, as an expression of what THE HERALD means to them. I may say, that the Reids and Miss Bulifant are Asburians, and Miss Hughes has as her helpers, some of Asbury's graduates, and Miss Brown is a wholly sanctified woman who believes in the great doctrines for which THE HERALD stands.

If there is anyone who wishes to have a part in this great work of sending THE HERALD to any of our missionaries, we shall be glad to furnish name. The subscription price for foreign subscriptions is $1.50 plus 50 cents for postage.

MISSIONARIES' LETTERS.

Shanghai, China.

My Dear Mrs. Morrison:

Dr. Stone and I do want to thank you for the generous space you gave to our recent letter in your paper. I love The Pentecostal Herald and I read it from cover to cover. The messages from you and your dear husband are especially enjoyed, and, of course, we eagerly look for news from our loved "Uncle George" Dr. Ridout.

I am hoping soon to be able to give you a bit of a message of the wonderful revival work that is sweeping over China. God is so marvelously using the Worldwide Evangelistic Band this year. The last three months have seen thousands brought to the Lord Jesus, and hundreds in the churches, including pastors and professors in schools and heads of Theological Seminaries, seeking full salvation. It is glorious and to him be all the honor!

I am sure you recently heard of the "Home" going of Mother Stone. We miss her sorely and it is another shock for dear Dr. Stone's heart, but, oh, how we praise the Lord for the way in which he has lifted her above these two great sorrows this year and enabled her to go on with the battle with even greater victory than ever before!

I do hope your good husband is improving. Do give him our love. I think the time is very short before our blessed Lord comes. Oh, that we may yet gather in a mighty harvest of souls before that time!

Lovingly yours,

Jennie V. Hughes.

Wembo Nyama, Lusambo, Belgian Congo.

My Dear Mrs. Morrison:

Sometime ago we received your letter with check enclosed from a lady in the Southland. I want to express to you my personal appreciation for forwarding this check on to us. I wrote her a word of appreciation some time ago for her kind remembrance of the work of God.

God has been blessing our efforts in this dark, needy land, and we have had the privilege of seeing hundreds of precious souls come forward to the mourner's bench to seek Christ for pardoning grace. Many have found the light of Christ, others were not able to pray their way out of a dark heathen background.

We want to assure you that we still believe in the precious truths for which Asbury stands. I believe with all my heart that if these heathen are changed to happy Christians it will be only by a Spirit-filled ministry, and it will be only as we press these people into this precious experience of the sanctified life that they will be able to stand against the downward pull of heathenism.

Again I want to thank God for The Pentecostal Herald. No literature which comes here to our place brings as much encouragement, and spiritual help as The Herald. May God bless you folks as you press the battle of a full salvation with your pens and hearts. You will never know till in eternity the blessing that your paper is to missionary groups out in the midst of heathenism.

Dr. Ridout will be here with us sometime during the latter part of this year. Will you pray with us for an old-fashioned Holy Ghost revival among both missionaries and natives in this land.

Alexander J. Reid.

Oro, via Ilorin, Nigeria, W. Africa.

Dear Mrs. Morrison:

I wish to thank you for your letter and the check for $5.00 enclosed, a gift from Mrs. Bell. I wrote to her immediately and thanked her. I also thank you for printing my letter in The Herald. I am receiving The Herald, but I do not know who is sending it to me. It is a great blessing to me. I want to tell you how wonderfully God has used your comments on the work here, which you published with my letter. From those who read your words I have received for the girls' work, $141. Isn't that just wonderful and just like God's goodness? This money was sorely needed and is all being used to lead girls and women to Jesus and to uplift them spiritually. I have taken some pictures of the girls and will send them to you when I receive the prints.

This money came in eight different letters, gifts varying from $1.00 to one check for $50.00. A little group of twenty-five people in Minneapolis took up a collection one day and sent $45.00. God is surely answering prayer and raising up prayer helpers and givers in the homeland for us. He continues to supply our own personal needs day by day. Praise his name!

Miss Guyer has returned to Oro strengthened in body. She says she never felt better in her life; another answer to prayer. Miss Louise Moulding, an English girl, is also here at Oro with us.

Yours in Christian love,

Josephine Bulifant.

Bishop Candler on Orthodoxy.

Elsewhere in this issue OF THE HERALD there is a most interesting and timely article which we have taken from that very excellent paper, The Alabama Christian Advocate, by Bishop Warren A. Candler, under the very suggestive title,

HERESY TODAY NOT ORTHODOXY TOMORROW.

Bishop Candler is a profound thinker and is able to express himself in a most emphatic and convincing manner. We trust our readers will give his article thoughtful perusal.

H. C. M.

It May Be

That there are a few, or many, of Dr. Morrison's friends who would like to have the privilege of being represented in his camp ground located on the farm of his grandfather, and where, as a barefoot boy, he plowed corn to make a living for the family.

I suggest to such persons to do what I and others have done, invest in one or more of the splendid pews that have recently been made for the camp ground. You will be surprised when I inform you that they only cost about $3.00 each, as the people were liberal in their charges for lumber and making.

To those who wish to have a part in this camp ground made sacred to many of us because of the part it plays in the boyhood of that old Soldier of the Cross, Dr. Morrison, you may send me the offering for same and I will see that it is applied to the buying of one or more of these pews, as you may be led to invest. I am not "begging," but it occurred to me that among the thousands who have been blessed under this barefoot boy's ministry, there would be some who would count it a real privilege and joy to help memorialize his ministry by having a part in the building up of the camp ground where he has seen, and expects to see, hundreds brought to repentance and faith in Christ.

Address Mrs. H. C. Morrison, Box 592, Louisville, Ky. Thank you!

The Sorrows of the Pope.

In all history of religious idolatry there has been nothing more foolish, empty and disgusting to thoughtful, devout and intelligent people, than that an old gentleman should sit upon a throne in Rome, claiming to be infallible, and that human beings who can read and write, and in mental condition so they can be trusted to go abroad without restraint or guards, should be bowing down and kissing his big toe, as an act of religious worship. It is bad enough to kiss the ring on his finger, but when it comes to kissing a man's toe that's absolutely out of the question.

In one of the old Catholic churches in New Orleans there is a lifesize bronze image of St. Peter, placed convenient to the door so that worshippers going out can kiss the right toe of the image. It is kept perfectly bright by the crowd who stoop to kiss the great toe of this image. As they cannot cross the sea and kiss the toe of the Pope, they press their lips against the toe of this image.

As the people become educated and enlightened they are bound to revolt against many of the superstitions and idolatry of the Roman Catholic Church. It has always put a heavy iron yoke upon the ignorant masses who have bowed about its shrines and worshipped the bones of its saints; but as these people become educated they go into revolt against these superstitions—the stones which Romanism has been giving them through the centuries, instead of bread.

Mexico went into open revolt against Romanism a few years ago, and no doubt went to some unfortunate extremes; but the progress she has made in many ways, especially in the education of the masses, has fully justified this revolt. In the last few months Spain made a splendid effort to break the iron yoke of Rome and proclaim religious freedom in Spain. Mussolini and the Pope are now at grips in Italy. Mussolini may be tyrannical; no doubt he is, but Italy has been needing a man with iron in his blood for some time. It is quite probable that the better religious element of the people of the United States will go into revolt against Raskob, the puppet of the Pope, in this country. Up to date, the people have not really been kissing Raskob's toe, but they have been kowtowing to his gold; in principle, no better.

The great image which Rome has set up in this country, which has dominated, dictated and destroyed much good, and tyrannized the greatest city in our republic, is Tammany Hall. The emblem of Tammany ought not to be a striped tiger; it ought to be the Pope of Rome. This powerful corrupt political organization is steeped in Romanism. Would God, the intelligent people of this country would at once, and for aye, hurl Tammany from its throne of power.

Special Notice!

Between the New Castle, Pa., meeting and the Bentleyville, Pa., camp meeting, Rev. Andrew Johnson, evangelist, Wilmore, Ky., has an open date (Aug. 1-14) which he could give to some camp in case of a slip at that time.

Believing that a Divinely-called, wholly-sanctified, well-equipped, Spirit-filled ministry is one of the greatest needs of our times, and for all time to come, I am glad to make a donation for the upbuilding of the Asbury Theological Seminary at Wilmore, Ky.

For this great work, I promise to give $..... per year for five years, first installment due September 1, 1931. I will join all who are helping in this good work in prayer for the blessing of the Lord to rest upon it.

SELF-DENIAL.

Robbie went to a missionary meeting and heard, for the first time, about the poor heathen who bow down to wooden and stone images, and who do not know God. The children were asked to bring in money to help missionaries to go out and teach them about God.

Next day Robbie coaxed his mother to give him a nickel.

"Now," said he, when the money was in his hand, "I'll buy me a stick of candy. I've wanted some this long while."

"Is that the best use you can make of your money?" asked his mother.

"Why, yes," said he, "because I want it."

So off he ran to the candy store across the street. His mother watched him from the window and saw him running quite fast. Then he stopped and then ran on again. Then he stopped quite short again, and she thought he must have lost his nickel. But soon he ran on again, never stopping until he reached the door of the candy store. There he stood quite still for a few minutes, with his hand in his pocket holding his money, and his eyes on the candy in the window.

Was he choosing what kind he would buy? No; she was very much surprised to see him turn around from the store and run home as quickly as his little feet could carry him.

Soon he rushed into the room, shouting, "Mother, the heathen have beat! The heathen have beat!"

"What do you mean, Robbie?" "Why, mother, as I went along I kept hearing the heathen say, 'Give us your nickel to help send us good missionaries. We want Bibles. Help us.' That is what the nickel went for.—Selected.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I have just finished reading Page Ten in The Herald, and decided I would write to the Children's Page. I wrote one letter about three years ago, and it was printed. I am a Christian and belong to the Methodist Church. Rev. Mintford Hicks is our pastor. Grandmother takes The Herald and she gives it to me to read. I love to read good books, such as Confessions of a Backslider, Hallelujah Jack, The Influence of a Single Life, and The Dairyman's Daughter. I wish every young man would read The Perils of a Young Man, and Problems of Manhood by Rev. James M. Taylor. I don't read trashy novels or magazines. Some of my friends call me old-fashioned because I won't wear short sleeves and sleeveless dresses. I believe when Christ comes into a woman's life she will lay aside her paints and lipstick, let her hair grow and dress decently. I remember a preacher's wife visiting my home, a professed Christian with bobbed hair and many other faults. She would sit and sing love songs in my presence, then pray in public. I believe when the Lord saves a person he puts a new song in their mouth, not love songs. I was twenty-six years old Feb. 27.

Mrs. Dave Allen.

Rt. 1, Box 52, Liberty, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you please let a little Kentucky boy join your happy band of boys and girls? I was nine years of age June 5. Have I a twin? If so, please write to me. I have brown eyes and hair and medium complexion. I am four feet, eight inches tall, and weigh 84 pounds. I go to school at Bear Creek. Miss Mary Simpson is my teacher. I am in the fourth grade. I like to go to school. For pets I have a dog and a pig. I have one brother and two sisters.

William Page.

Modoc, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Please let me in your happy circle once more. I wrote to you once before and received many nice letters from the cousins, but hope to receive more this time. I was fifteen years of age April 28. I have brown eyes and hair. I am five feet, seven inches high and weigh 125 pounds. I live on a farm on Bear Creek. I like farm life fine. Mother takes The Herald and we all enjoy reading page ten. Please guess my first name. It begins with B and ends with E, and has six letters in it. The one that guesses it I will write them a long letter. I would like to correspond with the cousins. So please write to me, for I will answer every letter received. I have two brothers and one sister. Wake up, Kentucky boys and girls, and don't let the other states get ahead of us.

B. Lucille Page.

Modoc, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: My mother takes The Herald. I go to the M. E. Church at Osborne, Kan. I am eight years old. I am in the second grade. I have a new puppy, named Lindy. Can anyone guess my first name? It begins with L and ends with D, and has four letters.

Wayne Dunlap.

Osborne, Kan.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Would you let a Kentucky girl join your happy band of boys and girls? This is my first letter to The Herald. I am ten years old and in the sixth grade. I go to Beech Valley School. I have hazel brown eyes, light hair and light complexion. I weigh sixty pounds. I hope Mr. W. B. is out walking when my letter arrives.

Nova Johnson.

Rt. 2, Narrows, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you please let a little Kentucky girl join your happy band of boys and girls? Wake up, Kentucky boys and girls, and don't let the other states get ahead of us. Mother takes The Herald and I am always anxious to read page ten. I am twelve years of age, four feet, ten inches tall, gray eyes, light hair and light complexion. Mother and Daddy are living. I go to school and was in the seventh grade. I have two brothers and two sisters living and two dead. I go to school at Bear Creek, Miss. Mary Simpson was my teacher; she sure was a fine teacher. Our pastor is Rev. Howard O'Banion and we like him for a pastor.

Sally M. Page.

Modoc, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: This is my second time to write. I have not seen many letters from my dear old State. It does my heart good to see so many young folks who have a testimony for Jesus. Youth is the time to seek Christ as you do not have so many sins to confess. Do not let the devil have the best part of your life, as I did. We must watch and pray for we know not when Jesus may come. Pray for me to always be doing Jesus' will and trying to help some other poor sinner to find rest and peace. I am a cripple, not able to walk, but Jesus is all to me. I look to him for my needs and they are met. God bless Aunt Bettie and all.

F. C. Ritchie.

Heuvelton, N. Y.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let me join your happy band of boys and girls? I am twelve years old; have brown hair, blue eyes and fair complexion. I am in the fifth grade. I go to Sunday school every Sunday I can. Who can guess my middle name? It starts with R and ends with H, has four letters in it. My birthday is August 7. Have I a twin? If so, please write to me. I will answer all letters I receive. I will close hoping to see this in print. I hope Mr. W. B. is asleep when this arrives.

Pluria Sluss.

Cranston, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Virginia girl join your happy band? Thanks. I wish to try my luck in answering some of Mrs. Geneva Mendenhall's questions. I think her stories are lovely. The Israelites used manna for food. Moses lived to be 120 years old. Why David was brave, while yet so young was because he trusted in God. God spared the lives of Noah and his family because he found that Noah was a good man. Noah's three sons' names are Shem, Ham, and Japheth. Noah sent the birds out before opening the Ark to see if all of the waters had dried up.

Aunt Bettie, here is a little poem I wrote for Mother's Day and I would like for the cousins and all of The Herald readers to read it.

Mother's Day.

O, happy thought, this Mother's Day,
The brightest day of all the year,
Comes in the merry month of May.
With honor to our mothers dear.

To each one let this be a day
Of happiness and peaceful rest;
So let us all make this a day
In every home by heaven blest.

Oh, mothers dear, we wear for you
Sweet blossoms of pure red or white,
To prove our love for you so true,
In this, spring's glorious morning light.

Then let us all be brave and true
To her who is our dearest friend;
For, mother, it is only you,
Who will stand by us to the end.

So, mother dear, we wish for you
Joy and gladness through all the years,
May heaven's blessings rest on you
And God's bright promise stay your tears.

The Herald is a grand old paper and I enjoy its readings so much. I have made some very interesting pen friends through page ten. Would like to hear from some more of the cousins.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you please let a girl from Indiana join your happy band of boys and girls? I am fourteen years of age, five feet, five inches, have light brown hair, blue eyes, and light complexion. Grandfather takes The Herald. My birthday is Nov. 21. Have I a twin? If so, please write to me. I enjoy page ten very much. I enjoy reading the letters of the cousins. All who care to write to lonely me, come ahead. Will be glad to receive your letters. My middle name begins with M and ends with Y, and has four letters in it. I will be waiting for some letters.

Emma M. Cummings.

Rt. 6, Box 63, Columbia City, Ind.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Wonder what you and the cousins are doing? Will you let a Tennessee boy join your happy band? I am ten years of age. I attend Sunday school and church every Sunday I can. I can repeat the 23rd Psalm. I was named for Dr. Morrison. I think he is a wonderful preacher. Daddy has been a subscriber of The Herald for fifteen years. I enjoy reading page ten. I hope Mr. W. B. is out driving for his health when this letter arrives. Boys and girls, please write to me.

Henry Clay England.

Rt. 1, Sugar Camp Farm, Manchester, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I enjoy reading page ten. I was nine years old August 12. I have blonde hair, blue eyes, fair complexion. I live on a farm and help mother about the house. Mother is a Christian. I enjoy going to church and Sunday school. Our pastor is Brother Ship. Maggie Appleby is our Sunday school teacher. I have seven brothers and four sisters. Lynell Haven, I guess your name to be Doris. Am I right? If so, I would like to hear from you.

Martha Lila Lewis.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Kentucky boy join your happy band of boys and girls? I am twelve years of age. My birthday was Jan. 30. I have dark hair, blue eyes and fair complexion, and am four feet, ten inches high. Have I a twin? If so, write to me. I live on a farm of 300 acres. I like to go to Sunday school and church. Mother belongs to the M. E. Church. She reads the Bible to me and many times I read it myself. I think the Bible is the best of all books. Who can guess my middle name? It begins with L and ends with N, and has five letters in it.

Delmer L. Lewis.

Forest Cottage, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I have come back after two years of absence. I enjoy the letters so much, especially the Christian boys and girls' letters. As we read the 139th Psalm, the first twelve verses, the lesson of "God's all-seeing providence," we are made to think more about "the everywhere presence of the Almighty." It is pleasant to think that wherever we find ourselves, God is there also. The awful thing about sin is, that it separates us from God here and hereafter. In the 4th verse of the Psalm mentioned, we find these words, "For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether." We cannot sin and keep it hid from God; every thought we think is recorded up yonder. Read the 11th verse of this Psalm: "If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me." God can see in the dark. Read the 7th verse: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" That awful deed that was committed the other night, I know not where or who, and others know not of it, but God knows and has recorded that unkind act. A young man had committed murder and was in his death cell and was being visited by numbers of preachers and Christian workers talking to him concerning his soul, trying to get him to accept Jesus, but he refused them all. Some one had talked to the Governor and prevailed on him to go talk to the boy to see if he could help him in some way; as he walked down toward the death cell the young man saw him and turned his back and refused to talk to him, thinking he was another preacher. The Governor pleaded with him, said he wanted to talk with him but he refused. The next day a friend asked the boy what the Governor said. The boy said, "You don't mean to say that that little man that looked so much like a preacher was Governor Nash?" The friend told him it was and he had come to help him. The boy said, "My God, what a fool I am."

So it is with millions of people today. God is trying every way he can to save their souls and they won't let him. Knowing that God is everywhere and that he knows all about us and is keeping a record of our life, we think of the old hymn,

"How careful then ought I to live,
With what religious fear,
Who such a strict account must give
For my behavior here."

We are traveling to our graves as fast as the wheels of time can carry us and it behooves us to be ready to meet the summons.

I am a Christian. I love him more and more and expect to serve him as long as I live. He has done so much for me and I never will cease to love him. I want to work for my Master and help the lost to know my Savior. I want you all to pray for me that I might live so close to Jesus. I enjoy Christian letters.

JOHN DISMUKES CRYMES.

By Joseph A. Smith.

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound,
That saved a wretch like me!"

The strains of this great old hymn rang out joyfully through the woods and fields one never-to-be-forgotten night from the lips of a seventeen-year old farmer lad who had been gloriously converted.

He had been a disobedient and wayward boy. But his widowed mother, left with the care of a large family, was a woman of simple faith and untiring prayer. She interceded at the throne of grace for her first-born, whom she had dedicated in childhood to the ministry, and God heard her patient and anxious cry, and her boy was born again.

This boy was John Dismukes Crymes, born July 24, 1862, near Brookville, Miss. His father was Thomas P. Crymes, a successful farmer and a local preacher in the ministry of the Methodist Church. His mother was Judith Dismukes, a woman of strong character and Christian grace. After his definite conversion in 1879, which completely changed his life, he worked faithfully on the farm assisting his mother to educate the younger children of the family.

In 1883 he entered Vanderbilt University where he completed courses leading to his graduation with honors. In recognition of his superiority as a student of Hebrew he was awarded the Founder's Medal by his Alma Mater. He read the Bible in its original texts, both Hebrew and Greek, with facility.

During the last ten years of his life he spent many happy hours indulging his profound love of knowledge. The records in the Public Library at Meridian, Miss., bear witness to the phenomenal achievement of reading several entire sets of books, among which were: Harvard Classics (50 volumes), Dante's Works, Gibbons' Rome, Moulton's Works, Encyclopedia of Religious knowledge, and the Library of Original Sources.

He was licensed to preach at the age of nineteen, and was received on trial into the membership of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1887.

He served the following churches: Bentonia and Dover, Flora, Natchez (Wesley Chapel), Rolling Fork, Caseyville, Madison, Mt. Carmel, Lake City, Raleigh and Meridian (Poplar Springs).

In 1894 he married Angeline Patton. To this union were born seven children: Elizabeth, John D., Robert Jones, Paul, Judith, Marjorie and Lincoln. After the death of his first wife, he contracted another marriage which did not result happily.

John Dismukes Crymes was no ordinary man. He was a mystic. He lived in conscious awareness of the Divine. Sometimes the mystical elements in his religious experience predominated over the rational. His fearless obedience to what he interpreted as the direct leadership of the Holy Spirit often caused him to say and do things which unsympathetic persons called eccentric or fanatical. Those who knew him best never doubted his pure and unselfish motives though they often questioned his wisdom.

He was an earnest and fearless advocate of entire sanctification as a second definite work of grace, received instantaneously, subsequent to the new birth, or justification. When yet a young and zealous Christian, he came under the influence of the eloquent and magnetic Dr. Beverly Carradine whose logical and forceful preaching was all centered in the one theme of sanctification.

Dr. Carradine's dogmatic interpretation of Methodist doctrines and his arbitrary methods in conducting revivals created an issue among Methodist Christians who heard him, and scores of congregations in the Mississippi Conference were divided into holiness and anti-holiness groups, each zealously contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. Crymes was completely carried away by the doctrinal interpretation and personality of Carradine. He believed that this courageous and fiery evangelist was the John the Baptist of a Pentecostal outpouring that would bring the revival of old-time Methodist purity and power for which he had so earnestly prayed! His emotional temperament and radical tendencies of mind drove him to extremes of zeal and unwise conduct.

It ought to be observed that the ministry of Crymes as of Carradine, was limited in its beneficial results not so much by essential error in doctrine as by unwarranted issue-creating emphases and antagonistic methods. Methodism believes in the doctrine of inward righteousness, or holiness of heart. The doctrine of entire sanctification, or Christian perfection, as an experience wrought in the life of faithful, consecrated believers by the work of the Holy Spirit, is her most distinguishing doctrine.

Crymes, like many other devout and earnest men, was driven by his great zeal and fearless but blind loyalty to a school of emotional interpretation which he believed to be right, into fruitless and hurtful extremes. Throughout his life, however, he was an example of piety and humble, unselfish service. He lived simply, was utterly devoted to the cause of Christ, was free from malice, envy or hatred, even toward those he thought had persecuted him. The latter years of his life were spent in meditation and prayer, looking for a revival in the Methodist Church which he loved unto the end.

EXCERPTS OF A LETTER.

My Dear Hunt:

Your book, "Paul's Superlative and Other Sermons," was received in due time and appreciated because of its author—my good friend. I find it a rare combination of messages on most vital subjects. I congratulate you on such a production. It is complimentary in many ways to your gifts and powers of the Gospel preaching—sane, biblical and spiritual to the core. May it have a wide circulation and be repeated many times in publication.

I am always your true friend,

J. E. Hampton.

Lord, will I seek. Psalm 27:8.

LOYALTY IN ACTION.

Loyalty from the heart, is loyalty from the start,
And in all church services it is ready to do its part.

On Sabbath morn he's up in time
To hear his beloved church bells chime;

He dare not go to visit kin,
Nor off to the brook for a little fin.
At church you'll find him

In his best frock,
And not only he, but his little flock.
Whatever the church with its program plans,

You can count on him for a helping hand.
He is always ready to stand by his church,

And never was known to dodge or shirk.
He helps his pastor his burdens to bear,

With encouraging words and fervent prayer.
And in his home three things you'll find,

Discipline, church paper and the Book Divine.
And in his home with family prayer,
His hospitality we all may share.

And when he comes to the end of the way,
The Head of the Church to him will say,

Well done, my faithful, loyal son,
A crown of life thou at last hast won.
If all our church were loyal like he Wonders of wonders you then would see.

We could bring the lost from the paths of sin,
And usher the glorious millennium in.

IN MEMORIAM.

I saw the old warrior in his casket, his hair, made white by the snows of many winters; he was resting now after a thousand battles in which he had been in deadly combat with whiskey and the saloon, gambling and the underworld; infidelity and its propagandists; Rome and its Popes; Antichrist and the Beasts; Evolution and its godlessness; modernism and its skepticism; sin and its hellishness.

I went to the grave after the crowd had gone home and saw them covering up the casket with mother earth and they worked hard, but I said there lies a man whose soul you cannot bury, a casket cannot contain him, nor can six feet of earth hold him. By ten thousand sermons he has preached, by the songs and hymns he has written and sung throughout the nation, and which are being sung around the globe;

by his revivals in which thousands have been won to Christ; by the books which he has written and which have been read throughout the world; by his preaching sons, and the sons and daughters of others whom he helped train to preach and evangelize in the homeland and on the foreign fields; by his testimony for the Word of God, the cleansing blood, the sanctifying power, the glorious hope of the Second Advent, and the bliss of immortality, the soul of L. L. Pickett marches on.

Adopted son of Kentucky soil, he lived to bless her with his prayers and protect her with his Gospel Sword! Son of Methodism, he bowed at her altars and swore eternal allegiance to her doctrines. Preacher, Evangelist, Singer, Writer, Warrior—L. L. Pickett preaches on, sings on, prays on and fights on, though he has lately changed from the church militant to the Church Triumphant.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson V.—August 2, 1931.

Subject.—Philip's Missionary Labors. Acts 8:26-40.

Golden Text.—Therefore they that were scattered abroad, went everywhere preaching the word. Acts 8:4.

Time.—A. D. 37.

Places.—Samaria; Gaza; Azotus; Caesarea.

Introduction.—The Samaritans were a hybrid people. When the ten tribes composing what was known as the Northern Kingdom were conquered by Sargon about 720 B. C., he carried away into captivity nearly 30,000 of the better class of the people, the poorer class having been left behind to farm and care for vineyards. Then thousands of heathen Gentiles were sent in from Babylon, Nineveh, and other regions to take the place of the captives who had been carried away. In course of time there was intermarrying between the newcomers and the poor Jews, resulting in a mongrel race with whom the Jews of Palestine would have no dealings. Such was the situation that met Philip when he entered the country as a missionary.

Philip cannot be definitely identified. His name is Greek; but he may have been born of Jewish parents while they were living in some section under Greek control, or where that language was spoken, and so received his Greek name. He was an early convert to Christianity; and was appointed one of the seven deacons to look after the feeding of the poor Christians in Jerusalem. He was associated in this work with Stephen, the first Christian martyr. When the Christians were scattered abroad following the stoning of Stephen, Philip went up into Samaria and preached Christ unto them. Perhaps his Gentile name and associations fitted him the better for this work. The revival which he held resulted in the conversion of a multitude of Samaritans. It is worthy of note that when the news reached Jerusalem that the Samaritans had received the Gospel, Peter and John were sent there to hold a holiness meeting, and that they went and led the converts into the experience of Pentecost. Maybe I am an old fogey, and somewhat out of date, but I believe that it would be a wonderful help to the Church if such work were done by her in this day.

Philip had one convert in Samaria who was not sound. I refer to Simon the sorcerer. He went so far as to profess to believe in Jesus Christ, and to receive baptism; but when he saw the work of Peter and John, his real nature came to the front: He wanted to purchase with money the power to give the Holy Ghost to whomsoever he wished. This led Peter to administer a fearful rebuke that seems, in some measure at least, to have brought the poor hypocrite to his senses. It is a dangerous thing for unclean men to play with sacred matters. "They must be clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

The Golden Text merits a word of comment. "They that were scattered abroad, went everywhere preaching the word." It is well for churches to license men to preach the Gospel; but that should not deter any good layman from telling the story of Jesus Christ to lost men anywhere and everywhere. It should not have that effect; but I fear that our rigid custom has often been made an excuse for being quiet when men should have spoken out the truth. If you are called to preach secure a license from the church to which you belong; but if you have no such call, get busy and lead all the souls to Jesus that you may be able to move in that direction. If God sees fit to use you, it is nobody's else business.

Comments on the Lesson.

26. The angel of the Lord.—The word angel means messenger. I suppose in this instance the angel was the Holy Spirit. Spake unto Philip.—He may have spoken in audible words, but more likely in an impression, just as he calls men to preach in this day. We do not hear any spoken words; but we receive an impression that is as clear and unmistakable as though we had heard God speaking to us. Philip was ordered to take the road from Jerusalem down to Gaza, which would lead him into a desert country. It does not seem that he received any further command at that particular moment.

27. A man of Ethiopia.—Ethiopia is the same as Abyssinia, a country in the eastern part of Africa. These people are black; but their facial features are much like those of Caucasians. We are not given the name of this particular man. He was a "eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians." He was the treasurer of her kingdom. Judging from what is here said of him, we may be sure that he was a convert to Judaism; and that he was a faithful, devout follower of that religion; for he had made the journey to Jerusalem for the express purpose of worshipping at the temple of the Jews.

28. Sitting in his chariot.—The great man was taking his journey leisurely while his servant drove the chariot. Reading Esaias the prophet.—Esaias is the Greek form of Isaiah.

29. The Spirit said unto Philip.—This makes clear, as I said above, that the angel mentioned in verse 26 was the Holy Spirit. Again we have an unmistakable impression, and not spoken words. At least, that is my impression.

30. Understandest thou what thou readest?—Philip's question was proper. He did not mean to criticize the intelligence of the Ethiopian; nor was he misunderstood.

31. How can I, except some man should guide me.—He could read the Hebrew words, but did not know to whom the writer was referring. He needed a teacher to explain matters for him. So he "desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him." He was a hungry soul; and such may always expect God to lead them into the light, if they are sincere.

32. The place of the scripture which he read.—He was reading Isaiah; but at that time the Old Testament was all the Bible the Church had; and it had not yet been divided into chapters and verses. He was reading what is now the latter part of chapter 52 and chapter 53 of that prophet. The quotation given here is almost verbatim from Isaiah 53. It is all so familiar that I shall offer no comment.

34. Of whom speaketh the prophet this?—Isaiah was prophesying concerning the Christ who was to come; but the Ethiopian could not understand the meaning of his words; so he asks: "Of himself, or of some other man?" Here was a sincere Jewish proselyte who was seeking to know the truth.

35. Philip opened his mouth.—This sounds a bit off to us; but it was a common expression among the Jews. Began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.—He had no need to go elsewhere; for the whole Gospel is locked up in that great prophecy. Some have wondered how the doctrine of water baptism came in just here. Look into the latter part of Isaiah 52, and you will find it: "So shall he sprinkle many nations."

36. They came to a certain water.—They were in a desert country; but travellers tell us that a small spring breaks out of the hillside, and runs some little distance before being absorbed into the thirsty ground. That was sufficient. Philip did not need much water to baptize one honest man. The Eunuch said, See, here is water.—He really said: "Behold, water." What doth hinder me to be baptized?—Nothing whatever. It was his right and privilege; and it was Philip's duty to administer it then and there.

37. This entire verse is spurious. I shall not comment on it. See R. V.

38. He commanded the chariot to stand.—We might say, stop. They went down both into the water.—Some who have been too much afraid of the doctrine of immersion have contended that this should be translated "to the water." But the translation is correct. They were doubtless bare-footed, as most persons were in that land; and it was perfectly natural that they should stand in the running water. But the fact that Philip baptized the eunuch as they stood there does not signify for one moment that he immersed him. In fact, as far as we know, there was not sufficient water there for such a baptism. I shall not quarrel as to the mode. That matters little; but it matters tremendously that the poor Ethiopian found the Savior of sinners.

39. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip.—This reminds us of the Lord. This was what we term a miracle. The eunuch saw him no more.—This hardly leaves one prepared for what follows; for one would expect the eunuch to be much shocked by such a gesture; but we read that "he went on his way rejoicing."

40. Philip was found at Azotus.—The Spirit carried him there. But he went on his way, and "preached in all the cities" on his route to Caesarea. There he made his home for the coming years. There he entertained St. Paul; and there his four daughters preached the Word. Cornelius may have heard the Gospel from the lips of Philip long before Peter's visit.

NOTED PREACHER HEADS KAVANAUGH PROGRAM.

Announcement has been made by Frank H. Gregg, chairman of the Program Committee for the Kavanaugh Camp Meeting and Bible Conference, to be held at the famous old Methodist Camp Grounds near Crestwood, Ky., that Rev. Dr. James Thomas, pastor of the new $1,000,000 Hyde Park Community Methodist Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, will head the program at this year's camp meeting and Bible Conference to be held August 6-16.

The Mills of The Gods

by DR. C. F. WIMBERLY.

After reading sophisticated novels, sex stories, and tales of pagan glory, one comes with a great deal of delight and satisfaction upon this splendid story of Dr. C. F. Wimberly—"The Mills of the Gods." As the title implies it is a story of justice and recompense, and reveals in no uncertain manner how God, and not Chance, is ruling the Universe. The story moves with sure and certain strides, is gripping, worth reading, and the book deserves a wide circulation in this day of lost faith and false values.—JOHN RICHARD MORELAND, Poet and Critic, Norfolk, Va.

Order of PENTECOSTAL PUBLISHING COMPANY Louisville, Ky. Price $1.50.

Dr. Thomas will be heard twice daily, during the entire period. He speaks at the 11:00 o'clock service each morning and 7:30 each evening. Rev. E. Arnold Clegg, the popular pastor of Maple Street Methodist Church, in Jeffersonville, will preach each afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. The McKinley Trio of Morristown, Tenn., which had charge of the music last year, will again be in charge of the musical program this year by unanimous vote of the Kavanaugh Board.

Dr. Thomas is well known in Louisville among the Methodist men. He was the principal speaker at their last annual banquet. He has had rather an unusual career. When he was about the age of 11 months his father was killed in the iron mines of Michigan. Consequently after ten grades of school, it was necessary for him to go to work in the mines, first under ground and then as mine blacksmith. He worked his way through high school and on through college, graduating from Albion College in 1909 with the A.B. degree. He later took up his life work as a minister serving at Wiley, Florence and Manzanola, Colo., then for ten years in the famous Grant Ave., Methodist Church at Denver where he conducted the largest church school in the Rocky Mountain region, built a large community house and maintained a seven-day a week program which necessitated a large staff of paid workers.

From there he was called to succeed Dr. Stidger at St. Marks Methodist Church at Detroit, a church of 3,000 members. After several years there, he was transferred to the Hyde Park Community Methodist Church at Cincinnati, where he has had a tremendous success. He is listed in Who's Who in America. His tremendous success is due to his wonderful personality and his evangelistic messages.

Special days will be observed at Kavanaugh this year, such as Louisville Day, Shelbyville Day, Jeffersonville Day, etc., and in addition to the McKinley Trio, a number of choirs, orchestras and special musicians will be on the program.

Reservations are being made now by those who expect to camp at the camp grounds during the ten days.

Choose you this day whom ye will serve. Joshua 24:15.

Biederwolf, director, in announcing his speakers expresses the opinion that the program will be outstanding in quality and interest. Rev. W. A. Sunday will be the speaker Home-coming Day, August 20. Homer Rodeheaver will have charge of the music throughout the conference.

The annual meeting of the Mooers Association will be held at Mooers, N. Y., August 1-16. There is a fine group of workers scheduled for this camp: Rev. John Thomas and wife, Rev. Raymond Bush, Rev. John Scobie, Rev. George White and Mrs. Tillie Albright. The music will be in charge of Rev. Arthur Gould. The Gospel Quintette of Cleveland will be present to add to the interesting program. There will be a special Missionary Day at which time the missionaries on furlough under the auspices of the N. H. A., will speak. Those desiring information may address Kenneth F. Fee, Mooers, N. Y.

Rev. H. J. McNeese: "Our evangelistic party has been blessed of the Lord. Brother Hartman plays the Xylophone beautifully and sings in the Spirit. The people were blessed and shouted as he conducted the praise service in Alliance Mission, West Bridgewater, Pa., recently. Open dates at Present. Address us New Brighton, Pa."

After October 1, Rev. Jim Green will be in the evangelistic field and open for revival meetings. He will work anywhere with any church who believes in full salvation. Those interested may write or wire me at my home address, Olivet, Ill."

The tent meeting being held at Fullerton, Ky., is accomplishing much for the kingdom of God. About fourteen have made a definite start for God, and others are hungry for salvation and the baptism with the Holy Ghost.

Rev. Ira M. Ison, for three years pastor of the Nazarene Church, New Albany, Ind., is entering the evangelistic field. He is making up his slate for the fall and winter. Freewill offering is all that he asks as remuneration for his services. Address him, 210 W. 8th St., New Albany, Ind.

Rev. K. J. Bevins: "I have been in the ministry for forty years, and God has revealed much to me during the past eight months 'for the Spirit searcheth all things: yes, the deep things of God.' I feel that the Lord wants me to tell the churches of these things, and am ready to go anywhere he leads. I can give good references as to my character if requested, from my home city, Columbus, Ohio."

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

THE THREE P'S.

By The Editor.

THIS world—and we are not speaking of the planet on which we live, but of the unregenerated, wicked people who live upon the globe—is not and, in the nature of things cannot be, friendly to holiness. We are not speaking of holiness as a doctrine or theory, but as an experience and life.

There is no question with reference to the teaching of the Bible on the subject of holiness. It declares that, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." It assures us that "The wages of sin is death." The great mission of Jesus Christ in the world is to destroy the works of the Devil—to save men from sin.

In the agonies of the cross Jesus Christ solved the sin problem. There is no way to get rid of sin except through faith in a crucified and risen Lord. Jesus, in his life, teaching, sufferings, death, resurrection, and intercession, is the solution of the whole sin problem. The highest note of the gospel is, and ever must be,—Come to Jesus! In Jesus Christ there is pardon and cleansing.

When Jesus has done his glorious best for a human soul with reference to sins committed and sin inherited, that soul is in excellent condition for any world or sphere in God's universe, and need have no fear. It can appear before God in peace, without spot or wrinkle. It can associate, without embarrassment, with the highest angels and the holiest saints. "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin." To be free from sin is the highest good and the greatest blessedness that can come to a human soul in this world, or any other world. It must come in this world in order to enter into the other world in peace. Freedom from sin opens the entire universe for exploration, bringing joy, peace, eternal growth and enlargement to a human soul.

What is known as the "Holiness Movement" in these United States, say what you will, has been a sort of spiritual gulf-stream that has flown through the nation and around the world, illuminating and warming multitudes of souls into life and peace with God. There is no way to calculate the blessing that has come to mankind out of the revivals, conventions, camp meetings, literature, the homes for the rescue of the outcast, the far-flung mission line in all of the great mission fields, that have been brought about by the spiritual awakening that has been called the modern "Holiness Movement."

We need a revival in the Holiness Movement; a fresh outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The preachers of this full gospel need to drink deep of the wine of full salvation, that they may be as intoxicated giants standing firmly, humbly, but fearlessly, for full redemption in Jesus Christ. In this glorious war of redemption from sin, there is no place for selfishness, for scheming, for cowards; for those who blow hot and cold, who give an uncertain sound, about whom both advocates and opposers are uncertain, who stand for holiness in spots and places. In this great work we must gladly go without the gates bearing the reproach of Christ.

The three P's at the head of these paragraphs stand for Purity, Persecution and Power. It is our part to look after the purity; to be sure of the fiery, purging baptism of the Holy Spirit applying the cleansing blood; to seek after, obtain, and hold on to purity of heart. The wicked, godless world will not stand for that. A lukewarm church, or worse still, an unregenerated church, will protest against a heart and life from sin set free.

A pure people always have been, and always will be, a persecuted people. They will be misunderstood, misrepresented, and more or less, will have a blessed opportunity of suffering some for, and with, their Lord and Saviour. This is a part of the program. But here is where the third P comes in, and that is Power. Let God's people receive, hold on to, and live purity. The world will furnish the persecution, and God will give power. It is a common thing for people to wait and pray for power, who do not seek after and pray for purity, and who would not, under any circumstances, endure persecution; they will never get power.

The God-given men of fifty years ago who kindled the fire of the old Bible Wesleyan doctrine of entire sanctification, were not cowards. They were not radicals in the sense that they ran to extremes and tore things to pieces. They were honest, conscientious, clear, strong, full of the fearlessness of a holy love. They were God-given torches of holy light. They were salt that penetrated, and light that illuminated. It is impossible to calculate the blessing that came to humanity through their Purity, Persecution and Power! Those who enjoy their heritage, who have received blessing through their sacrifice, must live in a light, move in an atmosphere, and give out a message entirely without question marks. They must be holy men and women; humble, to be sure, but courageous, not only willing to suffer for Christ's sake, but to rejoice in the privilege of bearing the cross.

AN OPEN LETTER.

My Dear Bishop:

We should not forget that the doctrine, discipline, polity of connectionalism Methodism were arranged and established for a twice-born church, groaning after and going on to perfect love.

Original Methodism not only asked their preachers to groan after the second work of grace cleansing the heart from all sin, but the preachers urged the people to make an entire consecration, to hunger and thirst after righteousness, and to expect, and believe, for full redemption from indwelling sin.

The polity of Methodism, with all of its splendid arrangement of discipline, officialism and evangelism, was well adapted for such a church. In those early days, from our highest officials to our humblest members, revivals of religion were expected in all Methodist congregations. The people gave themselves to fasting and prayer, privately and publicly, and, at least once a year, most every congregation of Methodism arranged for, and labored earnestly to bring about a revival for the spiritual refreshing of the membership of the church, and the salvation of lost souls. Their labors were rewarded; from children to hardened old sinners, hundreds and thousands were deeply convicted for sin and powerfully converted to God. Many of the older saints entered into the fullness of the blessing of the gospel, and were beautiful examples of piety, and enjoyed the rich experience of perfect love.

Sad to say, those days have largely passed away. Many of our more influential churches have banded revivals of religion entirely. Prominent churches all about us go for years without an attempt at a revival; in fact, accept the false position that the days of revivals are passed. They keep up their membership with their Decision Day additions, and the people they gather in at Easter. A large per cent of these indicate no evidence of conviction for sin, and make no claim to regenerating grace, and no pretext to any knowledge of the witness of the Spirit to their acceptance as new-born children of God. It is a lamentable fact that tens and hundreds of thousands of people are being received into Methodist churches without any knowledge of the new birth.

The spirit of modern liberalism is abroad in the land. Large numbers of preachers have become infected with it and, while they may believe themselves to be orthodox believers, they have no profound conviction of essential saving truth, no spirit of evangelism, no consuming passion for souls, and no gracious fruit to their ministry in the conversion of sinners to Christ.

We have many preachers who are bold in their attack upon the old faith that really touched God and brought things to pass. A large percent of the younger ministers do not know "where they are at." They do know that they do not believe the Bible is an inspired book. They question the virgin birth, the bodily resurrection of Christ, and the necessity of a blood atonement. They doubt if there is a personal Devil; they are at sea with reference to future punishment; they are wandering in a wilderness of modern doubt and destructive criticism.

There is one thing of which you may be sure: this modern Methodism is not going to

STRANGE AND STIRRING THINGS IN CHILI.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

My brother, let me tell you of a sight I saw in Santiago, Chili, where I have returned at the request of the ministers and churches for three weeks further work.

Sunday morning I was to speak at a seven o'clock prayer meeting. When I reached the Temple about two hundred people were present and many were upon their knees in prayer. They sang a song, then they prayed, and the praying was in the Holy Ghost. The numbers grew until about 500 were present. I gave the message from Revelation 1:10. Once when I reached a point that struck fire over one hundred rose up and rushed to the altar (without any invitation) and the power of prayer was again manifested. Soon they quieted down to listen again. I spoke on and sometimes the word was punctuated by a volley of halleluahs and, as I continued the message, the word struck home to the heart of one poor fellow and he rushed to the altar and soon again the altar was crowded. When things settled down I continued the message till another chunk of gospel dynamite went off and there was another rush to the altar and another siege of prayer and shouts of "Gloria a Dios" and hallelujahs.

Now you may ask how I accounted for these demonstrations? First of all, let me say I did not try to work them up. The lesson was not at all exciting. They have a word in Spanish "entusiasmo," which means the same as our word enthusiasm. This word explains it. It was the enthusiasm of the Spirit.

Again, at night, I witnessed another outbreak. I preached four times during the day and this was the third service. It was in the Presbyterian Church whose pastor has been giving a great deal of time and prayer to revival matters. After preaching on "The Power of the Holy Spirit" as promised, Acts 1:8, I opened the altar and instantly there was a crowd moving forward; and when I made an appeal to sinners, they began coming from all parts of the church, among them a few drunkards (as Chili has open saloons seven days a week); then the praying began. It was really tense, as some visiting brethren who had been in the early meeting of which I wrote, took hold of the horns of the altar. There seemed to be a possibility of some of those Presbyterians getting a shock, but the pressure increased and the power of prayer continued and then some one began to shout. For a while I feared this would interfere with the good of the meeting, but the Lord helped us. I witnessed a fine looking fellow working with all his might in the meeting and he was full of the Spirit. I was greatly relieved when the pastor told me he was one of the elders of the church; well, I thought, if all this demonstration did not scare him but he could join in it with a hallelujah, I have no occasion to be afraid. Think of one of those good old-fashioned camp meetings, where the power came down and "Mothers in Israel," and fathers, too, shouted the praises of God, and you have some conception of that Sunday night meeting in the Presbyterian Church of Santiago. And it was all Chilean; not a foreign missionary present.

Excitement! Yes, truly, there was, but in my opinion the churches are dying for a bit of healthy religious excitement. I understand the Methodists are going back to the prayer book, and Episcopal form of worship and in some churches they will have high altars and candlesticks. Now all this is a testimony to the loss of the power of God and a very poor substitute for good old fashioned Methodist piety and power. The heads of the church have filled things up so full with mod-

AN APPEAL TO THE HOLINESS PEOPLE.

Let me tell you how you could invest TWO DOLLARS for God and Holiness and reap a tenfold, hundredfold, possibly, thousandfold fruitage. I find over here in South America very few holiness papers are circulating. The people are hungry for this literature but they do not get it. Many native pastors read English and would be glad to get The Pentecostal Herald; many missionaries would be happy to receive it, and some who know nothing about holiness literature would be benefited greatly if The Herald came to them. I could give Mrs. Morrison fifty names of missionaries, pastors, teachers and others to whom The Pentecostal Herald would be a great blessing.

Invest Two Dollars of your missionary money in this way. It may lead some one into their Pentecost. It may start a revival. Pass two dollars on to the Bookstand man at camp meeting for this purpose, or mail two dollars to Mrs. Morrison at The Herald office. DO IT NOW. George W. Ridout.

Santiago, Chili.

ernism and unbelief that something has got to be done to make up for the loss, but it will never be made up by formalism and ritual. It is not Ritual Methodism needs; it's a Revival of Grace.

II.

A very remarkable conversion occurred in our meeting last week at the Second Methodist Church, Santiago, Chili. The morning meetings were devoted mostly to prayer and Bible Reading on Holiness, Pentecost, etc. On this particular morning a most unusual altar service was held and the power of the Lord was felt mightily. As the meeting was breaking up a drunkard appeared on the scene and speaking to the pastor, staggered to the altar; he was so drunk that he fell headlong on the church floor by the altar. We began to pray for him. One brother who had exceptional power in prayer gripped the poor fellow and made a prayer that moved heaven and earth. He seemed to take hold of the horns of the altar for the poor drunk and we believed that God would answer. The pastor arranged to have the poor fellow sleep off the drink and by the night service he was himself and attended the meeting and was at the altar seeking God for himself and got converted. A great change took place; he went to his home and he was such a desperate case that his mother at first refused to let him enter, but as one of the church members accompanied him and told the mother what had happened she let him in. The next day he brought his mother to the meetings and she became converted; he brought also another drunk and he got converted. The transformation that had taken place in those two men and that mother is marvelous. Yesterday, they had me and the pastor come around to see their home since they had cleaned up. The mother was so happy as she served us a cup of tea. All three are joining the Methodist Church.

I notice by the papers from U. S. A. they are wanting to do away with Prohibition. Well some of those wets should come over and see what drink is doing in Chili. Here there are bums and drunkards in abundance. The drink traffic in Chili is enormous. The government encourages the sale of drink for the sake of the revenue. All of these South American Republics are cursed by drink.

III.

Last night I preached at San Barnardo, Chili, to a crowded house. So large was the crowd that sitting room was almost impossible; nearly the whole audience stood and the meeting went on for three hours. Demonstration? Yes, considerable! Chileans, when they get stirred, are very emotional.

The pastor of this people is a unique personality, he is very devout, a man of piety and prayer and dauntless courage. He is unceasing in his labors for souls; he is very original in his methods. Let me tell you of a recent expedient he employed to extend the kingdom. He had a dog that he liked very much; in some manner the dog got lost. Now think of using a lost dog to help kingdom matters and yet he employed it. He believes in setting his people to work. One man who has done a lot of colporteur work he has sent through the town to look for the lost dog, he has a woman also visiting another section looking for the lost dog. They do it this way, they knock at doors and ask if a stray dog has been around there lately; then if the person answering the knock is sociable and talkable they will talk to them about matters pertaining to the soul's salvation. This proves to be quite a success and they get into many homes and give a gospel message and invitation where it would be impossible under other circumstances. The pastor is hoping that the dog will continue lost for a long time; he wants his two workers to cover most of the town looking for the lost dog, but in reality looking for lost souls and talking to them about Christ and salvation.

Now this Chilean pastor without education or training is bringing more souls to God than half a dozen of better trained men I know out here. The night before I preached in his church, which was packed to the utmost limit, with audience standing. The night before I preached in a Presbyterian Church to a handful—a church with fine building in a good locality and which has been there, I suppose, for twenty years, has all the machinery but small audiences, the other man with a coarse, plain church and no Missionary Board back of him to help him out in his finances can pack his church with an audience containing more people than all the Presbyterian churches of Santiago put together. I often wonder what is the matter with our great denominational churches out here. The Presbyterians have been in Chili eighty years. It has about thirty native pastors and the same number of missionaries and yet its returns last year show all over Chili only 1392 members. I quote exact figures from the book. Surely there should be more revivals, awakenings and ingatherings. Presbyterianism in South America needs a praying Hyde! What a contribution to India missions this Presbyterian missionary was. Oh, that his spirit might fall on many Presbyterian missionaries!

IV.

What's the matter with Missions? This question is being asked quite considerably these days. I see by the Christian Advocate they are going to send a Commission of Institutional Experts headed by Professor Hocking, Professor of Philosophy of Harvard, to Asia, to find out what's the matter and why collections are falling off. Well good luck to them—but I have my doubts as to what a Commission of that sort will accomplish. I hardly suppose they will go to the prayer meetings and hear the natives pray; they will hardly go to the revival meetings and assist at the mourner's bench. They won't likely call for days of prayer or "Days with God" as the Salvation Army does. They will not likely examine into the preaching and see if the preachers are true to the New Testament. They won't likely study the history of the Korean Revival of 1907, and the South China Pentecost of 1905, under Brewster, the Methodist. The strong probabilities are that they will add another book on missions to put on the bookshelves and in the archives. It is hardly the New Testament way to rouse interest in missions. What missions need is another Pentecost, not another Investigation.

I should like the big missionary boards to appoint a few people like Dr. Mary Stone, of China, Dr. Goforth, of Manchuria, Paget Wilkes, of Japan, and Nakada and Kanamouri also of Japan, Stokes, of Korea, Roland Allen, of India, Bingham, of Africa, Jaffray, of Borneo, to report on what they think is the matter with missions. I think their "findings" (pardon me for using that silly word) would make interesting reading.

But at the same time it is quite a question, what is the matter with missions? I was looking over some figures yesterday and I find one big denomination has had missions going in this country (Chili) for eighty years and their total membership is less than 2,000. They have about forty missionaries and thirty pastors, and this is the showing. Two of the Methodist Pentecostal Churches of Santiago alone have over 2,000 members and they haven't but one educated man among their preachers. One man who was formerly a shoemaker has a congregation of 1200, the other who was a carpenter has a congregation of 1000. The other church has men and women trained in the best schools and universities of the U. S. A. One wonders what they are doing with their time and talents to have such a meager membership after eighty years.

ARE PROHIBITION MOTHERS NEEDED TODAY?

Rev. Edward Jeffries Rees.

MOTHERHOOD IN BATTLE AGAINST LAWLESSNESS.

SPECIALLY have I been led to ask myself, "What place is the motherhood of this century occupying in the battle against lawlessness, and in our effort to see that this remains a temperate nation, yea, a prohibition nation?"

As I try to answer this question, my mind invariably goes back to my own mother. In her occupation as a home maker, and a church worker, how did she influence her children in this regard? From my earliest knowledge of her—I have known her for thirty-five years, and it's an intimate, sacred knowledge which I have of the one who first taught my infant lips to pray, and led my feet in the way everlasting—she has been a faithful, loyal, enthusiastic member of her "beloved W. C. T. U.," as she always calls it. Each of her dresses, as many or as few as they may have been, had its own white ribbon pinned in a conspicuous place. Her children used to joke her about her many white ribbon bows, and then we would all laugh. She carried a generous supply of them in her handbag, lest a sister W. C. T. U. member might happen to appear in public without her ribbon, and would pin the emblem on her sister's dress. But, as a lad, when she wanted to pin one on me, I drew back, 'cause I thought it was "sissy" for boys to wear bows.

"I SIGNED ON THE DOTTED LINE."

One of the greatest moments of my life came when I chanced to take a trip away from home with my mother. As well as I can recall, it was my first real trip away from home, not over fifty miles away. I was only eight years of age. In the months previous she had said to me, "Son, when you get old enough to understand it I want you to sign the temperance pledge." As we were alone in the guest room of my aunt's home, I found myself "signing on the dotted line," and I can remember that she and I knelt and she prayed, "God bless my boy, and help him to keep this temperance pledge. He has said by signing it that he would not touch any kind of liquor, or use tobacco in any form. Now, heavenly Father, help him to keep his pledge." It was all over so soon, and off on the farm I went to play with my cousin. The regret which I have today is that I have lost that little piece of card. Maybe I'll find it yet. If I do, I'll surely have it framed. The joy of my life is that that pledge has always been kept as sacredly as it was when first it was signed. I simply ask, are our modern mothers leading their children to such altars?

She did not force me to sign it, she just led me.

Then, a little later on, when the local organization of the W. C. T. U. organized a Loyal Temperance Legion, and solicited membership among the boys of the community, I joined it. I was a good "joiner." It caused me to laugh hysterically, and to almost want to fight, when a big boy—he happened to be the son of one of the most outstanding state presidents of the W. C. T. U. which the old Volunteer State ever produced—asked me, "Say, what does 'L.T.L.' stand for—what does it mean?" I told him, and I told him with emphasis! He laughed, and said, "I know what it means—it means 'Little Town Liars.'" That's enough to make any normal boy want to enlist to fight for his country.

In those days, we had temperance contests in the schools. The lads would write their temperance speeches, and deliver them with force, vigor and conviction. When my younger brother won a medal in one of these contests, he promised me that he would let me wear it sometime, when he wasn't wearing it. But I never got to wear it! It's been almost an "age" since I heard of one of these temperance contests. Oh, I know that in some places, and to a small degree, this work is being done. But, not as it was done when I was a growing lad. My dear old principal wore his gold white ribbon bow. It always made me think of my temperance pledge.

The Union Signal has been coming into my mother's and father's home as far back as I can remember. It not only comes into that home but it is read, and read religiously. (Mother has been the local agent for the Signal for years). Then it is marked and sent on to some one else. One lies on my study desk now, just received in the morning's mail, which mother sent on to me. It thrills me. But, I'll have to confess that if one half-dozen Union Signals come to my little city, I don't know of it. The paper is just as good as ever—even better—but somebody has stopped organizing, stopped circulating.

HOW ABOUT THE MODERN MOTHER?

I am miserably afraid that the modern woman is fearful lest she be called a "spy" for prohibition. I'm afraid that she has let down in her outward enthusiasm for temperance, lest someone might accuse her of "getting into politics." And when the outward enthusiasm lessens, the inward enthusiasm will lessen. My humble and firm conviction is that the women of this land, more than any other force, helped to bring about prohibition, and the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. If liquor ever comes back—am I right in my judgment?—it will be because the women allow it to come back. For, I've found this to be true, that when you get the women stirred up, get them to reading, speaking, writing, voting (some still think it is not a woman's duty to be at the polls—my mother doesn't belong to this group, however), get them to praying, that the men, who may have become indifferent, and a bit doubtful as to the success of the enforcement of this most important Amendment,—the men will say, "What's the matter with the women? We had better listen to them."

If there is any one group of people in America who have been blessed more than any other group by the beneficent and cleansing influences of the temperance movement, that group is the women, unless—unless—it be the children!! But, I'm asking, "What is the average woman, in the average community, doing to help enforce prohibition?" Women, if YOU go to sleep, the men will SNORE! If you stop, you may count on the masculine part of the nation to stop, too. But, my conviction—and it is unbiased—is that the noble women of this nation will not stop. There's too much of the sacred and abiding influence of Frances E. Willard which has been bred into their crystal lives, for them ever to think of stopping.

Yes, it was a delight to me, some years ago, to be able to write to the W. C. T. U. to which my mother belongs, saying, "Enclosed, find my personal check for my own dues. I want always to belong to this union. Lest I forget it, always send me a statement of my annual dues. And, also find enclosed check for the purpose of making my mother a life member." And, I have requested her to allow her children who survive her, to tie 'round her sacred casket, after she receives her summons to "come on up, and join the real temperance organization of Eternity," that emblem of purity and beauty, the white ribbon of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I'm made happy by her reply, "That's always the custom of the union when one of its members passes on." I doubt if mankind ever had a sweeter emblem or practice than that!

We read something in Holy Writ relative to the fact that "her children shall rise up to call her blessed." That has been fulfilled already in regard to this Temperance Mother of mine; and also, in regard to the faithful husband and father who has stood by her side for fifty-five years. A mother like this is not produced over night. Such mothers cannot be purchased at the dime store. It takes a generation to grow them. They are more valuable than gold, yea, than much fine gold. And, today I bring to her sitting room, where she has sat for her "three score and ten," reading her Bible, her Union Signal, her church papers, only to leave that room when her duties called her to help her fellow man in need—I bring to that sitting room the gold of my affection, the frankincense of my love, and the myrrh of my undying loyalty to her and the ideals she planted in my heart as a growing, freckled-faced lad in sunny Tennessee.

Oh God, send us a shower, a downpour, of mothers in this day who shall do their part in home, city, and nation to make this a better, cleaner, more temperate nation and world!! Amen!

Jesus Will Never Fail Me.

REV. D. RAND PIERCE.

Life has brought struggles and trials,
And tunnels as dark as could be;
But, praise His name, when I've trusted,
Jesus has never failed me!

Loved ones have faded and left me;
No star in my sky, could I see;
But, when my grief was most bitter
Jesus has comforted me!

Battles I've fought with the tempter,
When victor it seemed he would be;
But, when despairing, I've called Him,
Jesus has conquered for me!

Roses may brighten my future,
Or thorny my pathway may be;
But, if I walk close beside Him,
Jesus will never fail me!

Though it be thorns or roses;
Sunshine or shadows, I see;
This thought so sweet cheers me onward—
Jesus will never fail me!

TRUE FREEDOM.

Rev. W. Edmund Smith.

Text: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8:36.

FREE! What a word to conjure with! You can make it mean anything you like, from the most rigid legalism to the wildest license. You tell me what you mean by freedom and I can tell you what you are. Many who think themselves free are held in slavish chains.

A nation may think itself free because it dominates its own internal affairs and regulates its own foreign policies without any outside dictation. This nation builds its great battleships and organizes and disciplines great armies, and the more it cultivates the spirit of militarism the greater becomes its bondage to the fear of attack. It is the bondage of fear that precipitates war. This was true in the awful World War, and the same fearful spirit is steadily growing in Europe today, cultivated by the secret activities of preparation for war.

A church may think itself free and at the same time be so cluttered up with ecclesiastical machinery and millinery, so dominated by pompous and austere ritualism, that it has long since ceased to function as a channel for the Spirit of the living God.

Here is a young man who thinks himself free—very free, yet he disregards physical law, violates civil law and repudiates God's law. He glories in what he calls self-expression. He becomes a law unto himself, and thus is soon held fast in the chains of abject bondage.

We all must learn that true freedom can never come by ignoring and violating properly constituted law. Our highest liberty is gained and conserved, not outside the limits of law but within the operation of its regulations and restraints. We live in a moral and social order. We are members one of another. We have personal rights and so have others. We maintain our own highest physical, civil and spiritual interests when we have regard for those of others. The closer our social contacts the greater the need of beneficent laws to restrain the actions of bad men and to regulate the conduct of good men. And when our nature is rightly adjusted to all good laws we escape the bondage of their coercive power, and are glad in their educational and the directorial value.

Robinson Crusoe on his lonely island was a law unto himself. Till Friday came he had no social contact whatsoever. He could build and live in any kind of a shanty, keep his pig in the parlor, dump his garbage on the front lawn, make hooch in the cellar, get uproariously drunk and run amuck over all the island; he could plant the poppy and make opium, lull himself off to sleep and there was none to question his actions. "He was monarch of all he surveyed."

His right there was none to dispute. He could dominate his man Friday by his superior might. But when Crusoe came to the mainland and bought a farm, he soon ran up against the proposition of a line fence. That fence indicated as to how far over he could run the cutter-bar of his mowing machine, and within what limits he must keep his cattle and sheep. He might have grumbled and said: "This is a queer place. Not like this on my island." "O, yes, Robinson; you are off your island now, and must respect the rights of others. But remember the same line fence that holds you in check, also holds your neighbor in check. That fence acts and reacts to your own good."

But suppose Crusoe comes to the city, and buys a lot of land on a good street, and proceeds to put up a shanty like he had on the island. There is trouble at once. The city building committee waits on him and informs him that he must erect a dignified modern house on that land valued at so many dollars. He may bluster and say: "This is a queer town when a man can't do as he likes with his own." And so it is. He goes out in the street with his car and is halted by the red lights and the traffic cops. He is fined for not keeping on the right side of the street and running by the red light. "Queer city this," he grumbles. "Not like this on my island." O no, it is not. But Robinson remember that the same laws that regulate your conduct also regulate that of others, and thus your property rights are conserved and your life protected. If you are not pleased with these regulations that are the expression of the highest intelligence and the individual and collective interests of the people, then go back to your island home. This is the price you must pay for your social contacts."

So we claim that the character of your citizenship is determined by your attitude to civil law, and the way it affects your spirit. The really honest man will be honest in any circumstances. He does not need a policeman on the corner with a big stick, or doors with locks on them to make him honest. If all the policemen in the city were to go on strike and people were to leave all their doors unlocked, the honest man would steal no more than now. He keeps the law from any inner disposition that harmonizes with the law. He sees in all laws a directing and instructing medium. He does not feel their coercion and restraint for he is inclined to keep them all, and sees in them the highest good.

And we say the same principle applies in the realm of the moral and the spiritual, when our inner nature is rightly adjusted to the law of God. Naturally we are out of harmony with God's law. When he commands us to "keep off the grass," we naturally think that is the only place for us. We want to do the things that God forbids. We think that in their indulgence we may find the highest happiness. It is the delusion of sin. God's high and holy nature is revealed in his law, and also our highest moral and spiritual good. And I contend that the end of divine grace is to so bring our nature into harmony with the nature and the will of God, that we, instead of groaning and complaining under the bondage and restraint of the moral law, as the picture is given us in the seventh chapter of Romans, may know the blessedness of the "expulsive power of a new affection." The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus making us free from the law of sin and death.

This is just what God promised to do. He said, "I will take away the stony heart of flesh. And a new heart will I give unto you, and a new spirit will I put within you, and I will cause you to walk in my statutes and keep my precepts to do them." This was the promise long before Christ came. How Paul rings the changes on this spiritual freedom! "I will put, write my commandments upon the fleshy tables of your heart." And John says: "This is the love of God that we keep his commandments, and they are not grievous." Not grievous! They must be grievous unless we have hearts that love the law.

To revert to the Old Testament. How the Psalmist gloried in this liberty and freedom! "I delight to do thy will, O my God, yea thy law is within my heart." "Thy statutes have become my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." Some one said: "Let me make the nation's songs and I care not who makes the laws." But the psalmist made songs out of the laws, because he saw in the law of God the expression and revelation of God's exalted character, and also the securing of his own highest good. And we claim that through the regenerating and sanctifying power of the blood of Jesus, all that the prophet and apostles have spoken is abundantly substantiated in the hearts of God's children today. It is this experience that makes it not only possible but easy to be a true Christian. The expulsive power of love makes all God's requirements reasonable and delightful.

We have seen this even in the realm of the natural, how that human love makes the load easy. You have heard the story of the little girl, who was carrying her baby brother in her arms. He was a lusty chap and she tugged bravely while his feet dangled to the ground. A sympathetic passerby said, "O little girl, I feel sorry for you with your heavy load." The little girl looked scornfully at the sympathizer and then a sweet smile broke upon her countenance as she replied, "Please, mam, he ain't heavy. He's my little brother." Love made the burden light.

I think of Susannah Wesley, whom Dr. Adam Clarke called one of the greatest women that ever lived, as to physical beauty, intellectual power and spiritual character. She was the wife of an Episcopal clergyman, who never had a stipend that exceeded six hundred dollars a year. Mrs. Wesley became the mother of nineteen children. These she herself gave the rudiments of education. Besides attending to her household affairs, she found time to preach to the Kingswood colliers at the rectory door on Sunday afternoons. "What a life was that," some poor social devotee might say. Think of such a person coming round and sympathizing with Mrs. Wesley on her dull, drab life and suggesting that she get a little time off to enjoy herself. I can think of Mrs. Wesley asking that person what she did in her social club and at all the social functions. The best reply that person could make would be: "We kill time and get some thrills." Kill time! Mrs. Wesley was redeeming the time. She was one of the happiest women in all England. Love made her burden light. Love, human and divine.

But how especially true is this with divine love. Madame Guyon was imprisoned for her faith, in the lonely Bastille prison. She was a woman of rare personal charms and intellectual gifts. But in that dark prison cell she never murmured or complained. She was the prisoner of the Lord, as was Paul, and in that place of confinement she sang some of the sweetest songs of liberty that have ever gladdened the hearts of God's saints. Listen to this:

"A little bird am I, shut in from fields of air;
And here all day I sit and sing to him who placed me there;

Well pleased a prisoner to be,
Since, O my God, it pleaseth Thee.

"Naught have I else to do; I sing the whole day long;

And he whom best I love to please doth listen to my song.

He caught and bound my wandering wing,
And still He bends to hear me sing.

"My cage doth me surround; abroad I cannot fly,

And though my wings are closely bound my soul's at liberty;

These prison walls cannot control
The flight, the freedom of the soul.

"O it is good to soar these bars and bolts above,

To him whose purpose I adore, whose Providence is love;

And in that mighty will to find
The joy, the freedom of the mind."

John Bunyan in the Bedford jail, dreaming of the "delectable mountains" and the City of Light was far freer than the proud Stuart king upon his throne, whose edict had put Bunyan there.

In a lonely prison cell I see a little careworn man chained to a Roman soldier. He is writing by the light of a crude lamp. And as he writes his face is illuminated by "a light that never shone on land or sea." I think I see tears of joy coursing down his pale face, and subdued words of praise fall from his lips as he writes. What is he writing? Why a love letter. All the world is interested in love letters, and this is one of the most wonderful ever penned. He is writing it to the church he loved most dearly. I look over his shoulder and see these words: "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice!"
"For I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content." But I ask, "Paul, where did you learn that lesson? At the University in Tarsus or at the feet of Gamaliel in Jerusalem?" And Paul smiles and replies, "O no, in neither of those educational centers did I ever learn the secret of contentment and soul rest. No school of a worldly kind has any chair endowed to teach such a thing as contentment. I learned it in the school of Christ, that taught me to count all earthly gain as loss that I might win the riches of eternal value."

Can I pity Paul? O no! He is freer by far than Seneca, the proud philosopher in his study, writing his principles of morality that he could not keep himself. He is far freer than the wicked and cruel Nero on his throne
—a slave to his brute passions and appetites.
Paul is the free man of God, bound in body but not in soul. He was the great exponent of the freedom Jesus meant when he said, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

Desecration of the Sabbath.

REV. I. M. HARGETT, D. D.

T'S just too bad that the church of our Lord Jesus Christ, the most important and necessary institution in our present day life, which should have right-of-way on at least one day of the week, has to fight for its existence. The church every Sunday this summer will have to compete with automobiles, fishing, picnics, chiggers, mosquitoes, lakes, mud-holes, creeks, hills, "the sticks," blackberries, pink lemonade, pop corn, wiener roasts, steak frys, golf, swimming, tennis and just every other thing you can think of that people do on the Sabbath day instead of coming to church.

When I was a boy, the Sabbath day was a day sacred and holy. It was a day of worship, quiet, relaxation, and rest. When Monday came, our physical, mental and spiritual batteries were recharged and ready for service. But look at it now. Sunday is the most hectic day we have for many of our people.
A day of physical exhaustion and spiritual nervation. Many people come to Monday morning much less fitted for work than they were on Saturday morning because of the unnatural, abnormal, and foolish way they spend the Sabbath.

We used to call Sunday the Lord's day.
Now it is the week-end, and "weak-end" is right. Once the Sabbath was the first day of the week. First because on that day we did the highest and finest things in human experience. It was the day of all the week the best. It was indeed the Lord's day because on that day we did those things that blessed and honored him.

Today we are raising a generation of young people who have very little conception of the sanctity of the Sabbath and as for the meaning of the commandment, "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy" they have little understanding of what it is all about.
We are teaching them to "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it jolly." These youngsters are not to blame. We oldersters are to blame. We have made the Sabbath day a holiday rather than a holy day. Just think of it! Some parents send their children to Sunday school and tell them to hurry back because they want to go fishing or picknicking or galloping off to the chigger country. And when the teacher urges these boys and girls to stay to the morning worship service, they say, "Oh, we can't. The folks told us to hurry back. They would be waiting for us."

We are deliberately selling our Christian civilization out to the devil. We are cutting the foundation out from under our very life.
We are opening the way for the incoming of godless Bolshevism in which neither life nor property nor religion will be respected; in which our churches will be turned into granaries and garages just as they have been in Russia.

The sad part about it is many of our people do not seem to think there is anything to fear. It does not seem to have occurred to them that we are living in the most dangerous times in a hundred years. They laugh at the idea that we are living on top of a volcano which is ominously rumbling beneath our very feet and may burst forth into fiery fury at any time precipitating a social, political, and economic cataclysm such as the world has never seen.

My dear friends, this is a time for serious thought and a time for praying, a time when the people should turn to the churches as they have not in this generation. Unless I am absolutely wrong, the church of Jesus Christ holds the key to the solution of our problems and to the salvation of our civilization. That's why I think men and women should give their financial and moral support to the church in these troublesome times. We cannot afford to throw away the key that unlocks the door of our hope. When you church people spend your Sunday picknicking and golfing and galloping about, you are giving your vote for the destruction of the church and our civilization.

I know this sounds like mighty strong talk but it won't sound half strong enough in the day of our calamity, if that day comes, which, pray God, it may not. In Russia they dare not ring their church bell on Sunday.
Preachers are political outcasts. Atheism is taught in all the schools and no teacher is retained who will not teach it. The government is making it just as hard for religion to survive as is possible. Private property is no more. Those who were once wealthy are now outcasts and beggars and all of this came about largely because they had a great State church which for centuries worked hand in hand with a corrupt government.
That old orthodox church had scarcely more spiritual life than a last year's bird nest. It made no vital contribution to the life of the people and when the revolution came, the church became one of the objects of their direct attack. The church of our day must make itself vital to the life of our day and to the needs of our people.

The church must relate itself to the people and identify itself with all their interests, and make itself the champion of every righteous cause touching the well-being and happiness of our people. And never was there a time when ministers and laymen should give such careful thought to their church and what it is doing than now. This is no day to consider the church a secondary or subsidiary organization. It is basic. It is fundamental.

My dear friends, I am begging you in the name of God to give more serious consideration to the business of being a Christian and of running the church than you ever have before. If the church is all wrong, then we had better close up and quit. If the church is right, then we had better give our very first thoughts and attention to it. Jesus said,
"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and all these other things will be added unto you."
The church is lagging and halting and limp-ing these days in the face of such a challenge as the world has never given it and all because we have so many people who are just playing at being Christians. They are not even working half time or half strength. Let us think it over and in the name of God and for the salvation of our civilization and the happiness of our children who are coming on after us, let us apply ourselves to the one institution which I fully believe is the one that will save us if we are to be saved.

Women Will Save Prohibition.

(Statement of Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, General Secretary, World League Against Alcoholism).

WOMEN of America form the strongest support of the Eighteenth Amendment, and of the principles underlying it," says a statement of Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, General Secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism.

"Even before they had obtained the ballot, they made possible the writing into the Federal Constitution the prohibition amendment. Now that the Nineteenth Amendment confers the full rights of citizenship upon the women of the nation, the Eighteenth Amendment can rely upon a volume of positive support which is not likely to be misled by the shrewdest propaganda purchasable by the wet millionaires who are financing the assaults upon the policy of national prohibition.

"When one reads the statement attributed to one of the women who are urging the repeal of prohibition to the effect that 'prohibition was brought about by the women, and its repeal will be brought about by the women,' one wonders how much the wish is father to the thought and how much local environment colored the thinking of the speaker. It is quite natural to assume that the opinions, prejudices, or customs which prevail in one's own group are equally held by the rest of the world. Such an assumption is as illogical and as dangerous as it is natural. That the conclusions of this woman opponent of prohibition is unfounded in fact will be clear to any who calmly study the easily ascertainable facts about women and the liquor problem.

"Two of the largest groups now supporting the Eighteenth Amendment are women's organizations. One of these is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union with a membership of 600,000. That membership is located in every state in the Union. There is scarcely a community of any consequence without its local union. Large as is the membership of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that total does not truly represent the voting power of that group alone. One would have to multiply that membership from three to ten according to the locality, to arrive at the actual voting power of this single group of women who are definitely, positively, aggressively committed to the continuing fight against the liquor traffic in any form. Another great organization of women which is giving its support to the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment is the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement, headed by Mrs. Henry Peabody. This organization is composed of affiliated groups of an aggregate of over ten million. Of course there may be many cases in which a single woman may be counted several times because of her relationship to different groups organized together in this National Committee. Here once more, however, one must recognize the fact that not even this large total accurately represents the influence which might be exerted at the polls by this enormous body of women who are squarely committed to the cause of enforcement.

"There also are the National Federation of Women's Clubs and the aggressive organizations that regard the safety and well-being of the home as vastly more important than the opportunity for drinking liquor.

"The unorganized women of the nation must also be considered. Womankind has been the greatest sufferer from the evils of intoxicating beverages through the centuries. The harm done by liquor was felt most deeply and most severely in the home. This was true in the homes of poverty, and in many homes of wealth. The trail of ruin was not limited to the slum sections or the neighborhoods devoted to the working groups. It was found in the mansions on the hill and in the homes of luxury. Throughout the ages, women have seen their fathers, their husbands, their lovers, and their brothers degraded by this enemy, put into their mouths by men who sought an easy road to wealth by pandering to the weaknesses and appetites of their fellows.

"It was because women had suffered deeply and long from the ravages of the liquor traffic that women, even when disenfranchised, were the most potent force behind the movement for local prohibition, state prohibition and, ultimately, national prohibition. It was through the efforts of women that legislation was written on the statute books in nearly every state, requiring scientific instruction in the public schools on the evils of beverage alcohol. From the very beginning, women by their personal influence and by their contributions, made possible the organization and support of the various societies and leagues that were fighting the liquor traffic.

"It will hardly be disputed that women, according to every census taken of church groups, constitute much more than a majority of their membership. Women's support of the prohibition cause was not lightly undertaken, nor will it be lightly forsaken. They are devoted adherents of a policy which means better homes, broader opportunities for the younger generation, and a cleaner civic life.

FACTS FROM THE FIRING LINE.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."—Hos. 4:6.

Prohibition has wrought miracles of moral, social and economic redemption, but thousands of dries do not know it. Every pastor is urged to reprint the following Fact in the Church Calendar, or read it from the pulpit to offset the destructive wet propaganda which appears in many of the secular newspapers. A new Fact appears in this place in each issue.

An Associated Press cable from London gives figures fixing England's 1930 liquor bill at $31.49 for every man, woman and child. At the same rate America's liquor waste would be almost $4,000,000,000!

"Even in the admittedly wet sections the majority of women favor prohibition, and that general position finds tremendous support even among the women of the foreign-born and the wives of the sons of the foreign-born. That group is not confined to the Protestant churches. It is not even confined to the Christian churches. It transcends church lines and religious groups just as the ravages of liquor transcends all sectarian, geographical, and racial barriers. When the home is at stake, the overwhelming majority of women will rally to the defense of the home against one of the greatest foes the health has ever known."

Has Capone Won, After All?

It will be a shocking thing to the country if Al Capone is permitted to get off with a light sentence in return for pleading guilty. Capone has been the head criminal of the United States. It is estimated that 500 persons have been killed in Chicago in the last ten years in various wars participated in by members of the Capone gang.

Capone himself has been a wholesale violator of the liquor laws, and is supposed to have made millions out of his operations. He has been the beneficiary of houses of prostitution and crooked gambling establishments. And he has got away with all this because he has been the head of the invisible government in Chicago.

HERE IT IS!

The binding is an extra fine genuine Levant Morocco, leather lined to edge, silk sewed. A beautiful small grain, stamped in gold, overlapping edges. It is exceedingly flexible.

The paper is a very white, opaque, thin India which makes the Bible thin and light; at the same time, it is very durable.

The type is a large, clear special self-pronouncing that reads like long primer. The names of the books are printed on the corner of the pages, making it easy to turn to them; the chapter numbers are in figures.

The helps are 40,000 center column references with dates at the head of each column, one of the most comprehensive and complete concordances of 160 pages, 80 pages of other valuable helps, including maps in colors.

It is red under gold edges, has the silk headband and marker, thickness is 1 inch, size is 5x7, weight is 22 ozs.

We have been selling Bibles for 30 years and this comes nearer being the most ideal than anything we have offered to our customers. The binding is handsome and durable, and the most pleasing thing about the book is that it lies perfectly flat in the hand anywhere it is opened. This is a book you will fall in love with.

The regular net price of it is $8.50. We have tried for years to have manufactured the finest and most attractive Bible that could be made, and at the same time sell it at the low price of $5.00. We have just been successful in doing this and you can get one of them. On account of the close margin at which we are selling them, we ask you to send 10c extra to pay the postage. If you are not doubly pleased, you may return the Bible in good condition within 10 days and we will refund your money promptly.

Finally, government agents, not susceptible to his fixing operations, got enough evidence on him so that he saw the futility of further fighting. But if the reports are true he capitulated and agreed to plead guilty provided he would get a light sentence.

Apparently the government agents preferred to play safe and give him a light penalty rather than take the chances of a bitterly contested legal battle. If this is true, the agents have made a serious mistake.

A short imprisonment for such a criminal as Capone is ridiculous. Undoubtedly, he would regard it as a great victory to retire to a prison for perhaps three years and then come out to enjoy the millions he has made out of violating the law. He ought to be sent to the penitentiary for twenty years at the very least. Such a penalty would throw fear into his heart, and into the hearts of his fellow gangsters.

A short sentence would show serious weakness on the part of the instruments of justice, and would be an encouragement to the gangsters.—Kansas City Times.

DIVINE-STRENGTH.

Text.—"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."—Isa. 40:31.

At best man is a weak creature. Especially is he weak against the foes of his inner life.

In this day of strenuous, high powered existence when the vitality of life is so drawn upon by our feverish, nerve-racking method of living we never needed a source of strength to draw from as we do now.

Prayer is the means by which we get in touch with God and bring down lightning-bolts of power for the strength of our daily life.

We need the divine strength that comes by waiting upon the Lord.

Take time to be Holy!

A MESSAGE FROM AFAR.

Rev. and Mrs. E. O. Rice.

In a previous article the writer told the readers of these columns that he and Mrs. Rice were sailing on January 31st for a four months' trip to the Orient. On May 20th our steamer pulled into San Francisco through the Golden Gate and we were singing praises to the Lord in our heart for his protecting and guiding hand over us. Since we started on our trip to the Orient, we have covered approximately twenty-one thousand miles, seven thousand of these having been traveled in China, Korea, and Japan. Our farthest point north was Mukden, Manchuria, and our farthest southern point was Canton, China. We had a chance to see the various fields of labor of The Oriental Missionary Society which is doing one of the greatest pieces of missionary work in the history of missionary labors.

We were accompanied in our travels by Rev. E. L. Kilbourne, who is Vice President of The Oriental Missionary Society and in charge of the work in China and Korea. Rev. Kilbourne and his wife certainly were splendid traveling companions and they are so thoroughly familiar with all parts of the Orient that they were indeed a great help and blessing to us.

Many, many things happened of an interesting nature which we should be glad to tell the readers from time to time in our articles. On Easter morning at the Spring Convention of The Oriental Missionary Society at Tokyo, Japan, Rev. Juji Nakada, who is the head of the O. M. S. Japanese Holiness Church of Japan, preached a very splendid Easter sermon. In the course of his sermon he mentioned that recently a Buddha priest had received a part of one of Buddha's bones. This piece of bone was sent to Japan from Siam so that it could be worshipped, and the Buddha priest was looking around for a worthy place to place it in. (The bone was about as large as a pea.) Rev. Nakada was rejoicing that there were no bones of Jesus lying around for people to make a "fuss" over. He shouted glory, Hallelujah, because he was worshipping a living Saviour! This truth was greatly blessed to the three thousand Japanese hearers; and what a wonderful thing it would be if the entire population of Japan could realize the fact that Jesus has risen and that there are none of our Saviour's bones lying about for some priest to find a place to place them.

Easter Sunday morning at breakfast Mrs. Rice had an inspiration to write poetry, so within just a few minutes of time and thought, she wrote the following poem:

Easter.

May this blessed Easter morning
Brighter be than e'er before.
Jesus died; He 'rose; He liveth!
Yes, He lives forevermore!
He's our Saviour,
Let us now His name adore.

Heaven could not keep the secret,
But sent angels forth to tell
Of a risen, living Saviour
Who had conquered death and hell.
Christ the Victor!
Let us now His praises swell.

Glory, Majesty, and Honor
Crown Him, glorious King of kings
For us now He's interceding,
He bears healing in His wings.
Christ is Risen!
Resurrection life He brings.

Brother and Sister Kilbourne and the others who were at the breakfast table were so impressed with it that it was suggested to Rev. Nakada that Mrs. Rice and Brother and Sister Kilbourne sing it before the large Japanese audiences that glorious Easter morning. This they did, singing it to the tune of "Guide Me, Oh Thou Great Jehovah!" Although Easter has slipped by, I felt sure the readers would appreciate reading the words of this Easter song.

The gift of speech is wonderful, and the gift of reading is splendid, but to be able to see with one's own eyes is better than hearing or reading. So if the readers of the columns of this excellent paper could only make a trip for themselves to the Orient, the following is what they would have seen and heard at the wonderful Holiness Convention of the Oriental Missionary Society at Tokyo! This is the description that we have in our diary of their services:

Song service—faces expressive—some smiling—some meditating—prayer—one leading in prayer—volumes of amens—whole congregation of folk prayed and blessed up and just one praying after another with no time for the end of one prayer to cool off—two and three praying at once—hand clapping and praying—some seated, some standing—hand clapping sounds like the pelting of hailstones—this is not ice but heavenly fire—now audible prayer all over the room—sounds like the roar of the sea—Scripture lesson this particular morning was Eph. 4:17-32. Text, Eph. 5:30, "For we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones." Everyone has his Bible and every head is bowed reading silently as the reader reads aloud—response of amens all over the room as the reading goes on.

No wonder the workers of the O. M. S. Japanese Holiness Church are able to report such large results this year. Brother Nakada stated that they had taken into their membership and baptized 4200 this year. They are looking for a much larger increase this coming year, for the revival spirit is on in Japan. Their objective for the coming year is that where they now have nearly four hundred churches, they expect to see several hundred more opened up throughout the year, and they have set as their goal one thousand churches this next year in Japan. The Oriental Missionary Society Japanese Holiness Church raised this last year, 317,000 yen, or $158,500 in United States money. This is a large increase over last year and it only demonstrates that the givers to the cause of Jesus Christ for strictly evangelistic work are people who are on fire with the love of God. It is certain that when the Holy Spirit comes into an individual's heart, he has a desire to tell others of this wonderful pearl that he has found.

Please pray for us in this work to which God has called us. Any one desiring to reach us may do so by addressing us at 832 No. Hobart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. Mrs. Rice and I are leaving in a few days for the East, as we expect to be in deputation work the rest of the summer. We will report about our other Conventions later.

Yours for the evangelization of the Orient,

CAMPAIGN IN LOUISIANA.

We recently conducted two meetings in the state of Louisiana. Ruston, La., was the scene of the first evangelistic campaign. It is a fine business and college town, the State Technical School being located there. The people are of the Southern conservative type of American citizenship. We enjoyed our visit among them. The meeting was held in the Methodist Church of which Rev. H. M. Johnson was the pastor. He is a good mixer with his people and stands for evangelism in the church. The singing was conducted by Mr. Henry Riser, a fine young man who is devoting his time and musical talent for the cause of the Kingdom. Rev. Brown, the presiding elder of the Ruston District, attended the meeting a number of times and boosted the work of the revival. He believes in the old-time religion. Rev. C. M. Morris, an old Asbury boy, pastor at Mangum, La., came over to see us and assisted in one of the services. A number of Methodist ministers from surrounding towns were seen in the revival. Souls came to the altar and prayed through to victory.

We went from Ruston to Gibsland, La., and assisted an Asbury boy, Rev. H. B. Hysell, in a revival. We had a fairly good meeting considering the awful hot weather. We were there about the time the heat wave struck the country. Bro. Hysell is on fire for the salvation of souls. God is blessing his ministry. His wife is a good singer and fine worker in a revival. Rev. A. W. Townsend and wife, pastor at Farmerville, La., attended the revival several days and rendered valuable assistance.

We met Rev. E. A. Dennard, a minister of the M. P. Church, while in Gibsland. He attended the revival and was faithful in prayers for the success of the campaign.

The Southern people in this section still maintain their reputation for hospitality. They invited us to their homes and treated us to some great dinners. The Louisiana people certainly know how to cook and how to serve splendid meals.

We preached and prayed and exhorted and souls came to the altar. A number prayed through to victory.

We are now in the Paul Rader Tabernacle, Chicago, Ill., preaching at the week-night services. Paul Rader has a great plant here and is doing a wonderful work. Rev. Wm. H. Hogg, formerly of Mississippi, is Rader's assistant and right-hand man. The people like him and he is kept busy preaching, broadcasting and helping Rader in a mighty program for the salvation of souls.

We go from here to New Castle, Pa., where we will assist Rev. Sam Maitland in a revival campaign. We solicit the prayers of God's people.

Yours in Christ,

Andrew Johnson.

OLIVET COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT AND CAMP MEETING.

We have just closed what was considered pretty generally by those present, the best Commencement and camp meeting in the history of our institution. God's blessing was manifestly present. We had the largest crowds, the best spirit, and more souls than at any time that I have been connected with the school and camp meeting.

President T. W. Willingham had made ample preparation for this great feast of good things for the Nazarenes of the middle west. Bro. Willingham preached the Baccalaureate Sermon for us Sunday morning, May 24th, which was one of the high points in this annual occasion and we had a great crowd. Then on Wednesday Bro. Willingham brought us a fine address of what Olivet had meant to him and done for him and what the school had done in its short history of twenty years, telling of the hundreds of workers that had gone out from this place. At this time he also presented the plan to secure $10,000.00 to take care of our capital accounts by securing persons to give $1.00 per month each for twelve months and many gave more than the $12.00.

The programs of the College were especially fine. One of the high points was the Bible College program when God really came down in old-time power upon the program that was being rendered and there was shouting for about one hour. Dr. Heslop has rendered faithful services in this department and he and his precious wife are doing everything in their power to advance the Bible College and to intensify the spiritual life of the student body. Dr. and Mrs. Heslop are to continue with us for another year.

Dr. J. W. Goodwin came to be with us from Thursday over Sunday, delivering for us the Commencement address. Dr. Goodwin is always greatly appreciated at Olivet for he always carries with him a great blessing. He preached for us twice, also lectured on Palestine the last Sunday afternoon.

Our own Uncle Bud Robinson has been coming to this camp meeting for fifteen or twenty years. He generally has every afternoon service. He is getting sweeter and more tender all the time. He sold books, boosted and helped to push the battle like he always has for the last fifty years.

Dr. H. W. Jerrett had charge of all the night services preaching every evening and we had salvation from the very first. Our long altar was filled with chairs at each end. Dr. Jerrett was wonderfully anointed to bring us those night messages. He preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven and God was surely with him.

The Vaughn Radio Quartet are always among the great drawing cards at this camp meeting. They sang heaven and earth together a number of times. God is certainly blessing these men who are literally pouring out their lives in song.

The Board of Trustees broke their record this time in the board meeting. They transacted all necessary business in less than two hours. Our brethren are standing together. Our good chairman, Dr. Edwin Burke, who has been with us so long, was at his best to see that business was dispatched in a good way. President Willingham had all of his matters well in hand. The discussions were frank and the matters were well taken care of in this short time. No institution in our denomination is more ably supported than is Olivet College. The District Superintendents of our zone and the Trustees are wholeheartedly back of President Willingham and his program. We are looking forward to the largest enrollment in recent years, this fall. We certainly need your prayers.

E. O. Chalfant, Secretary.

PEARSON, GEORGIA.

We have just closed a great meeting at Anson, Ga., one of the appointments of the Pearson Charge of the South Georgia Conference. This meeting was conducted by Rev. Don Morris, who did most of the preaching, and Rev. Jesse Green, who led the music and the young people's services. They are two of our young men from Asbury College, and both of them endeared themselves very much to our people. We had many sky-blue conversions, and clear-cut definite sanctifications. I don't know when I have ever seen such seasons of agonizing prayer and supplication as attended this meeting. Brother Green and Brother Morris are earnest workers and splendid revivalists. They do not believe in mere lifting the hand or signing a card, as an evidence of conversion, but in praying through to victory for the witness of the Spirit to our conversion and entire sanctification. These men are surely destined to make their mark in the world. This is my thirty-eighth year as a member of the South Georgia Conference, and I do not think I ever saw any more thorough work done in any meeting. I commend these two brethren with all my heart to any one who really wants a genuine, old-fashion, Holy Ghost revival.

F. A. Ratcliffe, P. C.

GIBSLAND, LOUISIANA.

On June 28th a revival campaign that accomplished definite results was brought to a close here in Gibsland. Rev. Andrew Johnson, D.D., of Wilmore, Ky., was the engaged evangelist. He pounded with God's hammer and pierced with the Spirit's sword until the souls of men were stirred. I have known of Dr. Johnson for some time but never realized that he used so much Bible in his sermons. I have known him to quote more than thirty portions of God's word in one message giving chapter and verse. His messages were convincing. I think it would take wilful blindness to fail to see the truth concerning the plan of salvation under his ministry. His sermons on the way of Holiness are as clear and scriptural as any I have ever heard. Much prayer ascended the hill of the Lord and those who walked in the light were definitely blessed or helped in some way.

North Louisiana is a great harvest field. We need the prayers of the saints. If you have access to the Throne of Grace, pray for us. The revival fires need to be rekindled. The Old Spring Lake camp meeting has a great history but it is all in the past. The lake is used for mixed bathing and a tree has fallen across the tabernacle. I trust that God will so resurrect us in these days that the great soul-stirring times will be not simply a past remembrance but a present reality.

Yours under the Blood,
Harvey H. Hysell, Pastor.

wear the harness and overchecks of the Methodism of purity and power prevalent in the olden time. The yoke that was a delight to a great spiritual people who found its adjustment comfortable, and giving them great pulling power, will be a galling burden on the necks of an unregenerated people. They will not wear it.

Mark my word, my beloved Bishop, as the church goes forward abandoning the doctrines, experiences and life of old Methodism, she will rebel against her polity. She will limit the term of Bishops to eight, if not four, years. She will, in all probability, do away with district superintendents and presiding elders, or will claim the privilege of electing them. She will give less and less heed to the various secretaries of the church and ignore the budget.

A vast multitude of these Decision Day children who have been brought into the church and are now grown up, pay no attention to the discipline of the church; they have never seen a prayer meeting, do not attend the Sunday services, and make no contribution to the church budget. They live in the world, love the world, and seek after the pleasures and amusements of the unregenerate, godless multitudes who hasten to doom. You may be sure, the world has no faith in their piety, and no respect for their profession.

It has come to pass that most of the churches of any prominence dictate to the appointing powers who they will have for their pastor, and then they dictate to the pastor, rather quietly, perhaps, what they shall preach; and there is nothing easier than to make a change of pastors if the men who carry the money-bags should desire a change. It is not at all uncommon for a congregation to notify a bishop after the appointments have been made, that they will not receive the pastor who has been appointed. You know quite well that, frequently, well paid pastors and their congregations almost entirely ignore everything in the budget that provides for foreign, home missions, and the superannuates. Does it not seem that sort of thing is practically becoming congregationalism, and ignoring the connectionalism that is supposed to bind Methodism into one harmonious, spiritual body in Christ?

There is a spiritual element in the church;

many devout preachers in Methodism, who long for a restoration of spiritual life and power that would induce loyalty to the old-time polity and evangelistic power. Whether it be true or not, this spiritual element believes that they take second place; that they are at a disadvantage, the modernistic minister being more carefully cared for; that to be a real Methodist, with evangelistic zeal, is to be discounted.

Perhaps you know these facts and far more. I do not wish to annoy you, but as a believer in all Bible truth, and the Lord Jesus with his saving power, and the lover of human souls, I contemplate these facts with sadness, and can but wonder what the future holds for us. Not the distant future, my dear Bishop, but the immediate future. I hope that the call to fast and pray will bear good fruit, but what about the Achans in the camp. There is such a thing as a human cleansing in order to a divine cleansing. Unbelief, with its attendant irreverence and disobedience, can lock the wheels of Zion. Perhaps the ships of prayer that go up to the ports of glory to be filled and freighted with blessing to bring back to a needy world should, first of all, search carefully and see if there are not some things hidden away below decks that should be cast overboard before God can answer prayer and bestow the gracious blessings the church so much needs.

Faithfully your Brother,

H. C. MORRISON.

One of the Causes.

One of the principal causes of the great depression and many willing workers who are without employment, and the fearful effect that this condition of things brings about, is the fact that the whole country is overbuilt; it has more homes than it has people to occupy them, more business houses than business men to rent them.

During the war there was comparatively little building material and labor being used by the Government. Wages were high, everybody was employed, and money was plentiful. Thousands, I may say hundreds of thousands who, never before had accumulated money, got ahead with their finances and invested same in Government Bonds. There was a great demand for building when the war was closed. It seemed that everybody wanted an apartment, or a few bungalows and cottages to rent. The people built far beyond the actual need.

The building and furnishing of homes make prosperous times. The building of houses calls for material and labor; the houses have to be furnished, which calls for furniture, carpets, stoves, hardware, a hundred and one things; factories are kept busy, and labor finds employment, and the merchants are busy with trade. Hardly anything can bring greater depression in business than the country to awake to the fact that it is overbuilt. It will require time for marriage, and the coming of new families to occupy the vast number of vacant houses.

There are hundreds of thousands of men in this nation in business who have passed middle life. They have incomes sufficient to support them and their families with comfort. If a million such men should retire and let younger men take their places, the effect would be very salutary on present conditions. There would be an upward trend of employment, from the presidents of companies to the sextons who sweep the floors of offices.

If five hundred thousand women in business who have handsome incomes, should retire, it would give a host of unemployed positions and salaries sufficient to live upon. If two or three millions of girls who are not supporting families, but are receiving fairly remunerative salaries, and blowing their money in on lipstick and sealskin coats, should take a notion to go to school, the places they occupy would largely absorb the idle labor of this country; men who need positions in order to support their families.

The people of this country have been recklessly wasteful. A large per cent of the people who are now in great financial distress have received good wages, but lived in luxury and wastefulness, and now feel the pinch of poverty. The people of this nation have been drunk with prosperity, money getting, pleasure seeking, fine cars, extravagant clothing. They have wasted their substance in riotous living. The nation has been, not only sinful, but hilarious in its wickedness. It may be that we are heading toward calamities that will provoke us to thoughtfulness and lead some to repentance.

H. C. MORRISON.

In Time of Plenty Prepare for Want.

What is ahead of us no one can tell. There is one thing for which we should feel profoundly grateful: This country is burdened with food products; but cheap as necessary food is, there are many who are poorly prepared to buy them.

We learn from the daily press that wheat can be bought in Kansas for 25 cents per bushel. Now would be a good time for the cities of the country to lay in a supply of wheat for the breadline the coming winter. There are thousands who would give ten, twenty-five, fifty or one hundred dollars to buy cheap wheat in order that the poor may be furnished with bread the coming winter. We are to hope for the best, but if labor is not furnished to the millions who are now unemployed, there is going to be great demand for charity. The idle poor must be fed. I can but wish that city authorities and those of a philanthropic spirit would begin now to prepare for emergencies and extreme want the coming winter. If the various cities of the nation would buy up some millions of bushels of Kansas wheat, farmers would be glad to get rid of their surplus, and the food could be had at comparatively small outlay.

Eating The Heels.

While at Commencement at Asbury College one of the graduates of the class of this year, came to talk over with me the matter of attendance at the Seminary at Wilmore. He was a fine, cultured young man. He had been offered considerable advantage if he would attend one of the seminaries that is noted for its modern liberalism, but he had a great desire not to quench, but to kindle the evangelistic fire within him to greater warmth and blaze.

I inquired carefully into his case and found that, during the past school year, this young man and his devout wife had been living with most careful economy. The chef of the College dining room had been giving him the heel cut from the loaves of lightbread, that little hard piece, you understand, at the end of the loaf. He had been taking these home, softening them with milk, and making very palatable food out of them. I could hardly keep back the tears; my eyes are moist while I write. This cultured young man was a million miles from a beggar. He was, and is, a consecrated servant of the Lord Jesus longing to fit himself for a spiritual ministry, for a real winner of souls to Christ.

I took the plunge and promised him that he should have help through the year, and attend the Seminary at Asbury. I have already received ten dollars toward his support. He and his good wife do not waste a crust or crumb. With her washtub she helps in their support. They are the Lord's. They are worth while, and must be cared for while they prepare for their life's work. "Anything sent to Mrs. H. C. Morrison, Box 592, for the support of this young man, will be handled with careful economy, and will be treasure laid up where rust and moth do not corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal.—Go to it!

The Nashville, Georgia, Evangelistic Club.

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

SOME one sent us an account of some great work the above Club has been doing in Georgia, Florida, and North Carolina. It seems to us these young people have found the spring of true happiness—seeking the lost sheep on the mountains of sin.

Rev. Hugh Wallace was the first leader in this evangelistic campaign, which he began by reading that wonderful scripture from 2 Chronicles 7:14: "If my people, who are called by my name, shall humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and will heal their land."

This scripture furnishes the divine program for a revival: God's people must humble themselves, turn from their wicked ways, and God will hear them and forgive their sins. There are always two sides to salvation—human and divine. Man's part is to humble himself and repent of his wrong-doing and trust God. God's part is to receive the penitent one and forgive his sin.

After laying this program before the people, Rev. Wallace called them to prayer, the whole congregation participating. The prayer meetings continued night after night, with exhortation, singing and confessions, rectifying of personal differences and restitution, after which God honored their sincerity and sent the revival.

Revs. Shaw and Spivey were engaged to continue the meetings in the Methodist Church, and later on evangelists Clark and Bell were engaged to continue the campaign in the Baptist Church, all Christians co-operating. Rev. Davidson, former missionary to India, took up the work and carried it on, preaching especially on the deeper experiences for the Christians.

The revival has spread to various sections of Georgia and Florida. A group of these young people loaded a car with rations and went to Clearwater, Fla., where they held a good meeting, under the leadership of Rev. Wallace. There is a Prayer Band in Nashville, Ga., who holds up before the throne of God the workers as they go out into battle. Part of the prayer group holds cottage prayer meetings every Thursday night.

It seems to me these young people have gotten on the right line of service. Talk about entertainment for young people! This beats picture shows, skating rinks, baseball, football, swimming pools, the dance hall and card table. When we talk about entertaining our young people, and believe we have to furnish worldly, godless mediums for their pleasure, it indicates that we have no knowledge of what it takes to entertain a Christian. God's word says, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

The fact is, friends, the church has not gotten the right idea of God's program. It is as true today as when uttered centuries gone, that, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." The world is not a friend to grace to help us on to God, nor can we look to it to build us up in the most holy faith. If our young people were genuinely converted they would not seek to be entertained, but would have within them the life-giving fountain out of which blessing and power would flow to the famishing world. Would that a group of young people could be in every church who had the burden for the lost as this Evangelistic Club of Nashville, Ga. We would see wonderful happenings in the kingdom of grace, and thousands would be led to Christ. God bless this group and prosper them in their stupendous and Godlike task of winning the lost to Jesus.

Anticipating the General Conference.

Rev. A. S. Hunter.

A YEAR hence, if the Lord tarries, the General Conference of the M. E. Church is expected to be in session at Atlantic City. Already, forward-looking men, leaders and would-be leaders, are trying to forecast needed and possible legislation, and to block out, at least, a tentative program of business. About Pittsburgh, the brethren are cussing and discussing the district superintendency. Doubtless the same elsewhere, and various other points, as well.

It is common knowledge, both within and without the church, that Methodism is suffering a spiritual depression; as the country, and the world at large, is suffering a material depression. Experts (?) are diagnosing the situation in both cases, trying to locate the cause and find a remedy. As some look to the Congress to legislate "prosperity" back to the nation (about as likely as to legislate the weather); so do some seem to anticipate that the General Conference will cure the ills of Methodism (at least they know no other way)—and with about the same prospect of success in each case.

The cause and cure of Methodism's deplorable condition is plain enough to those who have "eyes to see." She is suffering from fatty degeneration of the heart; too much carnal luxury, and lack of divine grace. This is complicated by megacephalous—the big head—inflation of "brains." And both are further complicated by officialitis; too many committees, commissions, etc., and "the power is off." There may be other minor troubles, but surely this is bad enough, without looking farther!

In a plain word, Methodism is a prodigal from God! She has taken her heritage of historic success, etc., away from home and, "in a far country," is living riotously, companioning with "the world." She has departed from God's way, and is trying to carry on "the King's business" of world-evangelism on the "phony" script of "religious education," and similar things, instead of with the coin of the realm, the presence and unction of the Holy Spirit, in salvation from all sin, outward and inward. She is a failure at "selling religion" in the world-marts, either in the United States or foreign lands. With Brahminism, Buddhism, Mohammedanism, etc., in the old world, and Spiritualism, Russellism, Eddyism, etc., at home, mankind is more than "fed up" on religion, while it starves for salvation! The world will not buy her tinsel imitations! A year ago, Methodism put on an official "phony pentecost," and was thereby further humiliated before the unbelieving world! She feasts and talks, when our Lord said to fast and pray!

The remedy does not lie with the General Conference, nor in "preaching missions," nor in Epworth League assemblies, nor in young people's retreats, nor in Bible conferences, etc. "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk ye therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls'!" "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest for your souls." From Jeremiah to Jesus, God did not change; nor has he changed since, nor will he change in the future. "The old paths" of "Moses and the prophets," of Christ, of Paul, of Luther, of Wesley, God still follows; and he will meet and bless any person or church there. Methodism can prosper in soul, and also succeed in God's work, by returning from her prodigal wanderings, returning over the road of repentance and humiliation for her sins, as the other prodigal did and, like him, saying, humbly, contritely, "I HAVE SINNED"! The bishops and district superintendents are the ones to lead the procession, while the pastors and membership follow.

Brother Zelley, in The Methodist of May 7, pointed out the starting place; a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer! Each pastor lead his own congregation. If we cannot all have the same day, each congregation have its own. Not a big, union, spectacular affair, but each congregation alone, "in the closet," so to speak, before God rather than men. Real abstinence from food, real humiliation of our souls before God, real "prayer and supplication," as with the disciples before the original pentecost. Methodism can have a genuine pentecost, the outpouring and infilling of the Holy Spirit, "purifying our hearts"; she can have that when she first repents of her spiritual adulteries, and gets right with God. There can be a church-wide pentecost, with a multitude of souls converted and sanctified, before the General Conference meets.

The General Conference should be a real pentecost, with the Holy Spirit cleansing and filling the hearts of its members. Let the first ten days be given over to waiting upon God, as did the 120 disciples of old, and God will do his part now, as he did then. There should be preaching twice or thrice, daily, by some one of the real holiness evangelists of our own church, and perhaps of other churches; men who have had their own pentecost, and who have been owned and blessed of God in promoting pentecost for others. Let the assembly go down on their faces before God in true penitence for personal and denominational worldliness and unfaithfulness, until God pardons their sins and heals their backslidings; and then press on into the baptism with the Holy Spirit. As they individually come into accord with God through Christ, the Holy Spirit will certainly do his sanctifying work. If Methodism is ever to come back, it will be over this road that she will return.

In Jeremiah's day, Judah said, "We will not walk therein!" and walked to Babylon as captives! What does Methodism now say? The bishops now have the floor!

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

FRANK'S STORY.

"Frank Ferguson would be all right in everything if he did not have the habit of leaving us whenever we want to play pool," exclaimed Robert Stanton to a group of young fellows who had gathered on the corner of the village street. "Any other time he is a good sport, and willing to take part in anything we attempt to do."

"I wonder why he is afraid to play pool?" asked Richard Randolph. "I'm sure I don't know," replied Robert. "Suppose you ask him the next time he is with us."

"Well, you will have a chance right now," spoke up Arthur Ridley. "There he is coming toward us this very minute."

Frank greeted his young friends in a boisterous manner as he came within hailing distance, but he was surprised to notice a disconcerted feeling among them by his presence. In a puzzled manner he said:

"Hello, fellows! What's the matter?"

"Why, Frank, we were just wondering among ourselves why it is that you never go with us to play pool. Why is it?"

It was Frank's turn to flush at the unexpected answer to his question, and he hesitated a moment before making a reply.

"You don't think there is any harm in playing a social game of pool, do you, Frank?" persisted Robert.

"It isn't so much the harm in playing pool as it is in the associations which surround a person," answered Frank in a firm voice as he looked his companions in the face.

The boys all looked to Robert to reply, and, with a flushed face, he said:

"Why, they are all good fellows, and come from respectable families."

"True enough, Bob," was the answer; "yet there is a chance for one easily led and influenced to be drawn into a more serious mode of gambling than playing pool. It is just a step from playing pool to shaking dice. After the habit once is formed, it continues to grow, and is hard for one to overcome. And in the end a boy or man not only loses his worldly possessions, but his self-respect as well."

"Oh, I don't believe that," said one of the group.

"Listen, boys," replied Frank, earnestly, "as you know, mother and I have moved here to make this village our home; that my father is dead. After I tell you, perhaps you will not blame me for the stand I take."

"My father drank. When he was sober, one could not ask for a kinder parent than he was to me, but these were rare times."

"Father's health broke, and one day he called me to his room. Putting his hands on my shoulders gently, he said:

"(Son, I am going to leave you and mother before long, but before I go I want you to promise me you will take good care of your mother, and never go to poolrooms, drink liquor, or smoke."

"After I promised, he continued:

"Years ago, Frank, I was respected, and commanded the good will of all. In one evil moment I commenced to go to the poolroom for a social game of pool. It was not long until I gambled; then came the liquor."

"I well remember the first time I took intoxicating liquor. I did not like the taste, but was afraid to refuse for fear of the jeers of my companions."

"As time passed I grew to like the drink, and I could not refuse it. My mother pleaded with me, but the habit was so strong within me that I heeded not."

"Son, you may think you are strong enough to overcome these habits, but take my advice and stay away from temptation."

"Father died soon after, and that is the reason, boys, that I am keeping away from the influence of all evil habits."

For a moment not one of the boys spoke. Then Robert said:

"Thank you, Frank, for telling us.

You are doing perfectly right, and you are going to have company. From this time on I am going to take your pledge."

"Let's form a club to that effect," spoke up one of the group. This met with approval, and from then on not one of the group broke his pledge.—The Youth's Temperance Banner.

always read page ten and enjoy it. My age may give me away but I am not old. I am bound for a country where nothing ever grows old. I may never meet you, dear cousins, in this world, but in yon fair land in the morning of joy I will meet Aunt Bettie and Dr. Morrison and you dear cousins who have Jesus for your Shepherd. I praise God for The Pentecostal Herald and a people who stand for a whole Bible and a full salvation. I would love to get a shower of letters from the cousins. I will be looking for many letters. I remain your old brother under the blood, Dear Aunt Bettie: May I join your band of boys and girls? I do not take The Herald but I enjoy reading it. I get the paper from my uncle. I belong to the Union C. M. Church. Our pastor is Rev. J. C. Moody, whom we all dearly love as a pastor and a worker in God's vineyard. I don't want to take up too much space as this is my first time to write. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, especially the Senior Class. I am the teacher of that class and have been for almost three years. We have about eighteen in regular attendance. They seem eager to do the work I ask them to do, too. I enjoy the work very much and feel that there is no other work that would be of any more value to young people. Ola Woods.

Rt. 5, Cullman, Ala.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I have been intending to write long before now. I surely enjoy reading The Herald, especially page ten. I think everybody should read it, as it is such an interesting paper. I am a member of the Methodist Church and go to Sunday school and preaching every Sunday. I am fourteen years old and in the tenth grade. My birthday is Sept. 10. I would like for all the boys and girls to write to me as I like to correspond.

Reba Jenkins.
Rt. 3, Stephens, Ark.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I take The Herald and think it is a grand paper, especially page ten. It is wonderful how this paper reaches so many places in the world and does so much good. So many of the letters are so heart-touching. I am glad to see so many Christians. A true Christian does not have any time to lose; they have to keep the "home fires burning" by prayer. I have a great responsibility on me. I have a large family and some of them not concerned about God. I want all the Christians who read this to pray for me and that my companion will get tired of sin and will let Jesus come into his heart and live the way that God would have him to live; also that God will give me enough strength and courage to go on and not turn backward. Do not forget to pray for our home. I would like to hear from all of you Christians and I will enjoy reading any good literature anyone will send.

FALLEN ASLEEP

MASTERS.

Caroline S. Masters, daughter of William and Elizabeth Garretson, was born March 19, 1857; departed this life June 11, 1931, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. L. McCurdy, Wingett Run, O., with whom she made her home. At the age of twelve she united with the M. E. Church at Harrietsville and lived a faithful Christian until she was called to her reward. She practiced a life of self-denial in order that she might help others in need, and endeavored to promote the Lord's work, both at home and abroad. She supported a missionary in the foreign field, India, for three years. She was a strict tither and kept up with the church news by taking a number of religious papers, among them The Pentecostal Herald which she loved so well.

In 1877 she was united in marriage to John Belleville who, in early life, passed away leaving her with two of their four children to care for, the others having died in infancy. Later, she married Thomas Masters, to which union one son was born. A few days before she went away she testified that she was ready to meet Jesus, and that he was very precious to her. She regretted leaving us, knowing how much we would miss her. Truly, none can realize what a loss we have suffered in the home-going of our mother, for she taught us from infancy to pray and strive for that home beyond the skies.

The funeral text was, "What is your life?" Her favorite songs were sung, "There's a Light in the Window for Thee," "I'll meet you just inside the Eastern Gate," and "Meet Me There." Her dear form was laid to rest under the flowers in the Liberty Cemetery near the old home. I trust we children may be accounted worthy to meet her in the morning of the first resurrection.

Mary McCurdy.

MALONE.

The Passing of a Great Saint.

Rev. Henry Edward Malone was born in Florence, Ala., Aug. 25, 1856; passed away June 28, 1931, age 74 years, 10 months, and 3 days. Brother Malone was a great Christian character. He was converted when a young man and while he had some discouragement and some battles with carnality and lost out a few times, was reclaimed. At Maldo, Ark., he attended a revival meeting conducted by Rev. Mrs. E. J. Rutherford, one of the great women preachers of the Holiness Movement. She poured out the truth and proved by the Word that men and women could get rid of carnality and be sanctified wholly in this life. One year later Brother Malone prayed through in the old-time way and God sanctified him. He felt the call to preach and soon was out in the work for God and a lost world.

He was married to Miss Sally Crump in July, 1876. There were born to this union five children, two of whom died in infancy. "Miss Sally" went to be with her Lord at their home in Dallas, Texas, in 1903. He was married to Rev. Mrs. E. J. Rutherford, Sept. 20, 1905, at Birmingham, Ala., Rev. M. H. Wells officiating. They went on in evangelistic work holding camp meetings and revivals and seeing many sinners saved and believers sanctified. His health began to fail in 1916. In 1920 they moved to El Paso, Tex., where he lived the rest of his life. For seven years he was helpless as a baby, and his good wife nursed and cared for him as no one else could. We can say of her, "She hath done what she could."

Brother Malone was a member of the Church of the Nazarene of El Paso, Texas, in good standing. We praise God for his life and the inspiration he has been to all. Many times I have gone to their home to pray with them and to try to be a blessing to them, but came away with the greater blessing, feeling that I could "run through a hoop and leap over a wall." He loved his church and the great doctrines it stands for. The last promise he quoted was, "He will never leave thee nor forsake thee." The last songs he sang were, "God will take care of you," "Not made with hands," "Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus." He was ripe and ready. "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his." Let us not forget to pray for Sister Malone that God will comfort her heart and give her strength to press the battle. Let us all press the battle and, by the grace of God, meet our precious brother on the sunlit banks of sweet deliverance. R. C. Gunstream, Pastor Church of the Nazarene.

FOUCHE.

Mrs. W. E. Fouché of Brunswick, Ga., recently passed to her reward on Jan. 13. She was a devout Christian and is now enjoying her well deserved reward. She leaves her husband to mourn her departure.

MOODY.

The death angel has visited the home of Rev. and Mrs. Haynes Moody and taken therefrom Donell, their infant son, aged five months and fourteen days. He was born Jan. 23, 1931, and died, after a short illness, on July 8th. Interment was at Salem Cemetery.

Donell was a lovely baby—a little flower of promise whose passing has left a dark shadow on the hearts of his loved ones; but God, in his wisdom, saw fit to take him and, knowing that he does all things well, it is not meet to grieve because this bud of purity and innocence has been plucked to adorn the garden of the angels. The petals of life, never unfolded, will not have to know the withering noon-tide, nor rayless night of earthly sin, sorrow and despair, but keep their dewy freshness forever in the realm where the face of the Father gives eternal light. "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." A Friend.

EXCERPTS OF A LETTER.

My Dear Hunt:
Your book, "Paul's Superlative and Other Sermons," was received in due time and appreciated because of its author—my good friend. I find it a rare combination of messages on most vital subjects. I congratulate you on such a production. It is complimentary in many ways to your gifts and powers of the Gospel preaching—sane, biblical and spiritual to the core. May it have a wide circulation and be repeated many times in publication.

I am always your true friend,

IN MEMORIAM.

I saw the old warrior in his casket, his hair, made white by the snows of many winters; he was resting now after a thousand battles in which he had been in deadly combat with whiskey and the saloon, gambling and the underworld; infidelity and its propagandists; Rome and its Popes; Antichrist and the Beasts; Evolution and its godlessness; modernism and its skepticism; sin and its hellishness.

I went to the grave after the crowd had gone home and saw them covering up the casket with mother earth and they worked hard, but I said there lies a man whose soul you cannot bury, a casket cannot contain him, nor can six feet of earth hold him. By ten thousand sermons he has preached, by the songs and hymns he has written and sung throughout the nation, and which are being sung around the globe;

by his revivals in which thousands have been won to Christ; by the books which he has written and which have been read throughout the world; by his preaching sons, and the sons and daughters of others whom he helped train to preach and evangelize in the homeland and on the foreign fields; by his testimony for the Word of God, the cleansing blood, the sanctifying power, the glorious hope of the Second Advent, and the bliss of immortality, the soul of L. L. Pickett marches on.

Adopted son of Kentucky soil, he lived to bless her with his prayers and protect her with his Gospel Sword! Son of Methodism, he bowed at her altars and swore eternal allegiance to her doctrines. Preacher, Evangelist, Singer, Writer, Warrior—L. L. Pickett preaches on, sings on, prays on and fights on, though he has lately changed from the church militant to the Church Triumphant.

GEORGE W. RIDOUT.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson VI.—August 9, 1931.

Subject.—Saul Converted and Commissioned. Acts 9:1-9; 9:17-19; 1 Tim. 1:12-24.

Golden Text.—I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision. Acts 26:19. Time.—About A. D. 37.

Places.—Damascus; Arabia; Jerusalem; Tarsus.

Introduction.—Saul, afterwards called Paul, was born in the city of Tarsus, the metropolis of Cilicia. Because the city took the side of Caesar during the civil wars of Rome, its name was at one time changed to Juliolopolis in his honor. The population was largely Greek; and the city in St. Paul's day boasted considerable Greek culture. It is reasonable to suppose that Saul laid the foundation of his great learning in the schools of his native city. He says himself that it was "no mean city."

It seems almost certain that Saul was educated by his father for a Jewish rabbi. When quite young, possibly about fourteen years of age, he was sent to Jerusalem to sit at the feet of Gamaliel, the greatest teacher of the Hebrews then living. The Jews termed him the "Beauty of the Law," because of his great learning. How long Saul sat as a pupil under this wise teacher is not known; but the record indicates that he must have left Jerusalem before our Lord began his ministry. They were nearly one age, Saul being a few years the younger. It is hardly conceivable that such a rampant Pharisee could have been living in Jerusalem when Jesus was preaching and teaching in that city, and not have clashed with him in the temple. We cannot locate Saul at that time; although some have supposed that he was back in Tarsus.

On the supposition that Saul did not come in contact with Jesus before his crucifixion, we must suppose that when he makes the declaration that he had seen the Lord, he must be referring to the vision he had on the road to Damascus. There it was that he was converted to Jesus Christ; and his conversion was one of the most marvellous in all the history of the Church. It was a double conversion that killed him to all that had gone before in his mad life of Jewish zeal, and unto all the glorious revelations of eternal salvation that lay before him. The conversion of Saul of Tarsus constitutes one of the most unanswerable arguments for the Deity of our Lord that can be found on record. Henceforth he would face persecution and death for love of him whom he once hated with almost hellish hatred. Henceforth he would count it an honor to be considered worthy to suffer for his new-found Master. He reached the most exalted mount in all his experience when he cried, "I am crucified with Christ, and I no longer live; but Christ liveth in me!"

Comments on the Lesson.

1. Breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples.—That picture is hardly human. It makes one think of an angry, carnivorous beast thirsting for blood. Saul was mad. Went unto the high priest.—Whether he had a real authority over Jews in far-away lands, or simply assumed that authority, is not stated; but he exercised it, whether right or wrong.

2. Desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues.—It is not to be supposed that the high priest of the Jews claimed to exercise authority in matters of religion over the Gentiles, but over such Jews as might be living in foreign parts. Saul would go to the synagogues in Damascus in search of Jews who had been converted to Christ; nor did it make any difference with him whether they were men or women. If he found any followers of the Nazarene, having bound them so as to render them helpless, he would drag them without mercy to Jerusalem for trial, and—perchance—for death.

3. As he journeyed.—Saul was not travelling alone, but with quite a company of deputies who would assist him in his devilish work. Suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven.—Here we have the light of the Divine Presence, the Holy Shekinah that lighted up the Holy of Holies in the tabernacle in the wilderness. The Lord of glory himself had come to deal with Saul of Tarsus. Henceforth he would be a chosen vessel to bear the glad news of salvation to the dark, heathen lands of earth.

4. He fell to the earth.—The light was too much for his nerves. We sometimes say that Jesus unhorsed Saul on that occasion; but the probability is that he was travelling on foot; or he may have been riding one of the small asses common in Palestine. He heard a voice saying unto him.—I suppose that there need be no question that in this case the Lord spoke audibly to Saul. Saul, Saul why persecutest thou me?—Strange words to fall upon the ears of this arch-persecutor when he had never seen the Lord. But he was persecuting the followers of Jesus; and that was the same as persecuting the Lord himself. No man can injure one of Christ's little ones, and not hurt the Christ himself.

5. Who art thou, Lord.—It would be interesting to know what meaning Saul attached to the word Lord. He may have meant simply Sir; or he may have risen to the full height of that great word. Revelations were crowding upon him; so that he was learning more of truth in a few minutes than he had known in a whole life-time. No doubt his question was sincere. I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.—The full revelation has come at last. What a shock it must have been to Saul; for he had been sincere in his persecutions against Christians; but now he finds that he had been all wrong. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.—Against the ox-goats, sharp instruments that were used to punch the oxen to hurry them up a bit. If an ox kicked against the goad, his punishment was made worse for his kicking. Jesus used this rough figure to teach Saul a great lesson. He was hurting himself by persecuting the disciples of Jesus Christ.

6. Lord, what wilt thou have me to do.—If Saul meant only Sir the first time he used this word, I feel sure that he meant MASTER when he used it the second time; for he was living years in minutes. We would not miss it far, if we dated Saul's conversion from that moment. He turned completely round at once. Go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.—Jesus could have told Saul at once what he must do; but he has a way of using men to carry on his work. Many a young man has been astonished when some old saint told him that God had called him to preach. How had the old saint found it out? for the young man had told no one his feelings. God speaks to men now, as he has always done.

7. Stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.—Things were hidden from them, because it was none of their business. God sometimes has secrets with some men.

8. Saul....when his eyes were opened....saw no man.—The brightness of the light from heaven had blinded him for a season, as when one gazes at the noonday sun. Some one led him by the hand into the city of Damascus.

9. Three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.—His was a blessed conviction for sin. It touched the depths of his being. Would that we might see some such cases in this our day.

17. Ananias.—Not the one who died because he lied to the Holy Ghost. That sinner lived in Jerusalem: this saint lived in Damascus. God commanded him to visit Saul and baptize him. He brought good news to the broken persecutor. "Jesus....hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost."

18. Immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales.—I do not understand this. It was some form of miracle. Arose, and was baptized.—The Greek says: "Having arisen, he was baptized." The word indicates that he was baptized standing on his feet, and in the place where he was standing. There is nothing to indicate that he made so much as a step in any direction.

19. We have no way of learning how long Saul tarried in Damascus; but we read that he was "certain days with the disciples" who were there. Our expression, "Some days," might be a good substitute for the certain days of the text.

1. Tim. 1:12. I thank Christ Jesus our Lord. Many years had passed since the conversion of Saul of Tarsus on the Damascus road. He was growing old when he wrote to his son Timothy; and his name had been changed to Paul; or rather, he was using his Roman name instead of his Hebrew name of Saul. He had been set apart for the "defense and confirmation" of the Gospel, had been tested and tried in many conflicts, and had been found faithful. Now he is rendering thanks to his Lord for it all.

13. A blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious.—Paul is not boasting of his wickedness, but confessing his sins, that he might give glory to him who had so graciously saved him from them. But I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief.—There is a fearful lesson here for such as claim that they sin against God every day, and that they cannot do otherwise. Paul found the grace of God "exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus"; but we must not lose sight of the fact that he was an honest sinner trying to serve God all the time. Blatant insincerity and blasphemy are dangerous attitudes for any soul. It is easy for such to cross the deadline of eternal damnation.

The Mills of The Gods

by DR. C. F. WIMBERLY.

After reading sophisticated novels, sex stories, and tales of pagan glory, one comes with a great deal of delight and satisfaction upon this splendid story of Dr. C. F. Wimberly—"The Mills of the Gods." As the title implies it is a story of justice and recompense, and reveals in no uncertain manner how God, and not Chance, is ruling the Universe.

The story moves with sure and certain strides, is gripping, worth reading, and the book deserves a wide circulation in this day of lost faith and false values.—JOHN RICHARD MORELAND, Poet and Critic, Norfolk, Va.

Rev. L. S. Hoover, Radio Evangelist, recently held a two weeks' meeting in the Pilgrim Holiness Church at Charleston, Ill., in which backsliders were reclaimed, sinners were converted and believers were sanctified. Rev. C. C. Breen is the pastor and highly recommends Brother Hoover as an evangelist.

Evangelist F. Lincicome: "After having been in two camp meetings with Evangelist J. M. Hames I feel I have the right to introduce and recommend him to the camp meeting committees of America. Rev. Hames rings clear and strong on the great cardinal doctrines of Christianity. His well thought-out and carefully prepared messages are constructive and brimful of facts for saints, and fastens conviction on sinners. God is mightily using this Spirit-filled man. In my opinion, Evangelist Hames stands in the front ranks of holiness preachers of today. He is not only a great preacher but a real teacher. He goes down into the Word and brings out the deep things of God. Camp meeting committees keep this evangelist busy and he has the right to be kept busy in the larger camps. Camp meeting committees can reach him by writing him at 14 Maude St., Greer, South Carolina." Evangelist Hames is the author of several books which are having a great sale, and you can get better acquainted with him by ordering his books, "Feast of Good Things," $1.00, "Fragrance, Sweetness and Power," 25 cents, "Spiritual Shocks," 25 cents. I will hold a meeting in a grove near Cecilia, Ky., August 16 to September 6, after which I shall be available for meetings. I am willing to labor anywhere the gospel is needed, and would accept the pastorate of a church in town or country where there is opportunity to branch out into evangelistic work. I only ask for freewill offering as remuneration for my services. Address me, 421 E. Jefferson St., Louisville, Ky."

The Dundy Chase and Perkins County Holiness Association will hold their twenty-first annual camp meeting on their grounds five miles west of Imperial, Neb., Aug. 14-23. Rev. E. A. Buege, President, White Pigeon, Mich.

GLENWOOD CAMP.

Some six years ago I was in a meeting here and had some very definite leadings in connection with a school here of the same spirit as Asbury and other holiness schools. Have been engaged in school work for about fifteen years, and have been preaching eight years. Five years ago I came as pastor on the charge of which Glenwood is a part. Deeper impressions and leadings have come, until two years ago the idea of a camp meeting began to settle down upon me. Our plans did not materialize last year, but we are looking to August 20-30, as the time for such an effort. Very little preaching on full salvation lines has been done in this section until within the last five or six years, still we have a few Spirit-filled people who are crying unto God by day and night for this meeting. We are expecting eight or ten Spirit-filled workers and plan to go day and night for ten days.

S. L. Payne.

GOOD DOMESTIC SCIENCE TEACHER AVAILABLE.

To any one who may be looking for an experienced, devout and capable teacher of Economics we wish to recommend Mrs. Mary A. Oliver, 1148 Center St., Bowling Green, Ky. Mrs. Oliver taught for thirteen years in Asbury College and for a number of years in Meridian Female College, and has had long years of experience in her subject. Should there be a school that needs a teacher of Home Economics I suggest that they write to Mrs. Oliver at above address. Mrs. Oliver has had experience in the superintendency of dining room and culinary departments.

MOUNT CARMEL CHURCH AND SCHOOL IN THE MOUNTAINS OF KENTUCKY.

Dear Friends: We have started our eighth year of work in the Mountains of Kentucky. The Lord has been with us through the past seven years. The work has grown far beyond our expectation, and the Lord is marvelously blessing in every phase of the work. Truly he has vindicated his promises in our behalf. We say with Wesley, "Wherever holiness is preached the whole work of God prospers."

Our grade and high school, Mt. Carmel, was filled to capacity again the past year. Our student body represented seven mountain counties. A large number of them kept a good saved and sanctified experience all through the year. They have gone back to their homes for the summer to establish family altars and testify for Jesus. Nineteen of our students have a definite call to preach or to be missionaries.

Our commencement was a time of much blessing. Rev. Warner P. Davis, of Wilmore, Ky., preached the Baccalaureate sermon. Commissioner S. L. Brengle, of New York City, was our Commencement speaker. He came two days early and gave us five wonderful messages. Little Richard Akers, 11 year-old son of Dr. L. R. Akers, president of Asbury College, gave his lecture on Astronomy to the Eighth Grade graduating class. The chapel was too small for the great crowd at Commencement time.

The first Sunday in June we began our eighth summer, campaign of evangelistic work. Some of our stations are open just during the summer months, but an increasing number are kept open the year round as we can get the workers to conduct them. We had 13 of these permanent stations last year. This summer we have 12 others in addition making 25 stations in all. We now have 44 workers in the field.

Since the formation of an association in June, 1930, the Lord has led us out more and more into the field. We are incorporated under the name, Kentucky Mountain Holiness Association, with headquarters at Mt. Carmel Church and School, Lawson, Breathitt Co., Ky. It is being marvelously owned and blessed of God in shepherding our converts and giving permanency to the work.

This summer we are starting grade schools in two neglected sections. This burden has been heavy on us for the past five years. In the one place the people gave us a large old building. It is costing only $500 to repair it for use as a church, school and parsonage combined. In the other place we can build the church and school on the beautiful seven acre campus which cost about $2,000. Do pray that God will lay it on some one's heart to send us the needed money for these two long neglected places. The dear mountain people give us land and labor, and we are so happy to give our lives in order that some of the one-half million people who live in the extreme rural parts of the Kentucky Mountains may have the advantages of regular church and Sunday school services for the first time in the past 175 years.

Two years ago the tremendous need and heavy burden was laid upon our hearts to establish a Bible Training School where we may train our mountain young people who have a definite call to their own people.

Will you help us pray for the remaining four thousand dollars of the six thousand which we must pay by August 1st, 1931. We are happy to announce that Dr. H. C. Morrison is coming in September to dedicate this building.

We take this opportunity of expressing to you our heartfelt gratitude for your prayers and gifts which have helped to make all this work possible. Come to our seventh annual holiness camp meeting, August 20-30. Workers: Rev. C. W. Ruth, Rev. W. B. Weaver, Rev. C. A. Jacobs. We continually claim the promise in Joshua 17:18: "But the mountain shall be thine; for it is a wood, and thou shalt cut it down; and the out-goings of it shall be thine; for thou shalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots and though they be strong."

Your sister in Christ,
Lela G. McConnell.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the Blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS.

By The Editor.

HERE is nothing more clearly taught in the Holy Scriptures than that God wills our sanctification. There is a positive statement in the Bible that, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

* * * *

What God commands in his law he provides for in his gospel. There are no requirements made on Mt. Sinai that are not provided for on Mt. Calvary. Always, and everywhere, God is seeking the welfare and happiness of human beings.

* * * *

Sin is the great demoralizer. It breaks into, breaks up, and interferes with peace and happiness. Sin separates the human soul from peace and harmony with God. The Annunciation Angel said, "Thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins." The great mission of Christ in the world was to separate men from that which had separated them from God, in order to their restoration to fellowship and co-operation with God in the salvation, uplift and happiness of the human race.

* * * *

The burden of truth in Old Testament and New is to reveal sin, its nature, its fruitage, the wreck and ruin it has wrought among men, and its final and awful consequences—Hell! The Bible not only gives us this revelation of sin, but it reveals Jesus Christ as a Saviour from sin. Jesus, we are taught in Old Testament and New, is mighty to save to the uttermost. His power to save from sin, the love of it, the desire for it, the committing of it, and the stain and ruin that come from it, cannot be exhausted. He can make the vilest clean. Those deepest dyed with its black stain can be made whiter than the snow. What a redemption!

* * * *

That the carnal nature remains in the regenerated is not only clearly taught in the Scriptures, but it is the experience of the regenerated. Those who have gone through heart-breaking repentance and the regenerating power of the Spirit, know full well that there are yet carnal desires and uprisings which interfere with spiritual development. St. Paul expresses this most lucidly in the third chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal." The Apostle goes on to tell them of the manifestation of their carnality.

* * * *

We see here that these Corinthian Christians had been born again, born of the Spirit. They were "babes in Christ." They could not be babes in Christ without being born again. But the Apostle complains that they remained in a state of babyhood; that "they are yet carnal," and because of this carnality there is strife and confusion among them. It is not worth while to try to evade the scriptural teaching of carnality in the regenerated. This is not only taught in the Word of God, as we have said, but it is the painful experience of the children of God. It is because of this fact that we all need another gracious work of grace, a personal baptism with the Holy Ghost, a fiery purging away of indwelling sin, a crucifixion of our "old man."

* * * *

Regeneration is a birth into a new life. Sanctification is a death; the crucifixion of an old life. Regeneration brings in a new life we have not had before. Sanctification takes out an old life we have had from birth. These gracious works of the Holy Ghost are very distinct. They are both in the program of our preparation for the best life here and our final entrance into heaven. There is no holiness apart from the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. This cleansing is received by faith. It cannot be received by the impenitent, unregenerated. It can be received by the regenerated who consecrate, who hunger and thirst after righteousness and who, by faith, lay hold upon Jesus Christ, the only and all-sufficient Saviour, who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all we can ask or think.

* * * *

Some will read these paragraphs who are longing for full salvation. Why not receive it now? Make the consecration, yield yourself fully to the will of God, trust in Jesus and in him alone, believe with all your heart that his precious blood can cleanse you from all sin; believe that it does, now, sanctify you wholly, and hold to this, refuse to relax your faith. Let your spirit cry out in the language of Jacob, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." Hold on in prayer until you have the assurance beyond question or doubt. "Tis done, the great transaction's done."

A PREACHER'S MISTAKE.

*****

EVEN a preacher may sometimes be mistaken. I have made some mistakes myself. I see from a clipping sent to me that a Methodist preacher somewhere in Michigan, in his sermon on "Why People do not more Generally Attend Church," in which he no doubt gives some real reasons why church attendance is not more general, says that one cause of dwindling church attendance arises out of "sermonizing on hell fire and damnation."

This brother is mistaken; there is almost no preaching on that subject. The subject of future punishment has largely disappeared from our Methodist pulpits, and if the subject were properly discussed it would increase, rather than decrease, church attendance. People have some sense and almost every one has a conscience, an inward voice that has something to say to its possessor.

I challenge this Methodist pastor to announce that on some Sunday morning or evening, he would preach a sermon on "What Jesus Christ taught with reference to the future state of the wicked." Such announcement would attract attention, increase his congregation and, if properly discussed in the spirit of the gospel, it will give little or no offense, but it will make people think, and they will talk the matter over. The sermon, if properly preached, will not be forgotten, but is almost sure to bear fruit.

Most people believe there is a future state; that the soul of man is immortal; even those in heathen darkness, believe that in that future state we must meet either rewards or punishment for good or bad conduct in this life. In heathen lands you will find temples, sacrifices, penance and prayers all looking to an effort to escape punishment and receive blessing in that future state of the soul's existence after the dissolution of the body.

After all, people have sense; most of them a good degree of intelligence, and quite capable of serious thought and intelligent reasoning. I have found this so among people who had very limited education. I have found it true among young people who, by some, were thought to be giddy, frivolous and almost incapable of serious thought. This is a mistake. With proper approach they will hear you thoughtfully and think with you seriously on almost any important question.

People are quite ready to listen to an intelligent man discuss any one of the many problems of human life, here and hereafter. They will hear you on the importance of properly balanced foods for good health, of the best methods of education and intellectual development. They will listen to you thoughtfully in a discussion of social questions, moral standards and high ideals. There is no reason why they should not give intelligent attention to a discussion of the future state of the soul, and the danger of a life of selfishness and sin, not only as it affects one here, but as it may be logically supposed to affect one hereafter.

I am of the opinion that one of the needs of our time is earnest preaching on the future state of the impenitent wicked. There need be no storming or ranting, or shaking of fists or stamping of feet; any preacher of even moderate education and good common sense ought to be able to logically, clearly, kindly, though earnestly, present to a congregation the plain teachings of the Scriptures on this subject. He should be careful not to arouse resentment, but to produce serious reflection that will awaken uneasiness, conviction for sin, and lead to repentance not to be repented of.

I am firmly of the opinion—and these opinions rest upon reasonable basis—that if every Methodist preacher, yea, every Protestant preacher in these United States would preach a series of four sermons on the teachings of Christ with reference to the future state of the wicked, it would produce pro-

THE GREAT REDEMPTION IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

I.

It has been my privilege to preach the great Redemption around the world. I found in Japan, China, India, and Egypt that this is the gospel that satisfies the cravings of the human soul and saves, sanctifies, and transforms lives. In South America it is the same story. I am hearing preachers and people saying, "This is the message we want." Pardon me, I am not saying that it is a new message in South America. No! No! Holy men and women from the days of William Taylor have preached and taught this great truth, but it would have been preached more, and would have had greater results, if Modernism had not invaded this field. The two things in this country evangelical Christianity has to contend with—yes three—are Romanism, Atheism and Modernism. I have heard converts from Rome say that they would prefer to bring their children up in the Roman Church than have them under modernistic preachers and teachers.

II.

These are busy days with full programs in many parts of Chili. I am spending two weeks in special itineraries arranged by Bro. Wagner, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. Most of the meetings are union meetings with Baptists, Methodists, Alliance and Episcopalians.

Last Sunday was a special day, truly. I preached at 10 A. M., for the Alliance on "Pentecost as a Personal Experience." Then at 11:15, I was at the Episcopal Church (English) where Canon Wilson, a thoroughly evangelical Anglican, opened his pulpit to me, and I preached on "Do we need another Pentecost?" At 3:30 I was at the Anglican School where, after a cup of tea, a number of teachers and others got interested in the "Second Coming." At 5:30 I was again at the Episcopal Church where I preached on Conversion. At 8:00 P. M. I preached at the Alliance Church, which was crowded to the limit. At this service we had to dismiss the congregation so as to deal with seekers; about 100 stayed for prayer and the altar was crowded, without any invitation, with people seeking converting grace and sanctifying power. It was 10:30 before that meeting finished.

III.

My itinerary during the last of May and first part of June included Concepcion, Temuco, Osorno, Victoria, Traiguén, Lantaro, Valdivia, and Puerto Montt. This last named place is the farthest south railroad point in the world; one is travelling in the direction of the South Pole. Looking at the Map, we are farther South than Cape Town, South Africa. It is winter now in Chili but there is not much frost and no snow, except in the mountains. The nights are cold but the days are warm when the sun comes out. The Chilian homes do not provide much heating in winter, and many of the churches have no heat, yet people come and think nothing of two and three hour services. Last night we had a meeting of nearly three hours, as the altar service was prolonged because so many were seeking. After that, the pastor assembled a group of young people in a class-room and asked me to give them a parting message. I talked to them on Consecration and the Baptism of the Spirit for service.

IV.

I believe it was Pascal who said: "The Gospel is to establish two purposes:

- "(1) The Corruption of Nature.
- "(2) The Redemption of Jesus Christ."

Emerson said a good thing that, "Religions are obsolete when reforms do not proceed from them." The religion of Jesus Christ regenerates and reforms, but the most effective reforms are those which spring from regeneration. I remember in my early ministry that in the course of a revival meeting Pat, the drunkard of the town, came one night to the meeting, went forward to the altar, repented and got religion; next night he was the first to testify. The Lord had saved him. A miracle took place in that drunkard's life. The Lord not only saved him from his sins, but took away the love of drink and tobacco. Pat became an out-and-out Christian and lived and died triumphantly. A certain Spanish-speaking evangelist, whom I met in some meetings, is doing a great work for God in Central America. He has a great testimony because the Lord saved him from drink, gambling, lying, stealing, and other crimes. He heard the message of salvation while in prison, became wondrously redeemed and now gives his whole time to the work of the Lord and is mightily used of God wherever he goes. He has seen hundreds of souls come to Christ. With both those cases it was regeneration which made reformation possible, effective and enduring.

V.

The Southern Baptists have some fine evangelical work in South America. Wherever you find them you will find people who are true to the Bible and to evangelism. At Temuco, Chili, they have a very progressive work. They have a good sized church, and a school of 300. In their school work they have a strong religious program. They do not carry on schools for educational purposes, solely, but as a means of spreading the gospel and bringing the young people to Christ. When students come to them it is with the distinct understanding that they must attend church and Sunday school, the chapel services and take the Bible work each day; and constantly, the missionary teachers keep in mind the salvation of souls. I addressed two of their chapel services and preached twice at the church; the spirit and atmosphere were pronouncedly evangelical.

It is a decided contrast to some missionary schools I have visited where the religious program was next to nil, because those in charge had no evangelistic passion. I remember one of the schools on Sunday morning had a brief Sunday school and then the boys were turned loose and some of them spent most of the day playing ball; evidently no pressure having been brought upon them by the missionaries to get them to the church services. This was a decided contrast to the Episcopal Church school where it is required that the whole body of students (Catholics included) must attend the church services. I have seen mission church schools supported by missionary money where those in charge carried out the merest minimum of religious program, their excuse being that they had so many Catholics in their student body that they had to be careful. The question would naturally arise, why run mission schools if the objective is not the salvation of souls? Of course, when the Mission Board sends people to teach in these schools who have been trained in modernistic schools, and who have gotten spoiled by modernism for real evangelical work, the religious work will be positively nil and nothing will be done for the Kingdom of God.

VI.

It is a matter of great importance that our Bible Training Schools be kept on fire. It is so easy for students to get so interested in books and subjects as to dry up in their souls. We had a very gracious time of revival and anointing at the Alliance Bible Training School at Temuco. Those in charge felt the boys needed a revival, so they called off examinations and lightened the studies so that they could attend all the meetings. I preached on "The Burning Bush" to set forth the necessity of every one having a burning-bush experience in their souls. The Lord attended with power and a wonderful time of prayer followed, resulting in the students getting a great awakening and some of them getting the fire in their souls. This was the beginning of a blessed work in the school. The boys began to meet at 6 A. M., and prayed through to victory. One of them went out over Sunday into one of the country churches and had thirty people seek the Lord. This was a new victorious experience for him. After the fire fell on that student body it was a delight to see them surround seekers at the altar, and pray them through. It reminded me of scenes I have witnessed at Asbury College in revival seasons.

VII.

In some of the Chilian cities they have, what they call, fire walls all over the place. They are high, concrete affairs designed to prevent fires from spreading from one house to another. In some instances this law entails a hardship in the matter of expense, as the last purchaser has to build the wall at his expense. The Evangelical Church at one town had to spend nearly a thousand dollars in that fire wall. As I looked at those fire walls I thought of many I had seen in the religious realm. I have known churches with walls of formalism and worldliness so high that it was impossible for any spiritual fire to reach them. I have known preachers with walls of modernism and intellectualism so high that no matter how much the holy fire burned near them it never affected them. I have known people with fire walls of prejudice to holiness so high that the blessing and the power never touched them. I have held meetings in some churches where the preacher raised such a fire wall that no matter how hot the meeting got, or how many got blessed, the fire never touched him.

VIII.

In my Chilian itinerary some of our meetings take us into a place for only two nights. We arrive in time for night service, then we hold a holiness meeting in afternoon and evangelistic meeting at night. Not much time to develop interest, so we have to begin arousements the first night. We are preaching a great deal in the Acts of the Apostles. We are working a great deal on the idea of setting some one or a few on fire in every place. One meeting resulted in the preacher starting a week of prayer, and there is a meeting every week to pray for Pentecost. God's word is a fire, a sword, a mirror, a hammer, and is dynamite. No one knows who, in a meeting, is getting a message that will change a life, that will start new fire burning, that will revolutionize a career. Spurgeon was converted on a snowy Sunday in a small out-of-the-way church as the humble preacher preached on "Look and Live!" Bishop Joyce, when a country lad, went out coon hunting with a group of others, got lost from them and came out where a United Brethren country church was holding a revival meeting. Young Joyce heard from the lips of an unknown preacher a message that led him to give his heart to God. Two young men heard Dr. Morrison in the closing sermon of an Illinois camp meeting; that night the career of one of them was changed from education to missions, and he became one of the outstanding missionaries of China. Gandhi, of India, attended the Wesleyan Church in South Africa when his heart was greatly influenced by Christianity; he ceased going because the meetings were so dull and uninteresting. I wish that preacher had experienced a burning heart; he might have won Gandhi for Christ. I wonder what would have happened to India if Gandhi had been converted when in South Africa!

BOOZE--FOUL AND OUT.

James I. Seder, Editor West Virginia Issue.

Rev. William A. (Billy) Sunday, Ball Player Evangelist, Tours Country for Prohibition Observance and Enforcement with Anti-Saloon League of America.

EV. William A. (Billy) Sunday, D. D., from everywhere, famous baseball player evangelist, spoke July 15, at Baptist Temple, Rev. C. W. Kemper, D. D., pastor, Charleston, W. Va., on the above subject. When in the middle of the week, Wednesday, 2 P. M., in July heat, around 1,000 people greet a DRY speaker, it proves that his drawing power has not waned. But, then, there is only one "Billy" Sunday in America.

From 1883 to 1890 Mr. Sunday played baseball in Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia teams in the National League; converted in Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago; entered evangelistic work in 1891; ordained as a Presbyterian preacher in 1903; attended Northwestern University; received his degree of D.D. in 1912; 1000 to 5000 per month converted under his preaching from 1904 to 1907; since then continuously engaged in evangelistic services throughout the United States.

"BILLY" BATS BOOZE.

He hits hard and fast. They are real knockouts, too. He starred and made brilliant home runs. Drys know how he plays to their joy. Wets also know it, but to their sorrow. The Anti-Saloon League of America knows how wets fear his dry bat. So they engaged him for a few major contests with the wets, the brewery-backed Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, wet Crusaders (say Boozaiders) and their supporters in this wet-dry World Series. He threw off his coat and never let a wet get to first base.

It was hot, around 100, but Mr. Sunday made it much hotter yet for the liquor makers, venders, drinkers and defenders. He stood them all up in the same row, shot his fact-balls at them with tremendous force. It hit them all. They groaned, growled and went down—or remained outside the Temple.

COLONEL FRANK EBBERT

of Los Angeles, accompanied Mr. Sunday and spoke first. He is a Christian lawyer who has spoken in every state in the Union, in behalf of prohibition. He spoke in a quiet, earnest, forceful manner, saying in substance:

"Never were the wets so well equipped for their world-wide fight as now; the best organization they ever had; ample money; wet Crusaders must each pay one dollar annual dues, with leaders donating their thousands; wet papers and magazines carry their propaganda; they are marshalling their arguments, fallacious as they are, and their forces as never before. Of the 1,500,000 young people who become voters every year in this country, 6,000,000 between two presidential elections, wets seek to win all they can by means fair or foul. Drys must get the truth to these young voters if prohibition is to remain and be enforced.

"Prohibition is absolutely justified by its results," said Col. Ebbert as he recounted some of its many accomplishments. "It forever eliminated the saloon. It took the 18th Amendment to drive out that great curse. And depend upon it, that if the 18th Amendment goes, the saloon returns. With the saloon went the street drunks. And these would also return with the return of the saloon. We want no more of them. It would take our boys to make up these ruined crowds.

WETS SLANDER AMERICAN YOUTH.

"There is comparatively little drinking among our youth. They are too smart to drink. They have learned that beverage alcohol is injurious. They never saw an open saloon. But they heard and read about this upas tree. Of course there is some drinking, but less than formerly. Sifted testimonies all agree on this point. Youth early learns that 'the last man hired and the first man fired, is the man who drinks.' Our youth are looking forward, not backward; 30,000,000 boys and girls are in our schools. Prohibition put thousands of them there. We can, must and will teach them the evils of beverage alcohol, the great value of prohibition, its observance and enforcement. If we properly educate our youth, wets cannot take prohibition from us. It is a mystery, with such weighty issues at stake, how any intelligent, loyal citizen can keep out of the fight for the welfare of our boys and girls. Thirty thousand ex-bartenders have for ten years been paying fifty cents per month to help make this country wet again. This adds to the seriousness of the situation, and emphasizes the importance of every dry, self and pelf, being on the firing line today."

AMERICA THE GREATEST NATION.

Dr. Sunday then cleared the base and firmly gripped the dry bat, while about a thousand and people, heated galleries and all, leaned forward eager to hear and see—for sometimes his unreportable histrionic actions

"IT CAN'T BE ENFORCED"

James I. Seder, A. M.

(With acknowledgements to Edgar A. Guest)

Doubting ones said that it couldn't be done,
But the judge with a chuckle replied:
That "maybe it couldn't," but he would be one
Who wouldn't give up till he'd tried.
With a firmly set jaw, and a grip on the law,
Stern his face; if he worried he hid it.
He looked like a king, as he tackled the thing,
That couldn't be done—and he did it.

Yes, some lawless ones scoffed: "Oh, you'll never do that—
No officer ever has done it";
But he made out the warrant, 'ere he took off his hat,
And the Sheriff was off, he'd begun it;
With his hand on the law, firmly setting his jaw,

That place, of the lawless he'd rid it.
He stood like a king, as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—well, he did it.
All the 'scofflaws' will tell you it cannot be done;

"The 'dry' law?—you cannot enforce it."
They're slackers and cowards ev'ry one,
They hate it, hence do not endorse it.
But you just set firmly your jaw, true man of the law,
First make up your mind, then go to it;
Law's scepter you swing, as you tackle the thing

That "cannot be done"—and you'll do it.

spoke louder than his audible words. How he did hit the wet and besotted balls; arguments, and drive home dry balls, facts, figures, logic, arguments! The score was easily 100 dry to 0 wet. He said:

"Ours is the greatest nation of all history. Let us be known as the wisest and best nation of all times, not as the richest nation. National righteousness is worth infinitely more than national coffers filled with silver and gold. Righteousness exalteth a nation. We hear much of financial depression; little of moral and spiritual depression. Yet that is where so much of our national and world trouble lies.

"The saloon is as dead as an Egyptian mummy. It is too dead to skin. Its ghost hangs like a moral paralysis. And prohibition did not cause the depression. The depression is world-wide. Look at Germany and England. They have saloons. We in the United States have less depression than any other nation, and it's because we have prohibition. While prohibition is a success and will continue to be one, the 18th Amendment is still in the danger zone. It will take ten more years to found it securely.

INTERNATIONAL CONSPIRACY.

"The wets are attempting to rivet and bind the breweries, distilleries and saloons around the neck of the American people. There is a four-fold conspiracy entered into by the brewery and distillery interests in the United States, the wine and beer interests in Europe, especially France, the anti-Christ intellectuals and a dozen multi-millionaires who furnish most of the money. They are trying to create a liquor-minded public through an owned, borrowed and hired newspaper and magazine press, one-half of which they have today. They are as much of a menace to law enforcement as gangsters.

"So mighty is this foe, so skilled in crooked politics, so unhampered by conscience, so entrenched in other nations, so highly financed, so favored with publicity, so immune to pity for humanity, so strong for its repeal, so in harmony with thieves, thugs, harlots, the underworld and crooks, so hostile to the Kingdom of Christ, that there is nothing left to do but to fight or be crushed. I pray God that the historians will never record the downfall of the mightiest nation the world ever saw.

"Repeal of prohibition is not the remedy. The ills you would fly to by repeal would be 18,000,000 times worse. Can the venom of a rattlesnake nourish a baby? Can lightning clothe a tree with beautiful foliage? Can fire put softer bloom on a rose? Will the return of the saloon produce happiness, peace and virtue? Don't be deceived by these false arguments. The return of saloons would mean the overthrow of civilization.

AMERICA WILL REMAIN DRY.

"The heart of America is dry. A few metropolitan stomachs are wet in states like New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Philadelphia—Pennsylvania as a state is dry. The farther west you go the drier it gets. And prohibition is not a partisan question. Thousands of Democrats are as dry as Republicans. They did not want wet Al Smith as their presidential candidate in 1928, do not want him now. I did not oppose Smith because he was a Democrat, nor because he is Catholic. He has as good a right to be a Democrat as I to be a rock-ribbed, dyed-in-the-wool dry Republican. He has as good a right to be a Catholic as I to be a Protestant. I opposed him because he is WET! And I, with millions of other voters, would have opposed Mr. Hoover, or any other candidate had he been wet. But Hoover is dry, Smith wet, and that settles it. No man can roll into the White House on a wine and beer keg platform, be his name Smith, Roosevelt, Butler or what not. And mark this: 198,000 votes properly distributed would have prevented wet Smith from carrying a single state.

"Wets harp on the alleged evils of prohibition for which it is not at all to blame, any more than the Ten Commandments are for their violation. Wet violations and lawlessness are to blame, nothing else. The wets do the bootlegging and drinking. It takes two to bootleg—the seller and the buyer. Both are crooks and lawbreakers. And the citizen who breaks the law with the bootlegger at the rear door, has no just complaint if the holdup lawbreaker comes in at the front door and shouts 'stick 'em up.'

"Mr. Smith says he is opposed to saloons. But if they make liquor they have to sell it somehow, some place, and call that place something, give the child a name. What? Will they call it a WHISKEY PARLOR? Well, wets can't budge West Virginia. I toured this state. It went dry by 92,342, is rock-ribbed and riveted down.

WHY ATTACK EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

"Brewers pick on the 18th Amendment because of the expected money in it for them.

WOULD THEY CRUCIFY JESUS TODAY?

Rev. A. D. Houghlin.

Text: "Bearing his cross he went forth into a place . . . called Golgotha: where they crucified him." John 19:17, 18.

WITHOUT repeating the story of the crucifixion, let us ask ourselves the question, Why was Jesus crucified? Sin crucified him! Another might say prejudice or misunderstanding crucified him.

Yes, all this, and more. The failure of the depraved mind to grasp the greatness of Jesus Christ led to a depreciation of higher spiritual values, resulting in rejection, persecution and crucifixion of the only begotten Son of God.

The zealous Pharisees observed the law and claimed the fatherhood of Abraham, yet they needed a new gospel, the gospel of repentance for personal sin and faith in a crucified Saviour. Jesus' philosophy of life forever canceled the teaching of "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." He introduced a new dispensation, an era of grace and of the Holy Spirit. "The letter killeth but the Spirit giveth life." Did they believe in righteousness? Yes, a kind according to the law, which they went about to establish, but Jesus revealed to their unwilling minds that the letter without the Spirit is dead! He came to fulfill the letter, to clothe the skeleton with flesh and blood, breathing into the new incarnation the Spirit of life, destroying the old and shewing forth the glory of God through a new channel; God reflected in the face of Jesus Christ and every man reincarnated with the same Spirit.

For defying the religious ceremonialism of his day, for censoring the spirit of the letter, "an eye for an eye," and instituting the spirit of life and righteousness, for condemning the works of the flesh, so that he himself became the "end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth;" for all this Jesus was rejected, derided, spat upon, persecuted and crucified! For speaking the truth and doing acts of mercy and love he is called a malefactor! For being rich and becoming poor, for laying down his life for others in loving service, for this, he is misunderstood, misjudged, misquoted, and sentenced to suffering and death upon a cruel cross! And is it to be supposed that if Truth, the gospel of salvation, is proclaimed today with the same authority as it fell from the lips of Christ, that it shall fail to become a target of modern sin and unbelief? Nay, the poet experienced what he knew and knew what he experienced when he wrote:

"Truth, forever on the scaffold; Wrong, forever on the throne."

They who follow faithfully in the steps of Jesus willing to bear their cross also, shall have to endure hardness as good soldiers and be rejected by men, persecuted and made to suffer for declaring the gospel of conviction and their convictions of the gospel. Cowardice, enmity, selfishness, harshness and ridicule are just as much opposed to the gospel of death to sin, as they ever were, just as wide awake to thrust their darts at the up-right in heart. "The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth." The Devil is still the same Devil that deceived mother Eve, cast Daniel into the lion's den, laid burdens upon the children of Israel, cast Joseph and Jeremiah into the pit and nailed Christ to the cross. It is the road that every faithful follower of Christ must follow if he expects to receive the "crown of life that fadeth not away."

Has time changed the nature of sin? Will those who preach the doctrine of repentance from sin, faith in Christ and the indwelling Holy Spirit, whom Jesus sent into the world to convict of sin, and righteousness and judgment to come, find their path strewn with roses? No, positively no! The faithful minister will have to be "instant in season, out of season, rebuke, reprove, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine," a generation of people "having itching ears," who, unwilling to hear the truth, heap to themselves teachers that please their fancy rather than edify, that love the glory of this world more than the approval of God; whose end is shame; who being afraid to "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints" sell their gospel heritage for a mess of pottage. God deliver us from the Jonahs and Baalams and give us more Daniels and Jeremiahs!

It is easy for some church officials and a sin-loving public to cry loudly for a sin-soothing, flesh-pleasing refrain that denies teeth to the gospel and makes it a sham instead of a lightning-bolt. They want a gospel that is diluted and dulcified, a message minus the gospel and power, minus the lightning revealing their inner darkness and sinful depravity and the thunderbolt dealing destruction to their pet sins. Too many pastors have church members who cry, "O for a fair and gentle wind!" Be careful, brother pastor, about disturbing these sinners "at ease in Zion!" No preacher ever pleased God and kept a good conscience by refusing to expose sin and cowardly playing a part to satisfy the whims of a sin-deluded crowd.

If there is anything that should characterize the Christian pulpit, it ought to be fidelity to Christ, the truth and the holiness of God at the risk of its own personal interests. God is not obligated to care for the minister who does not faithfully watch over his vineyard as a loyal husbandman. He who risks his well-being to a superintending providence, God will commend the powers of a glory world to protect and preserve. "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous but the way of the ungodly shall perish." A minister should have the fidelity to say to transgressing Adam, "Where art thou?" To jealous-hearted Cain, "Where is thy brother, Abel?" To the adulterous David, "Thou art the man!" He ought to cry aloud and spare not. He should say to sinful and covetous Achan, "My son, give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Israel; and make confession unto him; and tell me now what thou hast done; hide it not from me." There can never be revivals and salvation from sin without Zaccheus-like confession and restitution.

The faithful minister will reason of righteousness and temperance and judgment, and if he does he may be severely misjudged, misquoted, misunderstood and denounced as "nervous, excited" and beside himself. "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad" is the language expressing the sentiment of many who, unwilling to obey the truth, yet before a message of thundering gospel power and conviction, have been heard to cry out, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian!" "What must I do with Jesus who is called Christ?" is a question that can only be answered with a "yes" or a "no." Rejection soon turns to a wall!

"Sad, sad the bitter wail—

Almost is but to be lost!"

Suppose "truth is forever on the scaffold, and wrong, forever on the throne," will that statement bear investigation? A little thought will help us to see that while that may be true a part of the time, it is not true all the time. Truth will always triumph but not without it goes through the fires of persecution. Right will win. A Christ on the Cross Good Friday is a glorified Lord Easter morning, and the ascended, triumphant King on his Father's throne soon afterward. He who bears his cross may sometimes be "down" here, however, he will be "up" up there. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that heareth the words of the prophecy of the word of God. He that overcometh, I will grant to sit with me on my throne; the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the Book of Life, but I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels."

And they crucified him! And God glorified him!

"O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to hide from Thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be."

I wonder how many Christians ever really take the burden of man's sin upon their prayers, and thus at least watch and brood, even if they can do no more. I wonder how often we read the newspaper reports of police and other cases with morbid interest, but with hardly a stir of atoning desire, hardly a thought of the divine heart of suffering within the shadows.—Herbert H. ## Again Dr. Fosdick Blasphemes.

REV. EDWARD R. KELLEY.

SOME years ago—not very many—I sat in a certain gathering of ministers when one of the leading ministers of my own denomination made the following statement, which was encored to the limit: “Harry Emerson Fosdick, in spite of all that is said about him, is the leading mind of the American pulpit today.” I did not encore the statement, for the simple reason that I did not believe it to be true, nor do I believe it to be so today.

Just a short while ago this minister, whom the brother so magnanimously lauded, preached a sermon from his pulpit in the Riverside Church, New York, on the subject: “The Peril of Worshipping Jesus.” When one comes down to actualities, there is nothing new in Dr. Fosdick’s utterances. His objections to the deity of Jesus Christ came centuries ago before the council of Nice, 325 A. D., and they were fully and forever answered. The Nicene Creed records the outcome of that council and its debate, but, for some reason, Dr. Fosdick is not satisfied with its findings. He says: “It is an amazing thing that the historic church has so unanimously worshipped Jesus, and has so seldom stopped to ask what Jesus himself would think of it.”

As a matter of fact the church did stop for that very reason at the time above mentioned. These delegates came up from the catacombs; something more than 300 of them, and many of them showing the marks of dire persecution which they had endured (and enjoyed) for their belief in Jesus Christ as the Son of God.

I am wondering whether Dr. Fosdick has himself “stopped” to consider what all this meant. The fact is: the Jesus of Harry Emerson Fosdick is a creation of his own fertile brain, and is not the Jesus of the four gospels, nor of Paul’s epistles.

In the sermon referred to Dr. Fosdick states that “Jesus did not desire to be worshipped, that he never sought it, and that as a matter of fact he feared it.”

How any man of intelligence, claiming to be a student of the Bible, can take such a position is beyond the comprehension of the writer. I am wondering what Dr. Fosdick makes of the story of the man who was born blind, and to whom the Master gave sight. Jesus, when he had heard that the man had been cast out of the synagogue sought him out and when he had found him the following conversation took place: “Dost thou believe on the Son of God?” “Who is he, Lord, that I might believe?” “Thou hast seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee.” “Lord, I believe.” And the record states that “he worshipped him.” And if he disliked the worship, nothing is said about it.

It is a noteworthy fact that this is one of the few occasions on which Jesus called himself the Son of God. What will the learned (?) doctor say as to this incident? I am wondering if he, with a graceful wave of his immaculate hand, will dismiss the incident as unauthentic because of the miraculous element to be found therein; for we must not forget that Dr. Fosdick does not believe in the miraculous. Why take the time to refer to the incident of Thomas when Jesus appeared to him after his resurrection, and other incidents?

One of the peculiarly strange things about this minister is the way he has of interpreting texts of scripture, for, as we all ought to know, Dr. Fosdick has a way of using the Scripture when it suits his purpose, as well as having a way of throwing it aside when he fears it will do his position damage. One of these peculiar interpretations can be found in his comment on Luke 11:27, where the woman in the multitude cried out: “Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.” In commenting upon this passage Dr. Fosdick says: “Jesus came back at her like thunder, saying, ‘Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.’ It is as though you could hear him saying to himself, ‘See, they are beginning to worship me; they are evading what I am driving at by adoring emotions about me; they will get rid of me yet, as they have gotten rid of the prophets, by idolizing me.’”

Bosh! What folly! What blasphemy! To think of Jesus Christ “thundering” at anybody! And, pray, what prophet was ever idolized by backslidden Israel? Dr. Fosdick’s comment reminds the writer of the comment of a certain superintendent in another conference whom he heard say: “Jesus was a man among men, and he literally knocked men right and left when they tried to throw him over the brow of the hill, and escaped from their midst.” Now, what Jesus really said was: “Yea, that woman is blessed.” But he even went further than that. He further said: “There is a greater blessing for that woman and for any other woman, as to that matter; who will hear the Word of God and do (or keep) it.” Dr. may be a very ingenious preacher, but there is no ingenuity that can possibly cause the words of the Master to have the meaning he would attach to them.

Another of this man’s peculiar interpretations is to be found in his exposition of Matthew 19:16, 17. His comment upon this passage is very unique: “Or else will you explain his swift retort to the man who came bowing to him, saying, ‘Good Teacher’? Said Jesus, ‘Why callest thou me good? None is good save one, even God.’ One can fairly read his thoughts as he said to the man, ‘Beware of worshipful deference to me—I fear it. Come, stop this bowing and this ‘Good Master’: what about your attitude to the kind of living I am standing for, whose springs are in God?’”

A most marvellous interpretation? It would indeed be great, if it were only true. The Holy Spirit was evidently back of this narrative and the record as we have it. This young man was a ruler of the synagogue, and the incident is to be found in the Synoptic Gospels, thus showing the consideration the Spirit wished it to receive. But this man of wisdom pays no attention to this phase of the incident. He has a theory of his own to uphold, and “like a bird picking up a bright string on the lawn to weave into its nest,” he seizes upon it to support his contention.

But the rather funny thing is: the props are knocked from under the learned doctor. The fact is: Jesus did not “retort” on this young man. He rather gave him instruction. Mark, in a very positive manner, tells us that Jesus, when he looked upon the young man, “loved him.” I am wondering if Dr. Fosdick, under similar circumstances, would “retort” on one whom he loved. I hardly think he would do so.

At another point in his sermon Dr. Fosdick makes this statement: “Divinity is not something supernatural that ever and again invades the natural order with a crashing miracle.” But that is exactly what IT IS. If, by divinity Dr. Fosdick means, as we do, deity, then it is supernatural. It has to be. And ever and again it does invade “the natural order with a crashing miracle.” Oh! but I forgot! Dr. Fosdick does not accept the miraculous.

I do not mean to be irreverent, nor am I, when I ask that Jesus himself be called as a witness just at this point. His earthly ministry was about half done, when, turning to his disciples he said unto them: “Whom do men say that I am?” The reply came very quickly: “Some say that Thou art John the Baptist: same, Elijah; and others, Jeremiah, or one of the prophets.” That was as far—and is as far—as the natural man could go in his estimate of Jesus Christ. And this is exactly as far as Harry Emerson Fosdick does go in his estimate of Jesus Christ. To him Jesus is a great prophet, but not the Lord and Master of his life.

But Jesus did not stop with this answer. He went further. He said: “But whom say ye that I am?” And Simon Peter, without any hesitation whatever replied: “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.” The very fact that Peter makes this acknowledgment would not alone make the statement absolutely true, but note what follows. It is bolstered up by Jesus himself, and now we come to the fact of the “crashing miracle.” Here we actually have the “supernatural invading the natural”, for Jesus immediately tells Peter: “Blessed art thou, Simon of John: for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.” Exactly!

It is not in the spirit of arrogance that I say: The great fundamental need of Harry Emerson Fosdick is just at this point. He needs, and needs it badly, the “crashing miracle” of spiritual illumination; for it is impossible for the natural man to discern the things that are spiritual.

Is there a peril to be found in worshipping Jesus? Yes; if he be the Jesus created in the fertile brain of Dr. Fosdick. But what if he be the Jesus of the New Testament? How great will be our peril if we refuse to worship him! What if he be the Christ, the Son of the living God? Thank God; that is exactly what he is! And he is entitled to all the adoration, praise and worship we can possibly give unto him.

“Jesus! the name high over all,
In hell, or earth, or sky:
Angels and men before it fall,
And devils fear and fly.

“Happy, if with my latest breath
I may but gasp his name;
Preach him to all, and cry in death,
‘Behold, behold the Lamb!’”

A Last Minute Help.

If you are a Sunday school teacher and pressed for time, you will always find Arnold’s Commentary full of rich spiritual truths on the S. S. Lesson. You can’t afford to be without it at this closing-out price of 50 cents.

What coolness, what quietness, what a delicate wind from the hills of God steals over us when by the mystery of faith and prayer we draw to the soul of Jesus! What a rebuke to all that is evil within us! What a scattering of all unholy embers! How our backslidings are stayed and turned back again under that mild reproach! And how sure we become of God!—John A. Hutton.

We have handled several books on this subject, but this is quite the most convincing one. ## BOOZE—FOUL AND OUT.

Why do they not war on the 15th, or the 19th Amendment? They see no money in that for them. They talk 'States' Rights', each state to make its own liquor laws. We tried that. It was an absolute failure. Why go back to a failure? That was why we sought and got national prohibition. Nothing else would work here, nor anywhere in the world. States' Rights was fought out during four crimson years of the Civil War, and definitely and finally settled. When General Lee surrendered to General Grant at Appomattox in 1864, States' Rights also surrendered.

Up to the Civil War each state had its own money. The wets are headed in that direction now. Shall each state have its own postage stamp also? States' Rights is the same old saloon under a new name, that's all. The "Whiskey Rebellion" of 1794 was put down when General Washington sent 15,000 soldiers to Pennsylvania and told the whiskey rebels in plain language they must obey the law. They obeyed. Why not end our present liquor rebellion?

"America is not weak and helpless. That was demonstrated a few years ago when in a short time this nation mustered, trained and equipped six million men, transported two millions across the sea and decided the World War 3,000 miles away. Likewise we can and will enforce our laws. And I hope to live to see the day when America will be fully dry. The wets say the dry law cannot be enforced, therefore we should repeal it. Another sample of wet logic. Do we repeal a law because it is sometimes violated? The law against murder is violated daily almost everywhere. Shall we therefore repeal it? The holy Ten Commandments are broken around the world, and have been through the centuries. Shall they be repealed?

JUST ONE REMEDY.

"There are about five ways to deal with the rum evil: 1. Allow everybody to keep a mad dog; that's whiskey. 2. Have only a few mad dogs and tax them each year; that's license. 3. Chain up the mad dogs to the corners and raise the tax; that's high license. 4. Say we don't want mad dogs in our town; that's local option. 5. Cut off their tails behind their ears; that's prohibition. And there is not the slightest foundation for saying conditions are worse in high schools and colleges since the Eighteenth Amendment. Prohibition is now giving high school education to 3,000,000 boys and girls from homes that could not afford to send them before.

"Alcohol is not a necessary part in any physician's pharmacopoeia. Many great hospitals have not a drop. Let us show the crooks. Deport every unnaturalized law-breaker. Take citizenship papers from every foreigner who proves himself a criminal, and then on second offense deport him. Uncle Sam never passed a law that can't be enforced. Remember this bloodsucker of humanity called liquor takes you for a ride.

"Prohibition is right. It has proven itself expedient in every way. Its violations reflect upon the violator, not upon prohibition. Manufacturers do not want liquor back. Henry Ford says he will discontinue making automobiles if saloons return. Out of 35,000,000 automobiles in the world, 25,000,000 are owned in the United States. Before prohibition there was not a labor bank; today there are 32 with $250,000,000 capital.

"I hate liquor because God hates it."

Dr. Sunday stirred the city into saying: "Now, every Christian citizen for the game. Beat the bootleggers. Run out the rum-runners. Beat 'Home Brew' to the home plate. Absolutely silence every 'still.' Stand by the boys and girls. Stand by the HOME TEAM. Observe, enforce, teach, promote prohibition from the American home base around the world."

FOR PUBLICATION.

BY today's mail, May 27, 1931, I received an anonymously sent, quite interesting, marked, but belated copy of THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD, issue of Wednesday, February 4, 1931.

For the information of the writer of the article appearing on pages 8 and 9, on the topic: "Can we have the Old-time Religion and the Old-fashioned Revival?" I will say that I am a Methodist, born and bred, and come of Methodist stock for generations back. I am not some "stray that has jumped the fence and is feeding in Methodist pastures." And because I feel that I love the Old Book just as well as the writer of the article who seems to take issue with me, I am making extended reference to certain statements in his article.

The writer seems to object to my saying that: "The time element ought not to be an important element in the conversion of sinners." The writer also seems to object to my saying that: "Conversion ought to be the natural, normal, every day religious experience of the church services."

The writer also appears to object to my saying: "Getting religion is not necessarily nor desirably an abnormal, super-normal, hysterical, phenomenal, experience which has to be extended into days, or weeks, or months or even years."

The writer again appears to object to my saying that: "The old-fashioned Methodists often seemed to think that folks did not get saved except at revival time; that they sometimes seemed to think that God does not care to save little (very small) children; that a man must be deep in sin to be saved from sin."

The writer likewise objects to my saying that: "Folks had the idea that the Camp Meeting time was the only time to open the doors of the church, and then the doors were not opened the first week of the meeting. At other times, the preacher preached, they sang a hymn, and pronounced the benediction without ever making any sort of proposition to his congregation." The writer objects to my intimating that any of the dear old Methodist Fathers felt that: "Conversion was thought of as a supernatural experience preceded by a regular mental hell of torment and contrition and penitence; and such conversion was for the hardened sinner alone." The writer also objects to my saying: "I wonder if shouting is evidence of conversion, or at all necessary to conversion."

In reply to my observations on some of the methods used by our dear Methodist preachers and evangelists of the generations past and gone, the writer in THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD takes complete issue in most cases, denying (1) the facts and (2) the premises and (3) the conclusions. As a student of Methodist History I think it is true that:

(1) The appeal that used to be used was largely fear of hell, fear of torment, fear, fear, fear.

(2) The sermons used were prepared to appeal largely to "The hardened sinner."

(3) Very small children were not considered acceptable as members of the churches, though Methodists did receive them younger than certain other churches.

(4) People were impressed with the idea that they must come to the altar for days and days at the time, sometimes for weeks.

(5) Many folks did expect a great emotional outburst and marvelous mental exaltation, and they did think they had to "shout" if they got saved.

(6) Preachers and evangelists did preach a week, and they sometimes still preach a week, before giving an invitation for church membership, to those seeking Christ.

(7) Evangelists and preachers did depend on mass movements and saving folks in crowds rather than at a time in the regular services of the church. Methodists still do that way in the Memphis, The Tennessee, and The Holston Conferences.

(8) Evangelists and preachers (not all of them, thank God) do depend too much on mere handshaking, back-slapping, jazz-banding, loud, sob-storying, methods to arouse the emotions more than the wills of men.

My answer to such methods as these is that I feel that those who use them have not caught the spirit of the Master and of the disciples and the apostles. As evangelists and preachers we should do as the apostles did; namely, preach one sermon and expect conversions.

In Acts 2:41, Peter preached one sermon, opened the doors of the church, and received 3,000 converts.

In Acts 2:47, we read that: "The Lord added daily (not the preacher after a week of preaching) such as should be saved."

In Acts 4:44, we read what seems to indicate that the doors of the church were apparently opened every day in that the: "Number of men which heard the Word and believed was about 5,000."

In Acts 8:35, we read where the Spirit commanded Philip go out into a desert country to find one lone negro man, preach one sermon to him, open the doors of the church and receive him."

So far as I recall, the only conversion where the time element largely entered, was the conversion of Paul which required three days, because it took Paul three days to find a preacher to receive him into the church after the Lord converted him.

In Acts 16:32, I read where Paul preached one sermon to a scared jailer, and the jailer with his whole household was converted and baptized at night inside the house.

In Acts 19:5, I read where Paul preached one sermon to twelve men who were Baptists, but not Christians; so Paul baptized them the second time as Christians, in "the name of the Lord Jesus."

In fact, as I go through my Bible, I find that nearly everybody whose name is given as a convert to Christianity was converted by the first sermon he heard preached. And another strange thing, I do not find shouting connected with a single conversion. I often find rejoicing, or love, or joy, or peace, or faith—but, strange to say, never 'shouting' which some folks imagine is so necessary.

Now as for shouting, I have sometimes felt like it myself, and if a person is really in earnest and cares to shout, I have no objections to it. But unfortunately some of the folks who shout so much at the revival are exactly like the disciples who went down the Mount of Olives shouting the praises of Jesus. One day they shout and the next day cowardly desert Jesus.

The Bible gives a long roll of rejoicing Christians. There was Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, James, Peter, Andrew, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Nathanael, Paul, Lydia, Timothy, the woman at the well, and a host of other rejoicing, loving, gentle, good, kind, followers of the fearless Christ—not one of whom shouted when conversion occurred, strange to say.

Oh, the calm, quiet way of Jesus amazed men, and still amazes men. Jesus did not strive nor cry. Neither did any man hear him yelling in the streets. He led men out of the excitement, the dust, the din, the rush, and the clamor of life into quiet places, sat down on a mountain, or on the curb of a well, and "spoke as never man spoke." He did not rant, or tear the air, or break up church furniture, or play the circus clown, or employ jazz-bands to get men to attend his services. Oh, the quiet, the calm of the preaching of Jesus and his disciples, yet the marvelous power! They calmed men and women with their

----GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD----

NAN KUAN TAO, SHANTUNG, CHINA.

One day on reading from The Herald about Ras-kob and others trying so desperately to do away with the 18th Amendment, I thought if some one could point out to them what is said in Rom. 2:6-9, would they dare to continue fighting against the right? There was a wish in my heart that Dr. Morrison might write them a letter warning them to flee from the wrath to come, and that they might be constrained to read the solemn words so plainly stated, that, "God will render to every man according to his works."

Again this morning, this has been pressing upon my heart as I have thought and read about the terror of the Lord. What an inspiration to pray for every one that will seek the Lord while he may be found, and what a rebuke to them that will not turn to him.

Have been thinking, too, of Ex. 13:3, 9, 14, 16: "By strength of hand the Lord brought us forth." So today, it must be "by strength of hand the Lord will work wonders in behalf of his people, and the enemy he will bring low, even as it is written." Ex. 14:4, "I will be honored upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host." Then we read, "that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord." What an encouragement to know the hand that wrought wonders in the land of Egypt, is still outstretched against the enemy. The millionaires with all their wealth, what can they do when the God of heaven and earth shall say unto them, "Thus far and no farther. Here shall thy proud waves be stayed." And we know "those that walk in pride he is able to abase." Dan. 4:37.

Surely he will help us to pray and await his time for the revealing of his mighty power. So glad he is teaching us precious lessons while engaged in the warfare and we are learning more and more to use the weapons that are "not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? . . . He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision." . . . "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." Thank God, we are on the victory side. "Through God we shall do valiantly." Psa. 60:12.

The reading of The Herald is a continual feast. How shall I begin to speak of all that has been so helpful to me! My sister speaks in her letter of the Easter Number, and the April 8th, being so good, then speaks of how she was helped in reading "The Risen King." How glad we must be, and how thankful for every one who reads and appreciates this Herald of light. I praise him for his own love shed abroad in our hearts, and for "the faith that will not shrink, though pressed by every foe." "Abounding in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost."

Yours in Jesus,

ASBURY COLLEGE TRIO.

Dear Friends of The Herald Family:

Travelling over the burning plains of India on a hot summer day with the thermometer well over a hundred degrees is an experience not soon to be forgotten. Third-class coaches in India do not afford the luxuries of a first-class pullman at home. Round-the-world missionary trips are expensive, and lean pocketbooks demand economy, so we have no choice in the matter. We carry our own beds on these trains which consist of a twin mattress enfolded by a canvas covering, a sheet and blanket inside, the whole of which can very easily be wrapped into a bundle which is handy to carry and quickly unfolded when needed. The greatest difficulty is to find a place to spread our beds, for the trains are usually jammed to overflowing. No "Be quiet" signs are to be seen to hush the chattering natives who often carry on their endless conversation during the weary hours of the night, nor does a porter come along to switch off the light to give rest to weary eyes. The lights burn all night, perhaps to keep oncoming passengers from stepping on slumbering travellers who often are forced to stretch out on the floor because all seats have been taken.

We boarded a train one noon at Bombay for a twenty-six hour trip under circumstances described above, bound for Sat Tal, by the way of Delhi and Agra. After a tiresome journey we arrived in Delhi, the present capital of India. This ancient city has been destroyed seven times during the past centuries and each time it was rebuilt on a new site. We enjoyed visiting the splendid new government buildings with their unique architecture and attractive red limestone. The ancient ruins of past centuries afforded us much interest; the great Mohammedan Mosque said to be one of the largest in the world, where twenty-five thousand people gather for prayer every Friday, was a site well worth seeing.

The same night we took a train for Agra, the city of the famous Taj Mahal, whose entrancing beauty has charmed the thousands who have gazed in wonderment at this gem of architecture. This beautiful structure was built by Shah Jehan, ruler of India, as a tomb for his wife. It was begun in 1632 and was completed about 1650. Ever since coming to India we had heard on every side of the fame of this marvel created by the hands of genius and skill, and acclaimed by most critics as the finest building in the world, and naturally we were eager to see it. We wondered if we would be disappointed, but as we passed through the arch at the entrance building and caught our first glimpse of the Taj we felt more than repaid for our journey to Agra, and our expectatations were met in every way. We stood in awe as we beheld this work of art shining in all of its majesty under the noon-day sun which made the white marble glisten and shine as we stood beholding it at a distance of several hundred yards. We then advanced and entered, inspecting the pearl-white and the exquisite carved wreaths; saw the wonderful agates, bloodstone and jasper inlaid in alabaster. We unitedly agreed that this was indeed one of the wonders of the world. We viewed it again that evening, just as the moon was rising shedding its glow over the massive dome, while the shadows of night enfolded the light of the closing day. As we boarded our train a little later we went away not disappointed but happy that we had come.

Sat Tal, the home of Dr. Stanley Jones' Ashram, was to be our next stopping place. Ashram is an Indian word and means a place where a teacher meets with his friends. A little over a year ago Dr. Jones opened this Ashram for the summer months. Christian leaders, as well as some non-Christian leaders, are invited to come from various parts of India to this place of retreat located in northern India among the hills surrounded by several small lakes. Here those who come find a time of spiritual feasting, intellectual priming and physical upbuilding. Most all who stay at the Ashram live according to Indian customs, although this is not compulsory. Meals are served in native style, and even many of the westerners adopt the eastern dress while there.

Each morning at sunrise the group meets for prayer and meditation on the hillside, and every evening at sunset Dr. Jones speaks to the group as they gather down by the lakeshore. During the five days we were there he spoke on the subject of the Holy Spirit. These messages were searching, inspiring and were a great blessing to all those present. Our own hearts feasted upon the great truths he proclaimed and rejoiced because of the privilege which was ours.

During the hours of the day the group gathers in the assembly room and various leaders are asked to read papers or lead discussions on many important subjects. All present are given the opportunity to enter into the discussions, and make any contribution they desire on the subject being discussed. The mornings we were there the subject under discussion was "How to present Christ to the Mohammedans," and we received some very interesting information on the subject.

We had the privilege of singing at all of the evening meetings, and on Sunday morning Dr. Jones asked us to take charge of the worship service. God blessed us in our ministry of song and word.

Dr. Jones is doing a great work in India, and his deep spiritual life is a great inspiration to all who know him. Our days of fellowship with this man of God will not soon be forgotten.

Yours in His service,

ECHOES FROM THE O. M. S. CONVENTIONS.

E. O. Rice.

A great deal could be written relative to the scenery in Japan, Korea, and China,—the three Oriental countries that Mrs. Rice and I visited,—but, attractive as much of it is, we did not go to see the scenery. A great deal could also be written concerning the poverty of the people, which was in many very evident. Indeed, in some of the cities of China there are countless numbers of beggars, concerning whom many interesting stories might be related; but we shall speak of only one member of this great host—a beggar boy nine years of age. One of his arms was off at the elbow, and he held out the stub of his arm so that we could see it. While we were waiting for some other members of our party, we gave this poor beggar boy two American pennies, which were worth about twenty-eight coppers in Chinese money. Such a transformed face and attitude! He was all smiles. He opened the door of the car for us, and waited to say good bye as we were leaving. Never before, except at an altar of prayer, when some one has prayed his way out of darkness into light, have we seen such a change come over a human face so quickly. We could not help but feel the contrast in the source of joy in each case. If two pennies, representing such a transient benefit, could make a boy so happy, what would it have been if he had as readily accepted Jesus and his gracious promise of eternal welfare and unending joy?

Our real purpose in going to the Orient was to see our Bible Institutes and Conventions in actual operation, and this we were privileged to do. We were greatly impressed with the spirituality of all of our conventions. The following is a brief resume of a sermon by one of our own native preachers. His text was taken from Ephesians 4:30, "Ye are sealed." This text, he told us, had been strongly impressed upon his heart, and he could not get away from preaching on it: his heart was greatly burdened for a revival. He declared that if the people are to obtain new blessings and new thoughts, it will be as they believe God for them. With his seal upon us we shall have unshrinking faith and a passion for souls; but in order to have these we must be sure of one thing, the baptism of the Holy Spirit,—God's seal. If we are to do anything or be anything really worth while; if we are to go anywhere with profit to others, we must have this seal upon our hearts. When Paul wrote this epistle to the Ephesians, he knew what it meant to have the seal of the Spirit; and he could do nothing else but cry out to the Ephesian Church the all-importance of being sealed until the day of redemption. Let us search our hearts. Mere profession will not carry us through. Do we give evidence of the seal of the Spirit? Is it manifest in our lives? Oh, that the Spirit of God will so fill us and envelop us that as we move among the people not merely our words, but our lives shall bear evidence that we have the seal. With it upon us, there will be victory, guidance, freedom. When Philip was led of the Spirit he did not consult with the flesh; otherwise he would have stayed in Samaria, where he was having such success. The people wanted him to stay, but neither their desire nor his own wishes influenced his plans. He had the seal of the Spirit upon his ministry and he was prompt to obey God's leading. It does not matter to what church he leads you. If he leads, victory will be assured. Oh, brother and sister, are you at your extremity? Here is deliverance—Red Sea deliverance. Man's extremity is God's opportunity.

We were wonderfully impressed with the Spirit back of this sermon.

An interesting thing happened at one of our conventions. Thirty-one members from another holiness work attended, and they decided, while the convention was in progress, that they would band themselves together and fast and pray relative to three or four modernistic preachers who had crept into their conference. They prayed so earnestly and so successfully that later on when their conference met, they got rid of these modernistic preachers, and as a result a revival spirit has permeated their entire work. We thank God for the earnestness and zeal of our workers, which so stirred these thirty-one brethren that they would not continue to allow any modernistic preaching in their midst.

The prevailing spirit that permeates all the work of the Oriental Missionary Society, as we found out by attending these conventions, is summed up in three words: Passion for souls. Next to being filled with the Holy Spirit, the secret of the success of the Oriental Missionary Society's work is the passion for souls. The same burden and passion for the lost, which, thirty years ago stirred the hearts of the founders of the work still permeates the services of all our conventions, for which we praise God.

LAKE ARTHUR CAMP MEETING.

We rejoice that this camp is sweeping on to glorious victory. In spite of the depression and drouth we are having great crowds and the altar services are wonderful. Souls are being reclaimed, converted and sanctified. We have never in the six years we have been coming to this camp, seen such pungent conviction. They come to the altar in a hurry, repent and confess their sins and find the joy of sins forgiven. A pastor asked how it was that the seekers come so readily to the altar, but the reason is that when the truth is preached clearly and earnestly, the Lord honors it and pricks the people to their hearts, as of old. God delights to honor the evangelist who tarries for the power. Oh, that we workers would do as the old-timers did, pray by the hour and go after souls. If I were to preach so that no one was convicted of their sins, I would get out of the pulpit and seek the altar and be reclaimed from my backsliding. It does no good to exhort others to fast and pray when the evangelist is chasing around in an auto seeing the sights. Let's fast and pray until we get the power of the Holy Ghost upon us.

I have two open dates for camps in 1932. First call will get our services. We go next to Ellis Camp. God is with us. Yours for lost souls, gospel, and stilled their storms. Excited, weary, tired, sick and sinful souls came out to find rest in Christ.

W. J. Harney.

I regret that any misunderstanding should have arisen as to any methods used in the past by Methodists and evangelists. Maybe some evangelists are different, but I have yet to find one evangelist who opened the doors of the church at the first service. If you know some who do, please send me their names. I want to say that I have received something like a hundred persons per year for various churches, and I always give folks an opportunity to confess Christ at every service.

found thinking. I believe it would have a national effect for good, and awaken godly fear and reverence, put a check to wickedness and lead multitudes to repentance and saving faith in Christ. It is not improbable that some preachers are a bit, shall we say, cowardly, or afraid to present some serious and very important subjects to their people.

For fifty-three years I have had wide experience as a preacher from some of the greatest city churches to brush arbors in the backwoods, and have found it safe to trust the intelligence, sincerity, and general good will of the people toward a preacher. If you have a Bible theme they are willing to listen thoughtfully to its presentation, provided the people are convinced that the preacher is fairly well posted on his subject; in a word, if he knows what he is talking about, and that he is deeply concerned for their welfare, they will give him a patient, thoughtful and appreciative hearing.

The people know that life is of short duration, and very uncertain. The preacher is employed and supported to serve them as best he may in preparing them for that which is best for them in this world and that which is to come. Men who are well prepared for eternity are best prepared for time. The preacher of the gospel is under highest obligation to the people to warn them faithfully with reference to the future state of the wicked, and with this warning, to bring the good news that, in Christ Jesus, there is ample provision for the salvation of sinful men; that no one need be lost, but that it is the privilege of every one, here and now, to be saved from sin and its fearful consequences.

Dr. Jordan W. Carter, evangelist, of Wilmore, Ky., and Prof. C. P. Gossett, director of music, Lexington, Ky., will conclude a four months' evangelistic campaign in Aroostook County, northernmost county of the state of Maine, the last of September. If any of the brethren in the East, or anywhere, for that matter, would like their services, they will be glad to take the matter up with them. They will come as a "team" if so desired, or either of them will go where just preacher or singer is needed. Tabernacle, mission, any place, open for a full gospel, will be agreeable with them. Write or wire them at Fort Fairfield, Maine, stating whether you desire one or both.

THE WAR ON THE BIBLE.

It is not worth while for the devout, God-fearing people of this nation to try to hide from themselves the fact that there is a very general and determined war being made upon the Bible, as a Book divinely inspired. The atheists and infidels of this country have never been more active and systematic in their efforts to destroy the faith of the people in the Bible, and make it a book of contempt and scorn, and its inspiration, a subject for ridicule.

It should be remembered that the Bible is almost unknown in vast regions of the world. I am not now thinking especially of the heathen countries, but of the civilized nations which have been under the domination and rule of the Roman Catholic Church. The people, generally, have little idea of how few Bibles, and what small influence the Bible has in France, Italy, Spain, Austria, Portugal, Poland and, in fact, all countries that have been under the blighting domination of the Roman Catholic hierarchy.

The Bible has suffered greatly in Germany under the influence of the destructive critics, and while it has had wider reading and influence among the German people than in the countries above mentioned, it has no doubt met with some of its most dangerous enemies in Germany. In South America, Cuba, Mexico and Philippine Islands the Bible is practically a stranger, except as it has been introduced by missionaries against the wishes and opposition of Roman Catholic prelates.

The lands of the Bible, where it has had largest reading, where it has been translated into many languages and dialects, where a great Bible Society has distributed the Word of God among the peoples of the world, have been England and the United States. We are startled with the sad fact that, in these countries where it has been best known and yielded largest blessing, it is now meeting its most determined opposition. This opposition comes, not only from atheistic influences, but much of it from men in Protestant pulpits. Not a few of them seem to be set with positive purpose to destroy the faith of the people in the Bible as the Word of God. From many quarters where we should least expect such efforts, men are undertaking to dispense with all that is supernatural in the religion of the Bible, Old Testament and New.

The effect of these efforts is having a most deadening and destructive influence in the homes, the schools and the churches. There is the greatest need of a people united, zealous, aggressive, who will not only cry to God day and night for a revival, but who will give time, money and themselves in earnest effort to promote a revival of religion that will become a high tide of spiritual power rolling over this nation to rebuke and sweep away much of this tremendous deadening effect of infidelity and false teaching with reference to the divine inspiration of the Bible. One of the most startling features of the situation is the fact that many people who are supposed to be faithful and true to the Word of God, seem to be practically ignorant, or indifferent and inactive with regard to this crisis in the religious history of our country, in fact, of the world.—Shall we sit still!

Find in this Issue of The Herald.

You may find in this issue of THE HERALD an article under the caption, "For Publication," by Rev. C. H. Witt. I believe he is a pastor in the Memphis Conference. Some time ago this brother wrote an article for The Methodist Herald, which I thought was a very unfair and exaggerated description of the old-time revival in early Methodism. I criticised the article, to which Brother Witt replies.

I think our brother has extreme views on the subject. It hardly appears to me that it is necessary to get agitated with reference to the amount of shouting now going on in Methodist revivals. There is no doubt a large percent of the people now uniting with the Methodist Church, in fact, the various Protestant denominations, join the church without conviction for sin, without repentance, without conscious pardon and, certainly, without any joyful praise. I believe the need of the times is a genuine old-time revival of deep repentance, agonizing prayer and salvation so conscious and joyful that the on-lookers will be cut to their heart and cry out, "What shall we do to be saved?"

Ho for Asbury Theological Seminary.

We have already published in THE HERALD that we have secured a charter for Asbury Theological Seminary at Wilmore, Ky. It seems that we are going to have quite a good opening this fall. We are deeply interested in the theological training of wholly consecrated, sanctified young men who feel called to the ministry. Through the generosity of some friends we will be able to give quite a bit of assistance to worthy young men preparing for the ministry. School opens September 22nd. Young men desiring to attend the Seminary should write to Dean F. H. Larabee, Wilmore, Ky. Young men who desire to attend this institution and to receive what help we are able to render should write at once.

Faithfully yours,

H. C. MORRISON.

"The Promise is Unto You and Your Children."

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

In that wonderful second chapter of Acts, Peter is pouring out the message of full deliverance from sin, his heart aflame with the love that had come to him at Pentecost. Under his first sermon after the reception of the pentecostal power, there were 3,000 souls converted; on the following day 5,000 accepted Jesus as the world's Messiah and Redeemer.

The "promise" referred to in Peter's sermon was the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost. Peter was endeavoring to show them it was not only the privilege of the 120 to have this gift, but it was for all who would accept it, for their children, and to them "who were afar off, even as many as the Lord should call." That takes in every one. We of the twentieth century are eligible for this "promise of the Father," if we pay the price of an absolute and complete consecration of our all to God.

Recently I was reading the experience of Bishop Foster, one of the holy bishops of the M. E. Church, who sought and obtained this experience which made him such a power for righteousness in his day. It gives the route through which one needs pass on their way to this blessed experience of holiness of heart. As there are many who may be seeking for light on this subject, I am giving it, hoping it may be the light that shall guide them into this experience, the heritage of every child of God.

EXPERIENCE OF BISHOP FOSTER.

In the doctrines of holiness, as taught by our church, I had long been a professed believer. I am not certain that I was a clear believer. My faith was sufficiently strong to give me, at times, great uneasiness of mind, and cause me to make some effort for its attainment. These efforts, often were greatly blessed to me, but I always failed to obtain. This continued for a number of years. Eventually, when the work of holiness began to be more talked of, and more extensively professed from the fact that I had failed to obtain it, and because of indiscretions in the lives and language of some who professed it, and from the heresies in the instructions of some who taught it, and particularly because I was myself spoiled with false philosophy, I imbibed a strong antipathy against the whole subject. This opposition of mind, unacknowledged to myself, increased, and became more and more unsettled and deadly. Finally I could have no patience to hear the subject introduced. My mind recoiled at it. I felt contempt for those who professed it, and even carefully refrained from mentioning it in my prayers.

I could not entertain the thought of ever professing, and I scarcely desired to enjoy it. I once said to a dear friend of mine who was conversing with me on the subject, and urging me to seek it (she was one who I believed enjoyed it), "If my enjoyment of it requires a profession, I do not desire it. I do not feel that I could receive it on such terms or with such involvements." So dark had I become, so dreadfully prejudiced.

As a consequence of this state of mind, and other causes, I became very much discontented with my position in the church; the ministry became a burden to me, I became complaining, and anxious to retire. In the time of my extremity, deliverance came. At a love feast, at New Street (a colored church, and I had always doubted much the religion of these people), under the exercises of these simple, ignorant Christians, I was wonderfully blessed. My whole soul was stirred within me; my heart melted like wax; tears flowed profusely; I praised the Lord aloud. This was a great, timely, and permanent blessing. It continued almost without interruption up to the time which I am about more particularly to describe. My devotions became more spiritual, and my duties more delightful, and my graces all acquired new life. In a word, I was greatly, divinely revived.

During this interval I was severely attacked with disease. This affliction was blessed to me. One night, about the time I began to decidedly convalesce, my mind became absorbed in meditations of the goodness of God to me and my great ingratitude to him. I wept, I sobbed, I convulsed and cried out. O what a blessing it was which I then received! I told my dear Sarah and we wept and praised the Lord together. And now I began again to pant for holiness. My prejudices were not all gone, but they were greatly lessened, and I wrestled and prayed with new earnestness and desire for victory.

As soon as I had sufficiently recovered to engage in public worship, preparations were made for a protracted meeting. The work progressed. One evening the whole membership present were invited to join the penitents at the altar in prayer, for a deeper personal baptism. I soon became unconscious of all that surrounded me, absorbed in my own suit. An invisible hand forcibly conducted me into the inmost chamber of my heart, and cherished sins and inward corruptions were revealed to me. How vile I seemed to be! What a defilement covered my soul as a mantle! Never did I see inbred corruption in such a light before. Holiness to the Lord was presented to my mind. I saw, I felt, that it was attainable; that it was possible to all, possible to me. Oh, how I desired it. The blessing seemed nigh, within my reach, but how could I venture to receive it? I, so unworthy! I, so likely to retain it but a day! It seemed precisely what my case required. With new clearness its necessity and nature were manifested. I felt the truth of his promises. But now the controversy was in my will. Could I, would I receive it? Would I acknowledge it to myself? Would I confess it to others—that blessing after which I had often panted, and then again had almost condemned? Would I, now that my Saviour seemed to bestow it, receive it, and incur the responsibilities?

I wrestled and agonized still more on this point. The corruptions of my heart rose up still more distinctly to my view. The question then seemed to be, "Will you consent that Christ should take them all away, and make you holy—give you a clean heart? That was the naked point. It was plain—a point of choice, of decision. It brought a struggle; but, thank God, I was enabled to say yes. When I came to this point I was calm. My agony had now subsided. It was a deliberate choice that Christ should purify my heart and a firm belief that this was all that was necessary; that if I would consent, he would do it.

On making choice, the first thing that I discovered was, that I could no longer pray as before. The spirit of earnest entreaty and desire was removed. I had no joy, no special manifestations—not so much as usual. I was rather without feeling of any kind. My heart seemed completely emptied of everything, even a sense of want. At this state I felt no alarm; I was satisfied; I wanted nothing. A deep, immovable calm took possession of my heart. I have been happy a thousand times, but my present exercise was new and strange. It was rest—rest in God. Inward content.

In the evening I continued my effort at the public altar, but I could not pray. It was impressed upon my mind as distinctly as though I had heard a voice, that my prayer had prevailed—that I had been answered in the thing which I desired, though not in the manner, to praise rather than pray; rather to confess than to entreat. The witness had not indeed been given in the measure or mode anticipated, but a witness was given. Here, again, was a struggle between doubt and confidence, fear and assurance? Is the work done? my anxious heart inquired. Conflicting answers were returned. Fear said, Doubtful. Faith replied, Fear not, only believe. Here again the Spirit seemed to lead me into the innermost sanctuary of my soul—into those chambers where I had discovered such defilement, and showed me that all was cleansed, that the corruptions that had given me such distress were dead, taken away,—that not one of them remained. I felt the truth of the witness; it was so; I was conscious of it, as conscious as I had ever been of conversion. A change had been wrought in my heart—a radical, conscious change. My heart had entered into a newer and higher existence. This was as evident as transition from darkness to light. Still I had no overflowing joy, no ecstatic rapture, no wonderful manifestations. This is one remarkable fact in my new life—it is even and sustained. I have been tempted, but the adversary has found no response, although I am in daily expectation of sore conflict. My peace continues a deep, undisturbed, inward calm—a quiet content of the whole soul.

I believe I can live in this state. I once did not believe this. It is questionable if I ever sincerely desired it. It seemed like being over-much religious. Upon this point my mind is changed. I now fully believe it is practicable to lead a holy life—to enjoy entire freedom from all sin, and complete consecration to God. What a wonderful deliverance the Lord hath wrought! What a rest he hath found for my soul. A rest of naked, simple faith. To him be all the glory forever. Amen.

To My Friends At Indian Springs Camp Meeting.

When I visited Indian Springs last summer you were all deeply interested in my coming evangelistic missionary work in South America and South Africa, 1930-1932. Quite a few of you carried out my suggestion to give Mr. Pritchard $2.00 to send THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD to a foreign missionary. In South America I find very little holiness literature and very few holiness papers. I could give Mr. Pritchard fifty names of missionaries, native pastors and workers who would be greatly blessed by getting THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD. It might start a revival. It might lead someone into the blessing. Invest $2.00 of missionary money in this way. It may bring a thousand fold fruitage. Hand in your $2.00 at the Bookstand.

Some of you have an offering towards my missionary expenses. Please pass that to Mr. Pritchard and he will see it reaches me. I hope to sail for Africa in October. Just now I am in wonderful revival meetings in Chili. We are witnessing marvelous outpourings of the Spirit, and often there is a shout in the camp. Pray for me.

GEORGE W. RIDOUT.

A Real Bargain.

In passing through our stock room the other day, I noticed they were unpacking some New Testaments. I examined one and found it to be one of the choicest Testaments I ever saw, very large print, good binding, and what many Testaments do not have, the Psalms in the back. A wish came into my heart that every person whose sight was dim, might be the possessor of one of these Testaments. I asked the business manager what the price was, and to my amazement, found that they were only $1.00; the price, to be sure is more, $1.50, but a special price has been put on this special book in order to get them into the hands of as many people as possible. If there is one who reads this, who knows of an aged person whose life might be brightened with a gift of one of these beautiful Testaments, why not put in your order now for that person's birthday or Christmas present, or, just for the sake of making some one extremely happy as they are going down the western slope of life's journey. I hope we may get orders at once for numbers of these Testaments. I am sure you will be pleased with the book, and your heart will be repaid in the joy that the gift will bring to that dear old saint who sometimes wonders if any one really loves them. Remember, the price is only $1.00, postpaid. Pentecostal Publishing Co. And the book is wonderful for its value. Yours to help,

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

Would the Repeal of Prohibition End Unemployment?

HERE are those who say there would be less unemployment and more prosperity if beer, wine and whiskey were made legal.

Back in 1914—the peak year in American consumption of alcoholic beverages—it is estimated that two billion dollars was spent for drink. A huge sum indeed! What is happening to all that money now? Is it lying stagnant? Not by any means! It is being spent—for motor cars, radios, automatic refrigeration, better homes and better living!

Yet that tells the story only in part. For prohibition has greatly increased the producing power, hence the earning power of the individual. So not only the drink money, but increased earnings as well are being spent for commodities which involve the employment of millions of people.

In 1914 there were 1,700,000 motor vehicles in the United States. Today there are 26,500,000. Of course, we would have motor vehicles even if we did not have prohibition. But without prohibition it is certain there would be far fewer cars—perhaps less than half!

Was the liquor industry, before prohibition, a substantial employment factor? Did it employ fewer people or more than the motor vehicle industry of today? Here are the facts—they are enlightening indeed! People employed before prohibition in the manufacture of beer, wine and distilled liquors: 86,914—total wages, $58,432,000. People employed in 1930 in the manufacture of motor vehicles: 325,124—total wages $647,588,438.

And the motor vehicle industry is only one industry—almost every industry has benefited from prohibition!

But how about the farmer? Has not prohibition closed an important market for farm products? Statistics show that purchases by the liquor industry comprised only a fraction more than one per cent of the value of farm products even in the days of greatest liquor consumption! Agricultural products are primarily food products—and prohibition has made the average family financially able to invest more money in food than ever before!

The attitude of thinking farmers toward prohibition is reflected by the action of the National Grange, outstanding organization in the farm world, which at its annual convention, held at Rochester, N. Y., in November, 1930, unanimously adopted an unqualified endorsement of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Prohibition and employment conditions? Let Roger W. Babson, the well-known business economist, give his analysis. "There is probably no one factor," Mr. Babson has said, "which would more quickly bring a business panic and a period of unemployment than the multiplication by legislation of prohibition and a return of the saloon."

Believing that a Divinely-called, wholly-sanctified, well-equipped, Spirit-filled ministry is one of the greatest needs of our times, and for all time to come, I am glad to make a donation for the upbuilding of the Asbury Theological Seminary at Wilmore, Ky.

For this great work, I promise to give $..... per year for five years, first installment due September 1, 1931. I will join all who are helping in this good work in prayer for the blessing of the Lord to rest upon it.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

BACK-DOOR RECOMMENDATION.

"Which boy will you have?" asked Mr. Ames.

He was going away for a week, and he wanted to invite one of his neighbor boys to stay with Mrs. Ames, and be ready to run errands. Of course, he meant to pay well the boy who was selected.

"I think I'll have Jimmie White," said Mrs. Ames.

Mr. Ames looked surprised. Jimmie was the poorest boy in the neighborhood. There were others older and better looking and cleverer.

"You're wondering why," said Mrs. Ames. "I'll tell you. When Jimmie goes out in the back yard to cut wood for his mother, the cat comes and rubs against his legs, and the dog jumps all over him, the little neighbor girl comes to the fence to show her dolly, and Jimmie's own small brother comes running to help. Those are his recommendations. I know he has a kind heart, and I like that better than almost anything else. There was another boy I thought of, but I saw him kick his dog yesterday, and he torments the young children on the way to school. He slaps his little sister, and whines when his mother asks him to do an errand. He takes off his hat and speaks politely when I am calling on his mother, and, if tried, he could be a splendid boy. But I've been looking up back-door recommendations, and he doesn't stand the test."

Mr. Ames then understood. "If boys and girls could only know that someone is often taking their measure when they are off guard!" he said. Then he went over to ask Jimmie's mother if she could spare him for a week.

"Two dollars, mother, for just helping after school!" cried Jimmie. "I'd have thought it was pay enough to stay over there, and take care of the pony, and get a chance to look at the books and pictures in the evening. I wonder how they came to choose me?"—Selected.

Dear Aunt Bettie: It has been at least two years since I have written you. Since then I have finished high school and Junior College. Would you like for me to tell you of my school? It is located nine miles west of Jackson, the state capital. There is another college here—a Baptist, four-year college, which is four blocks away. Our school is a private college. Only the first two years of college work is taught. The music department is under direction of an excellent instructor. She has studied all over Europe, Canada, and in the United States. The head of the voice department is an Englishman, who has studied extensively. We have several organizations on the campus. I am a member of the Lesbian Society, President of the Spanish Club, Secretary-Treasurer of the Y. W. A., and Vice-President of the North Mississippi Club. We have excellent religious advantages. Most of the girls are Baptists and go to the Baptist Sunday school, Church and B. Y. P. U., but I, with a few others, go to the M. E. Sunday school and Church, and am Mission Study Chairman in the Epworth League. My choice now is Asbury; although I plan to teach for a few years before I finish my B. A. If some of you boys or girls want to write to me, I shall be glad to answer the letters I receive.

Ruby Akers.
Clinton, Miss.

Dear Aunt Bettie: You and the cousins move over a wee bit and let a little Kentucky girl join your happy band of boys and girls. My grandmother takes The Herald and I sure do enjoy reading page ten. I wrote to The Herald once before and found a twin and we have been writing ever since. I am fourteen years old, have blue eyes, black hair, am five feet, three inches tall, weigh 97 pounds. I have one brother and two sisters. Sarah Engbrecht, I guess your middle name to be Alva or Alma. If I am right be sure and send me your picture. Katherine E. Hogan, I guess your middle name to be Elsie. Who can guess my middle name? It begins with B and ends with N and has five letters in it. Can any one guess these Bible questions? Where are the Ten Commandments found? In what book in the New Testament does it tell about Christ's early life? What is the longest verse in the Bible? What is the shortest chapter in the Bible? I live on a farm and enjoy horseback riding and raising little chickens. If anyone will write to me I will answer their letter.

Frances B. Geurin.
Route 1, Almo, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I have been a subscriber to The Pentecostal Herald for twenty years and this is my first letter. I love Jesus and want everybody else to. I am writing this little poem to the boys and girls, for they are the coming church. It is about Jesus the Christ.

What a wonderful one is the Savior of men,

He has done for us all that he can;

He felt his calling, even in boyhood days,

His first visit to the Temple set his heart ablaze.

Mother found him there looking so wise,

She could hardly believe her eyes.

He answered her question and then obeyed,

And going home again took up his trade.

He faced the hard world, as everyone must,

Though he ever lived true and just.

Even the disciples could not understand,

Yet they always obeyed his command,

And how he suffered in body and mind,

Yet so many to him were unkind.

The ones who know him best,

Find such comfort and rest.

Come with me to Jesus and give him your heart,

And you will never, never want to depart.

He will be with you and keep you in all that is right,

So come and work for him, with all your might.

At last he will take you to his home above,

Where all is liberty, light and love.

Rose E. Keep.

Dorset, Ohio.

Dear Aunt Bettie: As this is my third letter to The Herald I would like to see it in print. I have two brothers and one sister. I am the oldest one at home. My birthday is Jan. 2. I am eleven years old. Have I a twin? If so, write to me and I will answer your letter. Can anyone guess my middle name? It begins with M and ends with A, and has seven letters in it. Minnie M. Whitaker, I guess your name to be Mabel. Travis D. Rawlings, I guess your middle name to be Deen. I enjoy reading The Herald. Love to all the cousins and Aunt Bettie.

Margaret M. Sauceman.
Rt. 3, Mosheim, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: This is the first time I have written and I hope to see it in print. Father takes The Herald. It is a very fine paper. I am twelve years old and in the ninth grade. Who can guess my first name? It begins with G and ends in E, and has six letters in it. Whoever guesses it I will send them a picture of me in my graduation clothes.

G. Gerald Carmack.
Box 492, Durango, Colo.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Here comes two girls from Trade, Ala. It has been a long time since we wrote to The Herald. We saw our letters in print and are thanking Aunt Bettie for printing them. Will some of the cousins write to our Junior League or Sunday school class? The name of our class is "The Wide-Awake Class." We would like to hear from any other Sunday school classes if they wish to write to us; we will answer all letters. Reba A. Swindell, we guess your middle name to be Annie. My friend is writing to a missionary who lives in India. We wish to be missionaries after we become women. When I wrote to The Herald I received a letter from Miss Ruth Huhtanen who lives in New York. We wish to receive many letters from the cousins and Aunt Bettie. We will answer all letters received if it takes us until Mr. W. B. gets back from his trip around the world. May God's richest blessings rest on Aunt Bettie and the cousins.

Ruthie Auston, Eunice Ward.
Trade, Ala.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I wrote a letter to this page last year. I guess some of you remember me and my invalid sister. We are both worse since I wrote. We have suffered so much and gone through lots of troubles and sorrows. It has almost taken us out of this world, but the Lord has been so good to us and helped us so we are still here. Will be glad to hear from any one that cares to write to us. We received several good letters and cards from the dear readers last year and how glad we were to get them. They cheered us so much. We received several orders for our tatting; they were a great help, and we will be glad to get more orders. Our Aunt I told you about in our other letter last year, died Jan. 2nd. She was ninety years, six months and four days old. I've been in bed twenty-five years July 20, and sister has been in bed twenty-four years this past March. We have one sister and sick sister's husband to take care of us and do the work. A dear friend paid for the good paper for us a few months and we enjoyed it so much. We were so thankful to get it. We appreciate all the cheer and help that we received more than we can tell and we will be so glad to be remembered in any way. Your shut-in friends and sisters in Christ,

Miss Elsie Everett,
Mrs. Estie Mitchell.
Rt. 1, Box 120, Crossville, Ala.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I enjoy reading The Herald. I borrow it and read it and pass it on to my sister-in-law. I visited you last year and enjoy writing to the cousins. Our pastor is Rev. J. P. McDurnit. He and his wife are holiness folks. I believe, and are preaching a full gospel of salvation. I am reading one of Rev. Bud Robinson's books, "Mountain Peaks of the Bible." It is the most wonderful book I ever read and makes the way of the Christian life so plain to me. I wish all the cousins could read it. We will finish paying for our church this fall. I thank Aunt Bettie if she will print this, and I thank God for Dr. Morrison's life. He is doing a great work. I want all the cousins to read the 7th and 8th chapters of Romans.

Nancy Auston.
Trade, Ala.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am not a subscriber to The Herald, but aim to be soon. I thought I would write a few words with my sister and brother. I am so glad the Lord is showing people their duty in helping others. My brother has had both legs broken; he works on the farm but gets around so poorly; it's pitiful to see, but people are good to help. I am President of our Ladies' Aid. Pray for me that I may be just what the Lord would have me be. It seems that I do so little for him. I love The Herald. May God bless you and Dr. Morrison for the great work you are doing.

FALLEN ASLEEP

REV. ITHIEL T. JOHNSON.

Ithiel T. Johnson was born at Douglas, Mass., July 26, 1849. When about six months old his parents moved to Oxford, Mass., where they lived for forty-five years or more. He was the sixth of eight children born to Lewis Arnold and Lucy Ann Johnson, and came of the old French Huguenot stock who settled in Oxford and were massacred by the Indians in 1696; only one boy survived from which sprang his ancestry.

Mr. Johnson's early advantages were limited, his parents being very poor. He was bound out to work on the farm of a Mr. Marshall Pratt at the age of eight. After remaining here a short time he worked elsewhere earning what money he could, sometimes getting his board and clothes. He would attend school a few weeks each year during the winter. Young Johnson was a leader among the boys even at an early age. His mother was always very anxious that he should attend church.

When the war broke out in 1861 he became very much interested in the cause of the Union army and in many ways aided the officers in the camp. Later they invited him to go south with them but his parents refused to permit him to go. However he was fired with enthusiasm and ran away with them. He soon became a great favorite among the officers and soldiers, being the youngest boy in the regiment—the 15th Massachusetts. He was assigned as a servant boy to Lieut. Bartholomew, and later served in the same capacity under Capt. Charles Watson. In October, 1861, occurred the battle of Ball's Bluff in which he was much interested, and where he made himself very useful and helping to care for the wounded. Later he returned to Oxford with Sergeant Shumway to enlist recruits. In 1864 young Johnson again ran away and went to Washington where he witnessed the second inauguration of President Lincoln. He served as news agent for the Washington Chronicle for a while. After Lincoln was shot and while his body was lying in state at the Capitol he was among those who looked on the face of our martyred President.

At the early age of four God moved on his heart but he was definitely saved in a camp meeting at Sterling, Mass. He joined the Oxford M. E. Church and was thrown under the influence of gracious characters who aided him in his soul life. About eight years later he was sanctified at a National camp meeting at Landersville. Within six months after his conversion he felt he must preach and when he was sanctified he settled this question in the affirmative and from that moment the way seemed to open for Bro. Johnson to go to school. He attended East Greenwich Academy and was given a scholarship to that institution. Here he worked and preached as opportunity afforded a chance.

In November, 1874, he received a Local Preacher's license from the Quarterly Conference of Oxford, Mass. In 1879 he applied for Deacon's Orders at the New England Conference and was ordained April 6, of that year. Mr. Johnson began holding meetings in schoolhouses, etc., when nineteen years of age. Pastors soon invited him to hold meetings for them and the most of his early life as an evangelist was spent in New England, and mostly with the M. E. Church. Among the first places where he labored was at Douglas, his birthplace. Here God blessed his efforts and many souls were saved and sanctified. Wherever he went he was thus used of God as a soul winner. Evangelistic trips were made to Nova Scotia, California, New Brunswick, Ontario, Minneapolis, Minn., Baltimore, Md., New York City, Binghamton, N. Y., and a host of places outside of New England.

Bro. Johnson was married to Miss Mary Lawrence, to whom were given four children, three boys and one girl. The oldest boy died in childhood and the youngest died only last December. His wife was a wonderful helpmate and co-laborer. What a team they made working together! What one lacked the other seemed to supply.

Mr. Johnson was a great camp meeting worker and his heart was in love with this form of Gospel ministry. For several years he had charge of the camp at Richmond, Maine. At Johnson, Vt., he built a camp of his own with the aid of local help and called this Ithiel Falls Camp. The first meeting was held in August, 1899. With but one exception a camp meeting has been held here each year since. The Gospel of full salvation has always been emphasized and many souls have found God here. Improvements have been made under Bro. Johnson's supervision until now we have an excellent equipment for a small camp. Such preachers as William McDonald, B. S. Taylor and others have labored at Ithiel Falls.

Rev. I. T. Johnson has held several pastorates in the Methodist Church, among which we note one at Perkinsville, and Johnson in Vermont. Also one at Rutland, Pa., and his last at Feeding Hills, Springfield, Mass. Aside from these four there are others and God gave him a gracious ministry as a pastor as well as an evangelist. He had both viewpoints in his labors which he used to good advantage and which helped to make him exceptionally and experimentally efficient. His last pastorate was only two years' duration but was one of success and blessing. In April, 1930, lacking only a few months of being 81, his ill health forced him to resign but he was much beloved by his parishioners who took kindly to his leadership and regarded him as a father. He taught a large class of young men in the Sunday school and held their interest and affection. Regardless of a very bad heart trouble he was present at Ithiel Falls Camp last year and took an active part. The death of his son Earl the following December was a great blow and for the last two years especially he has greatly failed in health. However he possessed great energy and perseverance and would always go beyond his strength.

His last weeks were spent at the home of his daughter at Springfield, Mass., who tenderly cared for him. Even during these weeks and months of extreme illness he was planning for Ithiel Falls Camp and was concerned in the comfort and welfare of others. He was so self-forgetful, so loving and appreciative. On May 30, 1931, he insisted on going to his old home town, Oxford, where he took part in the Memorial Day observance, making a speech at the cemetery in honor of the soldier dead and gave timely exhortation to the youth of today. Those words will not soon be forgotten by those privileged to hear them. From then on he failed rapidly until July 4th, at 5:15 P. M. he went to be with Jesus. Funeral services were held on Monday at the funeral parlors in the City in charge of Dr. McPherson, pastor of one of the local churches, Dr. Martin, Supt. of that District of the M. E. Church, and Rev. C. R. Sumner also spoke. Then the body was taken to Oxford where funeral services were held in the Methodist Church where Mr. Johnson had been a member for so many years. Three appropriate pieces were rendered by a quartette, remarks made by Rev. C. R. Sumner and prayer offered by the pastor of the church. Then he was laid to rest beside his wife who had preceded him to heaven over sixteen years ago.

Mr. Johnson was always actively engaged and was a man of force and holy power. He had a strong personality and was always against crime, sin and wrong of any kind. He was a preacher of unctious and power and lived a godly life. Politically he was a Democrat and later a Prohibitionist. One always knew where to find him. He was no compromiser yet he played fair with those who differed with him in opinion. A mighty man in Israel has gone and we shall miss him but he has finished the course, kept the faith and now has gone to his reward. For over sixty years he has labored in the ministry, received small financial remuneration, and died a poor man as far as this world's goods are concerned. He never received a pension from either his church or his country but gave out to others unselfishly and liberally. A daughter, Mrs. Evelyn Otting, of Springfield, and a son, Ithiel T. Johnson, Jr., are the only members of his immediate family left to survive him.

Adam Clarke---Great Commentary

Dr. Clarke was one of a long succession of men who, in every age of the Christian Church, have applied the best energies of their intellect and heart to the study and interpretation of the Scriptures. The seven gifts which, according to Augustine, the true expositor of Scripture must possess—reverence, piety, science, fortitude, prudence, cleanness of heart, and heavenly wisdom—were his portions.

The studies of his earlier years always had a bearing on this great work. From the beginning he felt the need of being taught by God to understand his own word. Referring to this, he says: "No man ever taught me the doctrine I embrace; I received it singly by reading the Bible."

Sufficiently critical to aid the inquiries of the more serious student, and yet sufficiently popular to serve the purpose of general edification. He gives a lucid view of the several books of Scripture, as to their dates and authors, their scope and connection; he expounds the original text in a manner adapted to the deficiencies of the reader; he elucidates difficulties in chronology, history, and oriental manners; he develops the grand doctrines of revelation, and applies the whole to the great concerns of human salvation and duty.

One leading feature in its character is independence in thinking. While he availed himself of the labors of others, the great number of his expositions are emphatically his own.

DR. ADAM CLARKE'S COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE

is one of the noblest works of the class in the entire domain of sacred literature. It is a thesaurus of general learning.

Its luminous expositions of the Law and the Gospel; its earnest and forceful appeals to the conscience of the sinner and the unbeliever; its rich counsels for the well-understood wants of the Christian's inner life; its endless exhibitions of general knowledge; and its valuable aids to the students of those holy tongues in which revelation took its first recorded forms—all will render this book the companion and the counselor of multitudes as long as the English language may endure. The man who accomplished it achieved immortality, his name having become identified with an indestructible monument of learning and religion.

We commend it as the most spiritual commentary published. Six large volumes, good paper, good binding, new type.

He has two grandsons and two granddaughters of the next generation. But he has several sons in the gospel who are preachers in different churches being saved under his ministry. Also missionaries whom he led to Christ. Bishop Wallace E. Brown, of the M. E. Church, now in China, is a product of one of his revival meetings. He has a host of friends who have been blessed under his ministry. "Though he is dead he will live on." "Many shall rise up in that day to call him blessed." Dear Brother Johnson, by the grace of God, we shall meet you in the morning just inside the "Eastern Gate."

DRUNKEN DRIVERS GROWING MENACE.

Automobile safety experts are agreed that drunken drivers have caused wrecks which have killed 15,000 people and injured 300,000 others in this country since motoring began to be general. As a result of this alarming conclusion automobile clubs, police chiefs and civic organizations are undertaking educational drives against the use of alcoholic beverages by automobile drivers; and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is pointing to these disasters as an argument against the further distribution of liquor under any plan to repeal or modify prohibition.

In Ontario, where there is a mounting death toll from drunken drivers, the provincial government gives every motorist a printed warning that many motor accidents are the result of liquor. This warning tells the motorist that it takes one-fifth of a second for a normal brain to send out the message which will enable the owner of that brain to put on the brakes in an emergency. The same process takes from two-fifths of a second to three-fifths of a second when a man has taken the average drink. A car going 35 miles an hour will travel 20 feet in two-fifths of a second and the government of Ontario warns drivers against liquor, specifically on that point.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Kindly request that The Herald readers pray for the healing of a young Christian man that he may continue the work to which he is called.

M. E.: "I am asking all Christians who read The Herald to pray for my companion that he may let God have his way with him."

Please to pray for a precious girl to be saved and sanctified, and that she may find employment.

Pray for the salvation of two boys to be saved, and that they may secure employment.

Mrs. I. C.: "Pray for a sister and father that they may be saved from crossing God's will. Pray that God may stop them in what they are planning to do."

And I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever. John 14:16.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson VII.—August 16, 1931.

Subject.—Sowing and Reaping.
Gal. 6:1-10.

Golden Text.—Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Gal. 6:7.

Time.—About A. D. 52.

Place.—Unknown.

Introduction.—It is not possible to definitely locate a boundary line of Galatia. Paul did not write this epistle to a local church as he did in some other instances, but to a group of churches. What is termed Galatia was a section of country lying in central Asia Minor. It received its name from the fact that the region was settled by a band of Gauls who went there from Europe about three centuries before the time of Christ. It was in some measure the scene of Paul's labors during his three great missionary journeys. If you will locate on your map such cities as Derbe, Lystra, Antioch and Iconium, you will be in the region called Galatia.

Paul had done a gracious work in Galatia; but certain Judaizing men were on his track. It is strange how narrow-minded people will become, wild after some small but unimportant matter, and lose sight of the real thing. This writer was once conducting a very gracious meeting. The Spirit of God was working mightily among the people, and many were being saved, while others were being sanctified. But soon we discovered that there was trouble on hand: certain Judaizing brethren had crept in unawares; and they were very busy trying to persuade the newly sanctified ones to attend a little meeting around the corner, in order that they might receive the baptism with the Holy Spirit. They declared with much zeal that all who received that baptism must "speak in unknown tongues" as a sign of its reception. On another point they were also very vehement: Everybody must keep Saturday for the Sabbath day, or go to hell at last. Paul had a lot of trouble with a similar gang. Nor are they all dead yet. Paul was severe in dealing with those enemies of the truth: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." It is a terrible thing to pervert the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In our study of this lesson we must not lose sight of the contrast between the two kinds of sowing, one to the flesh and the other to the Spirit. Paul says: "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that we cannot (may not) do the things that ye would." Note the works of the flesh: "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murder, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." That is a bad lot. Now place over against that the fruit of the Spirit: "Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." That comprehends about all that is worth while in human character; but, mark you, these things are fruits of the indwelling Spirit of God. In and of ourselves, we can no more develop them than we can grow corn without seed. Men cannot develop character that will stand at the judgment bar, unless they are first made "partakers of the divine nature" through the Holy Ghost.

We are now entering into one of the most terrific combats that has ever stirred the heart of this nation. Under God's leadership the righteous people are combining all their forces in favor of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act; while the devil is lining up all his forces against the Amendment and the Act. The battle will be furious between now and the election of our next President. It will be no child's play. The very integrity of the Federal Government is at stake. The Constitution, our Magna Charta, is at stake. We count the Flag sacred, and will shed our blood for it; but the Federal Constitution is a thousand-fold more sacred. Old Glory is the shadow of the Constitution. No state in this Union can now repeal its own prohibition law, and not be guilty of treason against the national Government. All honor to the governor of Illinois, who vetoed such a bill because he would not permit his state to become guilty of so heinous a crime. The battle is on. Find your place at the front and do your best. "There is plenty of good fighting all along the line."

Comments on the Lesson.

1. I wonder the apostle did not say "children." Those Galatians were a bit closer to him than some others were. He was their spiritual father. If a man be overtaken.—Paul's word for overtaken implies that the man met temptation unawares. He was not expecting it, and was overthrown before he had time to right himself, as when a sudden storm of wind overturns a boat before the boatmen have time to prepare for it. In a fault.—Yield to the sudden temptation, and so fall into sin, as some reformed drunkard has done when a glass of liquor was shoved under his nose by some imp of the devil. Ye which are spiritual.—One who helps another must himself be right. Blind men are poor guides. Restore such an one.—The Greek word here is surgical. Reduce the fractured bones to place. Put the dislocated joint back into position. Restore the injured member to its rightful use again. But do all this work in the spirit of meekness, "lest thou also be tempted."

2. Bear ye one another's burdens.—Contrast this verse with verse five: "For every man shall bear his own burden." There seems to be a contradiction, but not so. The Greek uses two words for burden, and thereby makes a difference. There are some burdens that we can bear for others; but there are some personal burdens that each one must bear for himself. In helping one another with the cares of life, we "fulfill the law of Christ." That is exactly what he does for us; and we may assist him in the work. It is blessed.

3. Thinketh himself to be something, when he is nothing.—Like a drunken pauper who imagines himself worth millions when he does not possess a cent. The self-importance of some two-legged soapbubbles is mountainous. I wonder why Paul took time to say that such men are deceived. But they deceive themselves; while sensible onlookers laugh in derision. The braying of the ass frightened ordinary animals; but the lion did not run, because he knew who was doing the braying. One coyote on a butte in Montana on a cold stormy night makes the newcomer think there are a dozen there; but he learns better by and by. One "wet" up in New York howls so fast and so long that some timid folk down in Georgia have buck-ague, and think that whole north state is on a drunk. Not so. New York State has some of the finest prohibitionists now living on earth.

4. Let every man prove his own work.—That is good sense. Men who manufacture steel bridges, are expected to test every piece sent out; and the test is made much severer than anything that they expect the steel parts to meet in actual use. It is a good thing to test ourselves under guarded circumstances, in order to find out what we can stand in the actual battles of life. A fort is as strong as the weakest point in its structure; and, likewise, a man is as strong as the weakest point in his character. The devil knows where that is better than you do; and there he will use his battering-rams. Better fortify that weak point.

6. Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.—That means that the Church must support a faithful minister who is giving his time and strength to his flock. It is right, and must be done, and well done.

7. Be not deceived.—One may deceive himself, or he may let others deceive him—the devil may deceive him; but one thing is settled forever: No one can deceive God; he is not mocked by any of man's trickery. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Is that true? Can't one sow wheat, and gather oats? Won't a figtree bear pears sometimes? If one puts snake eggs under a hen, won't they hatch out leghorn chickens? Can't a man fill himself with whisky, and keep sober? Surely a lazy, indolent student will develop into a learned scholar. Ah, no! The text is true, and would be true if the Bible had never been written. Men gather what they sow, and not something else. Thank God, a bad life may be changed through the power of the blood of Jesus Christ; so that one may begin again, and sow a good crop.

8. He that soweth to the flesh.—See Galatians 5:19-21. Reap corruption.—Gambling turns men into gamblers; lying turns men into liars; stealing turns men into thieves; drinking turns men into drunkards. So of all crimes against law, both human and divine. Soweth to the Spirit.—See Galatians 5:22, 23. Shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.—Through the Holy Spirit something is imparted to the soul, that God calls life everlasting. It is not mere existence. All souls have that. Maybe we can come at the meaning, in some measure, if we use the words of the Bible that describe it as becoming "partakers of the Divine Nature." But remember, that it is brought into our being by the Holy Ghost. It is not our work, but his.

9. Let us not be weary in well doing.—God's work is so important and so fascinating that it should forever keep us on a stretch. The salvation of immortal souls is so entrancing that

The Mills of The Gods

by DR. C. F. WIMBERLY.

After reading sophisticated novels, sex stories, and tales of pagan glory, one comes with a great deal of delight and satisfaction upon this splendid story of Dr. C. F. Wimberly—"The Mills of the Gods." As the title implies it is a story of justice and recompense, and reveals in no uncertain manner how God, and not Chance, is ruling the Universe.

The story moves with sure and certain strides, is gripping, worth reading, and the book deserves a wide circulation in this day of lost faith and false values.—JOHN RICHARD MORELAND, Poet and Critic, Norfolk, Va.

Order of PENTECOSTAL PUBLISHING COMPANY Louisville, Ky. Price $1.50.

we should never weary of leading them to our Savior. Thank God, we shall reap in due time, if we faint not—if we grow not weary and quit our task before we reach the goal.

10. Let us do good to all men.—We are passing this way but one time; if therefore there is any good deed that we can do, let us do it now; for we shall never pass this way any more. But Paul makes a discrimination that is wise, though it may seem narrow to some: "Especially unto them who are of the household of faith." For our Lord's sake, we are under obligation to assist our Christian brethren in time of need. Doubtless there were impoverished sinners in Judaea during the days of Paul; but he took up collections to feed the poor saints. There is nothing narrow about this.

MURPHYSBORO HOLINESS ASSOCIATION, MURPHYSBORO, ILLINOIS.

We recently closed one of the best meetings in the history of our camp, with Rev. W. H. Fry as Evangelist, and Mrs. Fry in charge of the music. Rev. and Mrs. Fry are products of Asbury College. They are safe, sure, and scriptural preachers of the gospel, and finer spirited co-laborers cannot be found anywhere. Crowds were good from the beginning, and a beautiful spirit prevailed. There were a goodly number of earnest seekers and happy finders, both for pardon and purity. While this Holiness Camp has faced many difficult problems, has fought some hard battles, yet we are glad for the outlook and prospects of the future, and covet your earnest prayers for the cause of holiness in this needy field.

IF YOU HAVE ANY CLOTHING

That you do not need I wish to remind you of an appeal which has come to The Herald office for a family which has three boys, age 3, 10, and 12, and four girls age 2 months, 6, 7 and 14 years. The writer says that any old winter clothing will be acceptable as they have nothing for the coming winter. Address Mrs. Melvina Gibson, Snap, Ky.

WHAT HAVE YOU DONE FOR YOUR LORD TODAY?

Frances Fullerton.

What have you done for your Lord TODAY
My precious young Christian friend?
Have you done your best, and stood the test
Of the day, clear through to the end?
What have you done for your Lord TODAY
While swiftly the moments rolled by?
Have you been kind and true, the whole day through?
Have you truly trusted and ceased to sigh?
What have you done for your Lord TODAY?
'Tis a question worth your while;
Have you helped those in need and done a kind deed,
Have you helped the weary by a cheerful smile?
What have you done for your Lord TODAY
With the talent he has loaned to you?
Have you gained five more, and laid up in store
Riches he has promised the true?
What have you done for your Lord TODAY?
Surely there is much to do;
So with shield and sword, and the lamp of His word,
Deliver the message he has given you.
Let's fight the fight of a soldier brave,
Regardless of the enemy strong,
With His help and power, let's improve each hour,
And we'll win for right and defeat the wrong.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

This is to certify that I have known Brother S. H. Prather, 1310 Clay St., Henderson, Ky., for twenty years—four years of this time as his pastor. I never knew a more unselfish man, and one in whom I have more confidence. He has worked with me in more revival meetings than any other singer. In many respects he is one of the best song helpers I ever worked with. He knows God, and knows how to lead souls to Christ, both in exhortation, and at the altar. As a leader of congregational singing, I have never known a man who could get more people to sing than S. H. Prather. I wish the brethren would keep him busy; he deserves it, and is in every way worthy. Brother Prather will come for his fare one way and the evening freewill offerings each night of the meeting, what is called the "hat collection."

Dear Herald Readers:

It is with deep gratitude that I have read the many letters from different ones of you who have responded to my article on "Modesty and Freedom"—which appeared in the June 17th issue of The Herald. It makes me rejoice and take courage to know that there are a great number of people scattered over these United States whose eyes are not blinded to the dangers into which American womanhood has fallen. However, my heart is made sad and heavy when I see the great multitude of professing Christians following the way of the world and not seeming to realize that they are doing anything wrong. We are all in danger of being "conformed to this world" so let us "watch and pray" and be ready to walk in any new light that he may shine across our pathway.

I wish to say that I am grateful to each of you for all the offers of help you have given me. I am a busy housewife, as most of you are, so you may know that my time for this work is limited. However, I wish to urge that each of you do what your hands find to do for this cause, pray earnestly and expect God to give us victory. I feel absolutely sure that he is grieved with American womanhood, but is anxious to help us rise from whence we have fallen if we will give him a chance.

If we have any sense of modesty or virtue why doesn't our blood boil when we look at the scenes on bathing beaches, in picture shows, dance halls, certain automobiles and many other places that might be mentioned? If it were only the goddess who took part in these things it would be different, but those who are most active in church work are often numbered with the crowd. God give us a holy church and a people who will deny themselves and live a holy religion!

We need in every community a united group of women, young and old, who will pledge themselves to dress in modest apparel, stay away from movies, dances, public bathing beaches, not to curse, smoke cigarettes, drink whiskey, sit in men's laps, kiss or be kissed by men who are not relatives, refuse to go automobile riding with men unchaperoned, or do anything else that is not in keeping with modesty and virtue, and do all in their power to influence others to follow their example.

Thanking you for your prayers and co-operation, I am,
Mrs. Claud Mingleddorf.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

A PITCHER OF CREAM

By BUD ROBINSON

Rev. C. F. Wimberly says: "It is fresh, juicy, unctious and witty. He has given us the cream of his thought, feelings and imagination under the tuition of the Holy Spirit. There is not a dull or uninteresting page or paragraph in the book. The book will enrich the soul of every one who reads it. It should be in ten thousand homes that love full salvation. It is toothsome."

"WEDNESDAY NIGHT TRANSFORMED" By Pastor F. D. King, of the Baptist Church, Newnan, Ga.

I am giving this brief review to The Pentecostal Herald because I know the paper is set for helping in every possible way the ongoing of the kingdom. Here is a book that will help any pastor who has prayer meeting problems.

It is at once suggestive and meaty. It is in a word a prayer meeting clinic. In my heart of hearts I wish thousands of pastors might write Rev. F. D. King, Newnan, Ga., and get a copy. The book has a hundred and eighteen pages and sells for $1.25. In the hope that these words of mine will lead many pastors to get this little work, I submit this brief but inadequate review.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF TRUST.

By The Editor.

THOUGH he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

"It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man."

"The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him."

"What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee. In God I will praise his word, in God have I put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me."

If you would have God do his will with you, you must first let him do his will in you.

Let God make you what he wants you to be, and then he will place you where he wants you to be, and give you the work he wants you to do; then failure will be impossible.

How blessed is the man who has committed his way to the Lord, and who finds in his heart a sweet willingness to have God's will done in him and to live and work alone for the glory of his Maker.

It is human nature to fear to trust the Lord; to halt and hesitate to commit one's way entirely into his keeping; to be willing to risk one's life, one's hopes and future prospects, with all things, into the hands of the allwise and infinitely holy God. Entire consecration makes a quiet, restful faith an easy proposition. Those who commit themselves wholly unto the Lord, find it easy to trust him without doubt. Amen.

The command is, "To commit thy way unto the Lord;" the condition is, "Trust also in him;" the result is, "He shall bring it to pass." Our's is the privilege, God's the responsibility. How like our Father to always give us the lighter end of the burden; the easier side of the yoke.

Why should we fear to trust our heavenly Father when he assures us that he is more willing to give good things to us than an earthly father is to give good gifts to his children? We may be sure in our co-partnership with God, all the risk is on his part; we have all to gain. We are but pensioners upon the inexhaustible storehouse of his grace. He says, "Come, buy and eat, without money and without price."

Paul declared, "When I am weak, then I am strong." Indeed, it is the weak, tottering one under whom Jesus delights to place his strong arm. He delights in weakness that his strength may be perfected. When David laid aside Saul's armor, God worked mightily through him to the overthrow of his enemies. The abandoned soul is the channel of God's opportunity to make something out of nothing; the clay to be fashioned after the divine pattern. Oh, to be able to say, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." The ego has given place to the life "hid with Christ in God."

THE FORCES OF EVIL.

THE forces of evil were never more united, defiant, powerful and aggressive than at the present time. They avail themselves of all of the modern inventions and discoveries of a Christian civilization. Let it be remembered that the secrets of science, which make for the betterment of the race, have not been discovered and brought into practical use by heathen and pagan nations, but by people who have enjoyed the advantages, education and blessings which can only exist among nations that have had the powerful civilizing influences of the religion of Jesus Christ.

The forces of evil have seized upon the printing press and are using it to tremendous advantage for the advancement of all sorts of propaganda that means harm and hurt to humanity. They have very largely commandeered the moving picture, which might have been a gracious force for education, instruction in history, innocent and helpful entertainment, but has been dragged into the mud of indecency and, in fact, a school for the education of the rising generations in lust and crime. The automobile is used in a remarkable way by criminals and has assisted many a robber and murderer in his successful get-away.

This is an age of the making of many books. There is an intellectual hunger among the people that calls for books. The reading habit is very general, not only in this country, but in Europe and among pagan people. Satan and his emissaries have not failed to understand and take advantage of this opportunity to sow the world down with a literature that has in it a dangerous mental, moral and spiritual poison. Take, for instance, the writings of that popular author, Sinclair Lewis, who is a sort of literary traitor. He is no more loyal to the best culture and life of his native land than Benedict Arnold was to the American army during the Revolutionary War.

Those authors who have attacked the characters of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, are of the same spirit of the men who attack the inspiration of the Scriptures and the Deity of the Lord Jesus. They are literary vandals who attempt to tear down and destroy everything that is good, strong, beautiful, inspiring and helpful in the development of good character.

The time has fully come for all of the forces of righteousness to meet those organized powers of evil in one of the greatest moral battles ever waged upon the face of the earth. We are living at a period when the preachers have a golden opportunity to stand up, endued with power from on high, and thunder against these evil and degrading influences which, if left alone, will bring upon us a repetition of the Dark Ages, far darker than the darkest days of that gloomy period of history. Blessed is the preacher or religious writer who draws the sword of truth and enters boldly into this conflict against the degrading influences of a flood of corrupt literature that is devastating the land. The lewdness of the moving pictures, Sabbath desecration, the forces who are determined by the help of the Devil to bring back and make the liquor traffic lawful, and all of those influences that blight and corrupt family life, that degrade womanhood, that destroy reverential fear of God and evangelical faith in his written Word, his crucified and risen Son. The war is on. Let every man and woman, youth and child, who loves native land, home and heaven, arm and equip themselves and go courageously shouting into the conflict. We have come to a period when we must win a victory and turn back these diabolical forces, or we shall suffer one of the most terrible defeats ever known in the history of the human race.

Things We Ought to Think About

EVERY year of our history something more than a million of the young people of this country come to voting age. Since the close of the World War more young people have come to voting age than there were American soldiers under arms during the World War. This ballot power may mean, is bound to mean, much in the future history of the nation. Some thoughtful people fear that the American Legion will dictate the future of the country, and that the dictation will have a selfish color; that, under their influence, politicians will be compelled to legislate for their advantage.

War is not nearly so popular as it once was; men who have fought in wars are not the human gods they used to be; and it is possible that these young voters who have not been in war, and who do not believe that politicians have a right to bring on war, and have millions of men murdered without any probability of any advantage to any one, meanwhile piling up tax burdens for the living to stagger under, may tell the Legion where to halt. They may draw a line on legislation, favoring war, or any sort of undue favors to those who may have participated in war. It would be a wise prophet who could forecast with any accuracy how these young voters are going to vote.

In thinking on the subject we might do well to remember that they have grown up under a system of education that is unchristian; that is unfriendly to evangelical Christianity; that is largely dominated by an un-

GOSPEL HAPPENINGS AND TELLING TRUTHS.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

I.

The other night when I was preaching on "Wrestling Jacob" in the Presbyterian Church, in a city in Chili, a woman with a loud voice took to shouting. I confess that my message was given with intensity because I was in the midst of dry bones. I was urging the point that we must "wrestle" to get the blessing; that our difficulty was we got religion (so-called) too easy. I did not expect to have that sermon punctuated at the end with shouting. To some people, it is a dreadful thing for people to shout in church. It is nothing but excitement and fanaticism! To me, a shout is refreshing, especially in this dry land. That shout in one of our holiness camp meetings would have been considered alright, and the probability is, that it would have set the meeting on fire, as I have witnessed many a time. My interpreter, a Methodist preacher (Chilian) who knows the Spirit, after the shouting subsided broke out into a passionate prayer for the power of the Spirit; before he finished a brother took to shouting and the meeting broke up in a real tempest. Our hearts were glad because we had another proof of the fact that revivals of religion act the same among all nations and tongues; when the Spirit of God works, his operations are the same in convicting, converting and sanctifying power among all races.

II.

Religious emotion is a necessary phenomenon in the work of God. John Wesley tells in his Journal the following: "I preached at eight on that delicate device of Satan to destroy the whole religion of the heart, telling men not to regard frames or feelings, but to live by naked faith; that is, in plain terms, not to regard either love, joy, peace, or any other fruit of the Spirit; not to regard, whether they feel these or the reverse, whether their souls be in a heavenly or hellish frame." It has been said by a devout English writer, "No heart is pure that is not passionate, and no virtue is safe that is not enthusiastic . . . Nothing great was ever done without enthusiasm."

Of a certain minister it was said, he had everything—culture, intellect, discipline, but nothing approaching a touch of fire. A verger in an English Church said, "I have listened to sermons in this church for fifty years and I still believe in God." Trouble with our average church is, it is too cold. Unbelief puts out the fire, modernism brings on a frost, and the people who come to church get chills and cold. A Methodist, writing to an editor, told she had ceased being a Methodist because one of the preachers was a Garrett man, and another was a modernist, and she could not stand them any more, so she went to the Lutheran Church. We need back again into our churches that holy stir, that glow, that emotion by which the soul is stirred to its depths to sincere repentance, to complete abandon to God, to entire consecration and dedication to Jesus Christ and his kingdom. Mere human effort cannot suffice to save the soul.

Oswald Chambers has well said: "Decisions for Christ fail because the bedrock of Christianity is ignored. Jesus makes the bedrock not strength of will, not power to decide, but the realization of our inability to decide. If ever I am going to be what Jesus wants me to be, he must come in and do it. The New Testament never asks us to decide for Christ (something indicative of strength of will); it asks us to yield to Christ, which is indicative of poverty of spirit. It is not our vows before God that tell, but our coming to God exactly as we are in all our weakness and being held and kept by him.

"Modern ethical teaching bases everything on the power of the will, but we need to recognize also the perils of the will. The man who has achieved a moral victory by sheer force of his own will is less likely to want to become a Christian than the man who has come to the moral frontier of his own need."

Dr. George Adam Smith is reputed to have said: "Every real revival of religion that the Christian world has seen has happened in the years of prosperity. Religious and social degradation go hand in hand." These learned men say many absurd things, and many people and students swallow them because Professor So and So says them. We know the reverse is true; that in times of prosperity it is hard to bring on revivals of religion. When people are prosperous they are self-sufficient, proud, carnal and worldly. The great revivals have happened in times of adversity and suffering when people have been driven to their knees by force of circumstances. Moody stirred America after the Civil War when people's hearts were broken. The great Irish and Welsh revivals did not come out of prosperity. God's program for a revival is found in 2 Chron. 7:14. I see by the church papers that another new type of evangelism is being developed by those in high places. According to accounts, everything has to be done with dignity and decorum. The Bishop preaches in gown; the whole setting of the meetings reminds one more of a College Commencement than a Methodist revival. Judging from reports, there is no mourner's bench, no altar service. One wonders what would happen if some poor sinner cried out, "What must I do to be saved?" What a consternation that would be if any one shouted! These showy, dignified invitations only indulge people in their desire for ritual, formalism, dignity and deadness. Bishop Joyce, with his fiery baptism of evangelistic fervor, would bring more sinners to God, and stir the church and ministry more in a week than this kind of dignified, oratorical, musical display would in a year. It would be a great thing if our church dignitaries and evangelical bishops would start a campaign calling the church to repentance and real salvation. This imitation-revival business doesn't trouble the devil one bit; it only assists in rocking the church to sleep. What we need is a mourner's-bench revival in which, among the blessings, a crowd of modernists who are leading the church astray, would get back to the faith, or join the Unitarians.

IV.

The Religious Bress has been greatly stirred by the Wendell Will, of New York City, by which millions of dollars—ten or twelve millions possibly—come under the control of the Methodist Church and Drew University. The Board of Foreign Missions found it necessary to issue a statement setting forth that the funds which they will administer will be limited entirely to Nanking Theological Seminary. The Wendell Will is another case of unfortunately advised benevolence. Some wills and bequests are the strangest ever, and are made more from whims than wisdom. Nanking Theological Seminary has never achieved any great success. I preached there for a week when I was in China. They had just gotten over the effects of the looting of 1927 when the Seminary was torn to pieces. Dr. Price, a stalwart Presbyterian of the Old School, who stood for the whole Bible, was doing his utmost to get the Seminary back on evangelical lines, but what can one man do when there are many others of doubtful and modernistic tendencies. The Seminary is now a Union School of Methodists, Presbyterians, Disciples and Friends. This Wendell legacy will give millions of money to develop it. It will be a perilous thing for the Kingdom of God if those millions should be used to erect imposing buildings, and then fill them with young men, ostensibly to study for the ministry, but who have never experienced the regenerating power of God in their souls. When I was preaching in South China one of my interpreters was a graduate of Peking Seminary. He graduated in theology and was sent into the pulpit to preach, but was an unconverted man. He became converted through interpreting a sermon on, "The New Birth," and that conversion changed his whole outlook upon the Kingdom of God. Richly endowed Theological Seminaries are the most dangerous propositions because, in order to get students, they make inducements which attract clever young fellows who find attending school quite a snap when they can do it at the cost of other people. Little attention is given to the spiritual state of theological candidates. If they are smart young fellows and have the idea of service, they are admitted. Then, of course, the worst peril is in the fact that Union Theological Seminaries are invariably in the hands of modernistic professors. It would be an unspeakably great blessing if these Wendell millions were given to do evangelistic work and training along the lines carried on at Bethel under Dr. Stone and Miss Hughes, and the Oriental Missionary Society.

When I preached in Nanking they had a Women's Bible Training School. Even that could not be saved from modernism. It got under the control of liberalism and a break was inevitable. Recent tidings from China inform us that Miss Paxson, Miss Parmenter and others have opened up a Bible Seminary for women in Shanghai, China. This has been occasioned by modernism getting in at the Bible Teachers' Training School at Nanking. Strong pressure was brought to bear upon that school to change the curriculum and broaden the teachings to conform with modern thought and liberalism. The new Seminary will be along the lines of doctrine and teaching of the Moody Bible Institute.

Modernism is a disturbing and destructive affair and costly, withal. It seems impossible for conservative, orthodox Christian workers to co-operate with it on the mission fields without running into the danger of either compromising or being always in a conflict. Miss Paxson and her friends have done a wise thing. Bible women can now be trained in a Woman's Seminary where they will honor the Word of God as divinely revealed, and where they can develop a genuinely evangelical experience.

V.

General Gordon, of the Sudan, writing to his sister about missionary work in the Sudan, says: "But where will you find an apostle? I will explain what I mean by that term. He must be a man who has died entirely to the world; who has no ties of any sort; who longs for death when it pleases God to take him; who can bear the intense dullness of these countries; who seeks for few letters, and who can bear the thought of dying deserted. A man must give up everything, understand everything, do anything for Christ here."

The modern missionary is not built after Gordon's type. There are two kinds of missionaries today. (1) The Pauline type who still believe that souls are either saved or lost; that it is the message of Redemption through the blood of Jesus we must bring to the heathen world, and that our chief business is to publish the gospel by preaching, teaching and printing the word of eternal life through Jesus Christ. They go to the mission fields with a definite Christian experience; they know they are born of God; they enjoy the witness and infilling of the Spirit. They are of the William Taylor, J. Hudson Taylor, "Cambridge Seven," Cowman, Kilbourne, Goforth, kind who go out in the deepest consecration and carry on their work in, and through, the power of the Holy Spirit.

(2) The other type of missionary is the product of modernistic thought and training. They are sent forth with certain "kingdom" ideas. They do not come to the heathen to save them from the wrath of God, because they do not believe in that kind of thing. They come with the idea of social uplift; they come to educate, not evangelize; they come with college degrees, but no burning evangelistic passion for souls. They come to carry out a church program and to fit into that program.

They come with only half a Bible; the Old Testament has lost its value to them through the teachings of modernistic professors. After getting to the field many of them go in for an average comfortable time. They finally drop into a routine-kind of life where they work with none of that enthusiasm which is begotten of the Spirit of God.

A FISHERMAN'S GREAT VENTURE.

Rev. John McNeill, D. D., the Scottish Spurgeon.

Text: "And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee on the water. And He said, Come." Matt. 14:28, 29.

HERE is a story about Peter. We sum up this incident about him pretty tersely. Peter's venture; his failure; and then his recovery. I believe that all our individual lives, when they are finished, will be summed up that way. We made the venture; here and there we failed; and in the end we recovered. We shall overcome at the last. It will be true, I believe, for the whole Church of Christ—her venture, and again and again her failure, and in the end, for the gates of hell cannot stop her,—in the end her glorious recovery.

Peter comes before us just as we would expect—that is to say, showing the unexpected. Peter is not according to sample at all. He does not go by the book. He is not tailor-made; he is not ecclesiastical, or denominational, or any of those varieties. Peter is just Peter. And when you look at him here I think he is rather like himself. Jesus came walking on the sea, and

THE DISCIPLES GOT SCARED.

But Christ reassured them by his voice. Nothing more might have been said; the incident might have passed; they might have received him up into the boat and said nothing. After all, we are a dull crowd, and we have to thank God for people who are not just as dull as we are, for people who do things, and sometimes say things. It would have been a pity for an incident like this to have passed, and evidently it would so have passed had it not been for Peter. Here he is breaking out in a new place. This is not the stilling of the tempest; Christ lying down asleep in the quiet of the evening, and then waking with everything rocking and reeling and the waves raging. This is another incident. Christ is here out on the sea, the sea calming under his presence, and Peter saying, "I would like to be there." It is a mercy somebody said something like that. Was it not a very obvious thing to say, unless they were all a lot of fossils?

"I WOULD LIKE TO BE THERE,"

said Peter. If Peter had turned round and said, "Have you ever seen him do a thing like that before? Now, brothers, to save you any risk I will just ask him if I might do it, if I might walk on the sea also." If he had said that, I believe the rest in the boat would have said, "Peter, here you are, always wanting to be prominent; self-advertising, as usual. Have you taken leave of your senses, Peter?" What a mercy it was that he did not ask anybody. The unanimous resolution would have been that he should stay where he was. It is usual to pass resolutions to do nothing. But Peter was a little bit ahead of that. Do not ask the commentators; you have just as good brains as many of the commentators. You may not know Greek or Hebrew. As someone has well said, "The interpretation of the Bible does not depend on scholarship and learning; it depends on inspiration and insight." That was a shrewd remark from an able expositor. He was not belittling scholarship, but the interpretation of the Bible depends on something else.

WE PRESBYTERIANS ARE THOROUGHbred

in the matter of training. But insight is another thing; it is seeing into a thing with unsophisticated eyes. Are you not pleased that Peter said, "Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water"? It was born of a vision of the manifestation of the Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ in our humanity, a manifestation of the Divine, eternal glory of Jesus, sailing the seas with us, taking the rough and tumble of our experiences day and night, travelling to the Cross. When a manifestation like that appears, walking on the sea, surely something should be said. When he awoke and stilled the tempest, the disciples shivered and shook, and feared exceedingly, and not a soul said "Hallelujah! praise the Lord that's over." Yet, what an occasion for saying something! "They feared exceedingly, and said, Who is this?" But there was not a soul to say, "Glory! Praise the Lord! Hallelujah!" Surely it was an appropriate occasion for speech.

YES, WE ARE A DUMB CROWD.

Now do not throw anything at me, though it would be a change if you did; I will say no more.

Peter said, "Lord, I would like to be there." It was born of a vision of the glory of Jesus Christ in our humanity walking on the sea. "And he said, Come." There are no manifestations of his communicable perfections from which he will debar us. But there must ever be the difference between the finite and the Infinite, the created and the Creator. He is bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh. There are no manifestations of his communicable perfections from which he will debar us. That is why he said to Peter, "Come." If you see Jesus walking, unshaken and unafraid, through the tossings of human life, I would like you to be like Peter, who said, "Lord, bid me come," that you may hear his reassuring word, "My child, come." Only do not consult with your fellow-Christians, or you will do nothing. "If it be thou," said Peter. That is Peter all over. After all,

WHO ELSE COULD IT HAVE BEEN?

As if Peter had several friends who were accustomed to walk out on the water to meet him coming in from his fishing, and as though he did not recognize just which one it was. You do not always know what Peter means, and I am not sure that he always knew himself. And the Lord said, "Come." Always remember that. The commentators are down upon Peter here. I suppose commentators and enthusiasm are contrary the one to the other. Jesus said, "Come"; he did not forbid him. If you see Jesus walking through conditions through which we walk, may God help you to have some little emotion, that you may say, "My Lord, I would like to be there." Christ did not quote some word of Scripture to Peter, he just said, "Come." Have you watched a mother and her babe? How wonderful that baby is at every stage, as it goes on and on unfolding! My dear friend, you were once the most wonderful little creature that ever appeared on this earth. Then the baby made a new stage of advancement. Do you know what it was?

IT SPOKE FOR THE FIRST TIME.

The little thing uttered some vocal syllable. You and I could have made nothing of it, but to the mother it was a syllable. When her husband returned home at night she met him with her eyes shining, and she said, "John, do you know baby spoke today?" The dear woman beamed for joy that a new orator had appeared in the world. Carry that over. Jesus Christ is glad to hear you speak, and to utter some words of your own that are not printed in a book, something right out of your heart that indicates spontaneity and an open-eyed, fresh vision of him. He puts the seal on it, and he says, "Come." Peter made his venture. Well, what about the venture? My dear friends, there is something here that is a normal thing in our religion. The very essence of being a Christian at all is making a venture. Have you made it? Have you made the great venture of your soul, stepping out on a seeming void and finding a rock beneath? There is a thrill in believing.

THE VERY ESSENCE OF BEING A BELIEVER, and a saved man at all, is that you should have made the venture that Peter made, when he slid over the side of that boat, with the word of Jesus as his inspiration and authority. A great many people have not made it; they are simply members of a Sunday club. Faith, in the very essence of it, is a venture, and I am glad that Peter made it. Do we believe in it? Have we made the venture, or are we just thinking about it? There are many people in London—and I will give them credit for it, that they would like to be Christians, they would like to take the step—who think it looks so utterly unreasonable and foolish. We hear it said, "How many thoughtful people are outside the Church!" Well, some of them do not impress me as being particularly thoughtful. They seem to have no more brains than the rest of us. Peter made the venture. He did not dip his toes into the water to see if it was too cold, and then pull them out again.

"NOTHING VENTURE, NOTHING HAVE."

There are people who have had no experience; they have never stepped out. Faith is the one glorious venture of your soul. Have you made it? The Lord will make short work in that day of big, boasted pretensions, that prevented people from taking the risk and making the venture. It will be found in that day that we did not trust him sufficiently. Venture on him wholly.

Then we think of Peter's failure. He had listened to that word "Come," that word of the Lord that could lift the very ocean out of its bed. "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made." But how little we make of it! Peter got along beautifully for a time; with the spray of the water in his face he walked on the waves, with his eyes fixed on Jesus, and listening to his word. And then—he took his eyes off Jesus. He became conscious that it was half-past three in the morning, and that he, a big fisherman, was walking on the water, and down he went.

"WHY DID I EVER BEGIN,"

he said. Have you ever been there? The spiritual life is not a life of eating and drinking, and money, and clothes, and houses. The very centre of our spiritual life is the unseen but ever-present Saviour.

Poor Peter—he started well, but he failed. Dear friends, I will say it in a sentence. What

THE BIBLE AND THE MINISTER'S MESSAGE.

Rev. W. M. Young, Ph. D., D. D.

"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine." 2 Tim. 4:2.

"But hath in due time manifested his word through preaching, which is committed unto me according to the commandment of God our Saviour." Titus 1:3.

RECENTLY I heard a preacher, who is supposed to be a great leader, say: "It is not what you do, but how you do it that counts." According to that statement, it is not a serious matter that you commit murder, but that you do it in a nice, gentle, courteous way.

Surely it is what you do that counts more than the way in which you do it. It is what you preach that counts more than the way you preach it. We need all the wisdom and skill and eloquence we can acquire for preaching, for nothing is too good to offer to God; but after all that, the history of God's dealings with men; all the messages of the Hebrew prophets; all the teachings of the New Testament, indicate that the message from God is the supremely important thing.

When an important telegram is brought to you, you are not so much concerned about the manner of its delivery or the kind of messenger, but you are extremely concerned about the contents of the message. And yet we know that the messengers of the Gospel are not telegraph boys, but ambassadors for Christ, and a kingdom is often judged by the kind of ambassador it sends. Bishop Quayle says: "Preaching is the art of making a preacher and delivering that." No, I think, rather, the preacher is the channel through which God delivers himself. It was while Peter preached that the Holy Ghost fell upon all that were in the house of Cornelius. God manifests his word through preaching; he also manifests his love, and the power of the Holy Spirit.

STRENGTH FOR THE MINISTER.

Jesus said: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Matt. 4:4. The man of God must feed on the word himself for strength, and strengthen his flock with the same food. Without strong faith in the word of God the minister will be impotent. When God wished to inspire Joshua with strength and courage to lead Israel into the Land of Promise, he said: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and thou shalt have good success. Have I not commanded thee? Be strong and of good courage." Joshua 1:8, 9.

"How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!" Rom. 10:15 (Isa. 52:7). The feet of the minister whose mind is saturated with the word of God will be beautiful upon the mountains; but the man who has criticised the sacred word until he has lost faith in it, will go haltingly up the mountains on wooden legs.

The Apostle John said: "I have written you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." 1 John 2:14. The reason why the young men were strong and had overcome the wicked one was because the word of God abode in them.

What an inspiration to the minister of today is the statement of the great Christian warrior of the First Century, after he had learned the inside of prison life, been beaten with stripes, had fought with beasts at Ephesus, and had long had the care of all the churches: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Phil. 4:13.

"FEED MY SHEEP."

"Feed my sheep" was the command of Christ to his leading apostle. And what shall we feed the sheep? When I was a boy sometimes I used to feed the sheep poor dry pea straw, but the sheep grew lean and ready to die. Christ has committed the flock to our care, and when the Chief Shepherd shall come, we shall be called to account as to what we have fed to the sheep.

One church complained to me as district superintendent that their pastor had fed them on Capital and Labor, Sociology, and such themes, and they asked me to send them a gospel preacher. In that particular case I think their criticism was just; but one might preach the word and yet give vigorous instruction in matters of Capital and Labor and economics, and sociology, and a thousand other modern problems. Jesus says: "Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." Matt. 13:52. Is it not the work of the minister to take the great principles and precepts of the Bible and apply them to modern problems? We are not dealing with the men of the time of Amos, but we may take the principles enunciated by Amos and let their clear light shine on the darkness and corruption of the world in the present year of our Lord. The plumbline of the Lord which Amos saw should be applied to the bowing walls of our own nation.

DOCTRINAL SERMONS.

Dr. Jowett said: "You cannot drop the big themes and create great saints." A fellow-preacher said to Dr. Dale one day: "I hear you are preaching doctrinal sermons to the congregation at Carrs Lane; they will not stand for it." Dr. Dale replied: "They will have to stand it," and through his long and noble ministry, they not only stood it, but welcomed it, and were nourished for the splendid service which that church always rendered to the cause of civil and religious liberty.

BIBLE PREACHERS.

When I began preaching, my mother told me to preach the Bible; she said that I might make mistakes as to what I should tell the people; but God makes no mistakes.

During the Chicago World's Fair, a Congress of Religions was held. The way it was advertised you would have thought it was the greatest thing in the world. They got the brightest men from the Buddhists and the Confucianists to illuminate poor America. They went to a leading man of the East; he was assigned to write on: "New Light on Old Doctrines." He prepared a thesis and sent it around for criticism, and he adopted what he could of the criticisms, and again he sent it to his friends and again they criticised it, and returned it to him till he had it perfect. He was to read the paper at eleven o'clock at the Congress of Religions. He waited for eleven o'clock to strike, when he was to illuminate the world. When the hour had come he walked out, and there was the magnificent audience of eleven women and two men. On that very day in Chicago there was not a building large enough to hold the crowds that went to hear a man that never had a decent school education, but he knew his Bible, that man was D. L. Moody.

Dr. M. A. Matthews, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Seattle, with an audience of 3,000 to 3,500, says: "The results accomplished are entirely due to the operation of the Holy Spirit. We pray much, expect much, and get much. The pure, simple Gospel is preached; Sinai and Calvary are held up to the people. The vicarious atonement is emphasized; the sacrifice of Christ is presented daily; his Deity and his mediatorial work are kept before the people. The whole gospel, and nothing but the gospel, is preached." Is not this the secret of his success? Is not this the secret of success in the preaching of the gospel?

THE BIBLE AND THE VALUE OF A MAN.

Where but in the Bible will the minister find the true value of a man? Some modern scientists tell us that man is a long and well developed amoeba. One writer shows us one of our alleged ancient ancestors in the form of a little tree shrew clinging to the branch of a tree; some others trace us back to some branch of the Simian family, and we come to one of the primates in the form of an ape. But we look into the Bible and in the very first chapter we read: "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Gen. 1:27. Then we come down to the New Testament, and we find that Christ is the "true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," and "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John 1:12. And the Apostle John gives us the true theory of progress when he says: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John 3:2.

JESUS TAUGHT THE VALUE OF A MAN.

Rufus Choate was making a great opening address at the dedication of an asylum for homeless boys, and he said that the saving of one boy was enough to recompense for the expenditure of the $2,000,000 which the building would cost. One of the hearers asked his neighbor in a low voice: "Does it not appear to you that this is an exaggeration of the speaker? Does it not seem to you too much to say that the salvation of one boy is worth $2,000,000?" "No," replied the other, "it would not appear too much to me if that boy were my boy."

Jesus could recognize great values in a blind beggar asking alms by the Jericho Road, and in outcast lepers without the city wall, and in a wretched Lazarus eating the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. Happy will it be when the minister, and the employer and the capitalist, and the war lords, will evaluate men, not as apes or numbers on a time book, but as sons of the living God.

THE BIBLE AND EVANGELISM.

The good minister must not only feed the sheep; he must search for the lost sheep "till he find it." "Do the work of an evangelist," says Paul to the young minister, Timothy. (2 Tim. 4:5). Telling funny stories will not give the Holy Spirit opportunity to convict of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment to come. When we go out to do execution among hardened sinners, we need a good sword: "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Heb. 4:12.

"Let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5:20.

This is the great work in which the minister must use his Bible. Nothing but a complete belief in the great statements of Jesus Christ concerning the doom of the wicked and the rewards of the righteous will inspire a man to be a great soul-winner. Where are the great Universalist soul-winners? Where are the great Unitarian soul-winners? Where are the great destructive critic soul-winners? How can the man who denies the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come, persuade the wicked to flee from the wrath to come?

When we go up to our chamber for the last time, and fold our hands to work no more, there will be one thing that will stand out before us like Pike's Peak in the catalogue of things done or not done, and that will be the winning of souls. Rutherford understood this, when speaking of his own parish he said:

"If one soul from Anworth
Meet me at God's right hand,
My heaven will be two heavens
In Emmanuel's land."

OUR GREAT RESPONSIBILITY.

The great Shepherd of the sheep said: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." He went to the cross and to the tomb to save the lost. And is it not our business to bring men, women and children to a saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ?

Once I had a friend who told me that he went to an insane asylum to see a man who had been care-taker of a railroad bridge over a canal. One day he received a message from the Division Superintendent that a special train was coming through, and to hold the bridge at all hazards. But some of the canal boat captains came and overpersuaded him to let them through. He swung the bridge open, and just then saw the train coming; it plunged into the canal with its loads of passengers to perish in one mad, writhing heap.

That care-taker went insane; and he would walk up and down through all his waking hours, saying: "If I only had! If I only had! If I only had!" It may be that some of us who are ministers of the gospel shall one day behold the wrecks of lost souls, and shall remember that once we were bridge-tenders on the way to the eternal city, and shall say in the bitterness of our souls: "If I only had! If I only had! If I only had!"

"O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion, get thee up into the high mountain. O thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem, lift up thy voice with strength: lift it up: be not afraid: say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!"

A MILD CATECHISM.

BISHOP WILLIAM F. McDOWELL.

AS anyone recently seen what was once very common, viz:

Drunken men reeling home, having spent their wages at the saloon; women and children waiting in terror and dread?

Women working like slaves to support drunken husbands?

Does anyone want to argue that men and women are better off from drinking intoxicating liquors of any grade?

Does anyone want to make a list of people who ought to be privileged to have what liquor they want?

Try the list: Family Physicians? School Teachers? Men running railroad trains? Drivers of automobiles? Fathers? Mothers? Sons? Your sons or your daughters?

Will any candidate or other stump speaker say a good word for whiskey, or the saloon, or any kind of drinking, or any degree of drunkenness in any campaign speech this fall?

What good program, industrial, economic, domestic, social or political, does drinking fit into to advantage?

Is the liquor business or is liquor drinking good for American people in any way, financially, politically, socially or any other way?

Is spending money for liquor a good way to spend it for a man or his family?

What classes or groups in America are interested in a bigger drink bill? Are they not those people in the brewery or whiskey business who seek gain and gain alone?

Are any big factories, or railroads, or banks, mines, or stores disposed to relax their rules concerning the use of liquor by their employees, either on or off duty?

Who is buying the costly bootleg liquor? Is it the men who drive cars or the men who own them?

Do the existence of smugglers and the practice of smuggling constitute a reason for repealing customs laws?

Chicago used to have one saloon for every three hundred men, women and children in its population. Has it as many bootleggers as it used to have saloons?

Has any critic of our present laws offered any new, positive, constructive plan for the regulation of the liquor business, or any plan that has succeeded anywhere?

Do drinking and operating complicated machinery, or running fast flying trains mix at all or at any point? If so, where? On the locomotive? Under the conductor's cap? In the train dispatcher's office? In the office of the General Manager or President?

Will any candidates for any high office this fall appear at any public gathering of their constituents, or make any speeches in their own behalf while they themselves are under the influence of liquor? Will those who attack prohibition, the Eighteenth Amendment or the Volstead Act say in any stump speech one word in favor of liquor, of its free or liberal use, or for drunkenness in any degree? Or will they try to show the advantages of freedom by getting drunk after the old style? Or will any candidate choose to speak anywhere to an audience wholly or largely under the influence of liquor?

What chance would a drunken baseball team have in the pennant race?

Are the various plans, state control, Canadian plan, and the others anything except plans for enabling makers of liquor to sell it and users of liquor to get it in an easy way? Can any traffic in liquor or any free use of liquor ever be made respectable?

Will some one point to any plan for the restraint and regulation of the liquor traffic that has ever been approved or obeyed by the liquor traffic?

But especially will wet or moist candidates frankly tell their constituents how much liquor they are in favor of, what kind of liquor they approve and why they approve it; and the advantages to men, women and children, social, economic, personal, advantages that the use of liquor will bring to their constituents? Especially will they name the people for whom liquor is good?

Jesus Christ the Destroyer of the Works of the Devil.

A. W. ORWIG.

The first work of the devil on the earth was to inject sin into mankind. Beginning with Adam and Eve, by causing them to disbelieve and disobey God, sin has ever since infected the entire human race, spreading like an unquenchable fire. And this has resulted in all the sorrow, sickness, pain and death entailed upon humanity. Ah yes, the propagating power of sin is marvelous and blighting.

The "works" of the devil are indeed many and destructive. Man has no more subtle and powerful foe. Satan is on the track, so to speak, not only of every sinner, but also of every Christian. He pursues them with unrelenting fury. He hurls his "fiery darts" at everybody. He does his best to keep people in the meshes of sin in the church and out of it. The best Christians are by no means exempt from his assaults. But, glory to God, we may be victorious through Christ, strengthening us. And thus we may be saved from all sin, outward and inward, and the final doom of sin.

For our encouragement allow me to quote just a few passages concerning Jesus Christ as the great Deliverer from sin. John the Baptist exultingly cried out, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." And the apostles Peter and John speak of redemption of sin through Christ, while the Apostle John declares that Jesus was manifested to take away our sins. And he also says that the Son of God was manifested to "destroy the works of the devil." The Holy Scriptures further say "Sin shall not have dominion over you." But that does not mean that we shall not be tempted to sin. But by the grace of God we need not sin. Even the perfect Jesus was tempted to commit sin. Thus one of the loftiest attributes of man is the power of choice as to his salvation. He can choose to be saved, and he can choose to neglect his salvation, but is divinely exhorted to choose whom he will save, God or Satan. Dear reader, which choice have you made?

Remember, Jesus was "manifested" not merely to cripple or suppress sin, but to exterminate or destroy it. Shall we be content with anything less? Dare we be, since God commands real holiness of heart and life?

started us on the Christian life? It was seeing him. Your training and upbringing do not amount to anything. It was the vision of him that started us. What keeps us going? The same thing that started us. Faith in him, and in the power of his Word. When you take your eyes off him, you soon find yourself slipping and sinking. "As he is, so are we in this world." But with that look at him, how strong we are, how brave we are, how overcoming we are, how triumphant we are, and the troubles and trials of life are just as nothing to us! That tossing sea was as nothing to Peter, any more than to his Lord, when he had his eyes fixed on him. Keep your eyes on Jesus, then

YOU ARE UNSINKABLE.

Our faith carries some glorious possessions with it. Which side of it are we experiencing? Keep your eyes upon him. We may begin in the Spirit, and yet slip down into the flesh. We begin with great enthusiasm, and then the Lord gives us a little bit of a test, and we have discovered that in the flesh there dwells no good thing. Paul, one of the greatest intellects that ever lived, a man with tremendous will-power, was out to persecute the Church of Christ, and he would have done it if Christ had not unhorsed him on the road to Damascus. Paul said, "I know that in me dwells no good thing." "But I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." You remember, some years ago we heard a good deal about Coue, who advised people to say, "Every day and in every way I am getting better and better." I would suggest that each morning when you get up you should say, "I can do all things this day through Christ, who strengtheneth me."

I SUGGESTED THAT AT A MEETING, and, do you know, that audience forgot its decorum and cheered; it touched their conscience—they realized that was something infinitely better than Coueism. It was the Word of the Lord by his inspired apostle through the Holy Ghost.

Dear old Peter! down he went when he took his eyes off Jesus.

"And every virtue we possess,
And every victory won,
And every thought of holiness,
Are His alone."

"Looking to Jesus." It is not an inward motive. It is an objective faith in an objective personal Christ. There on the throne; here in the world. And Peter cried, "Lord, save me!" His eyes went back to Christ. Christ comes back to his right place in the picture. Not now the wind and the waves, and all these natural considerations. When he said, "Lord," his eyes went with his voice. Just do the thing that Peter did;

GET TO THE TRUE CENTRE,

and you are bound to rise. I do not care what a pickle you may be in. At Peter's cry, immediately Christ shot out his hand and laid hold of him, and said, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Jesus did not say, "Peter, why did you start?" What he did say was, "Why did you stop? What weakened you?" If his Word has still its ancient power—and it has, for we have the power of Pentecost today to make it more triumphant—the Lord does not like to see us bungle. He does not like to see Sunday school teachers getting scarcer. He does not like to see you slipping and sprawling, and not witnessing for him out there in the world. The Lord loves to see you living out the triumphant truths of his Gospel in the midst of the winds and waves of the world. He loves victory; he hates defeat. He loves health; he does not love sickness. He said, "Why did you doubt, Peter?" but he never got an answer. If you lose faith in him, and if you lose hope, and he challenges you,

"I DEFY YOU TO JUSTIFY YOUR FEARS and your failures. When Peter was challenged, it was a fine chance for him. He might have said in answer to Christ's question, "Why did you doubt?" "Lord, excuse me, with all due deference, this is a little overdone—why did I do it? Listen to that wind; look at those waves. Do you wonder that I doubted?" But he never opened his mouth, strange to say, to justify his failure. No, not a syllable. He might have said, as Tennyson says, "There lives more faith in honest doubt." But if he had made a statement like that, the Lord would have let him down into the water again. If you are not prepared to say "Hallelujah," he knows how to bring you to nothing. When we lose touch with him, we are worse than other people. The backslider is worse than those who have never trusted Christ. They can point to us, and say, "What a failure!" and the sting of that may lie in its truth. The only answer is to get restored. "All things are possible to him that believeth." Here is a picture, dear friends, of justification, sanctification, and glory. Peter took his eyes off the waves, off himself and his fears, and fastened them on Christ. Held and upheld in the hands of the Saviour. Since he held Peter, a nail has been driven through his hand, and his grip today is all the tighter, the grip of that all-glorious and all-sufficient Saviour.—Christian Herald.

FACTS FROM THE FIRING LINE.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."—Hos. 4:6.

Prohibition has wrought miracles of moral, social and economic redemption, but thousands of dries do not know it. Every pastor is urged to reprint the following Fact in the Church Calendar, or read it from the pulpit to offset the destructive wet propaganda which appears in many of the secular newspapers. A new Fact appears in this place in each issue.

Christopher P. Connolly, the well-known magazine writer, computing from official vital statistics, shows that prohibition saved 150,800 during the first ten years. This exceeds our total loss of life in the World War as shown by government records by nearly 25,000.

Sin in the Heart and Life.

A. W. ORWIG.

Sin in the heart and life is a far greater calamity than any physical evil that could befall us. A thousand times rather die with the most painful disease than die in sin with its dreadful consequences. The Bible declares that "the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," and that "out of the heart are the issues of life," also that "out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness." What an awful picture of the human heart, by nature, and especially when yielding to its innate tendencies!

Because we were born in sin is no reason why we should live and die in sin. A godly man in India, badly mangled by a tiger, suffered intense pain, and yet kept praising God. When asked why he did so, he replied, "Thank God that I was not overtaken by sin, but simply by a misfortune." Oh may the Holy Spirit show us the real odiousness of sin, with all its defiling tendencies and great peril! For we are not likely to renounce sin thoroughly until we loathe it heartily, and see it as our greatest enemy.

But we must not overlook the fact that the word sin is used in two different senses in the Bible,—first, as sin committed, and second as a sinful nature inherited. The Psalmist David said, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." This condition is mentioned as the "carnal mind," "the body of sin," "indwelling sin," "the old man," and other terms. Sometimes it is spoken of by certain writers as "inbred sin" or "original sin."

Call it by whatever name you please, it is an inward foe or principle that more or less remains after conversion, and sometimes asserts itself in wrong tempers and affections, in pride, lust, worldly-mindedness, and other evils contrary to a truly Christian spirit. Many persons can thus testify. Do any of us inquire, "Lord, is it I?"

George Fox, founder of the Friends Church, declared that, after he became a Christian, he found something within him that would not keep sweet and patient, and that on earnestly seeking deliverance the evil was dethroned. Indwelling sin, like a hidden fire, is liable to break out any time and betray one into humiliating defeat. I once heard a Christian woman say that she had a very bad temper and that it gave her much trouble. Another woman, who deeply lamented the remains of the carnal mind, but who was finally delivered from it, testified at a meeting, "Night before last I could not sleep because I realized that sin was in my heart; but last night I could hardly sleep because sin was out, so great was my joy."

Now this is not saying that truly converted and regenerated persons cannot help sinning. They can help it by the grace of God, for he declares, "My grace is sufficient for thee." True, some do occasionally yield to sin, but because of not properly using the various means of grace. But when the germ or seed of sin is destroyed, there is far less likelihood of sinning. All Christians need to "watch and fight and pray" against the wiles of the devil and the polluting tendencies of the world. The reason why there are so many weak and cold Christians is because they do not press forward into the higher regions of divine grace. The divine command is, "Launch out into the deep." Also, "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection."

Today.

CLYDE EDWIN TUCK.

All things are glad in Nature; nothing grieves,
The earth is filled with summer's surging song;
Wind-harps among the blossom-tangled leaves
In tune with droning bees, and in the sheaves
Of golden grain the minstrel crickets throng.

Today is bringing to all hearts a gift
Of joy to soothe each grief and drown each sigh.

Slow argosies of white cloud-masses drift
Among the mist-hung hills that proudly lift
Their crowns into the blue lakes of the sky.

They pass into my soul, there to abide,
The beauty and the peace of summer time;
Today is mine, and I am satisfied—
Into my yesterdays it shall not glide;
The world is new today, and is sublime.

Today love's springs gush by life's dusty road;

May I not cheer some one along the way?
Let me a rose plant by some dark abode,
Or tell some heart encumbered with its load,
That God gives heaven here and now—
today!

---GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD---

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE.

Samuel J. Williams.

"We are living on the top of a volcano," Rev. Hanauer, a Hebrew-Christian life-long resident of the Holy Land, declared today in an interview upon the future prospects of this little land of the Bible. "At the first sign of weakening of the British strong arm, probably at a moment of serious trouble in Egypt or India, another vindictive Arab massacre will terrorize the Jews," he prophesied.

Facing the most dire hatred imaginable, and an Arab-Jewish national conflict which will eventually culminate in the battle of Armageddon, a small stream of Jewish immigrants steadily flow into Palestine to strengthen the Zionist forces. With Zionist flags unfurled, 300 youthful pioneers happily walked up the gangplank after a fatiguing two-day journey in cramped railroad coaches across Europe. They had come from Poland to board the steamer Sinaia upon which I sailed to Palestine in May as leader of a pilgrimage of the Travel Institute of Bible Research.

Upon the invitation of a temporary chairman I addressed the Zionists using a brilliant high school lassie of Toronto, Canada, as interpreter. Later, several of them gathered in a small circle to hear my ideas on the soon coming of the "kingly" Messiah, Jesus Christ, who would regather all Israel and Judah to the promised land in accordance with biblical prophecy. Although I realized the tremendous faith in the Zionist movement that had torn them away from their parents in Europe, I could not keep silent on the terrible period of "Jacob's trouble" which lies just ahead for these sacrificing pioneers.

At the first sight of the Holy Land, a rush for the bow of the ship brought the Jews from last minute packing in their cabins and staterooms. Jaffa, the ancient seaport from which Jonah set sail, could be seen in the distance. Tel Aviv, the modern 100 percent Jewish city of 45,000 inhabitants, lay on the sands north of Jaffa. On behind stretched vast orchards of oranges, lemons, grapefruit, almonds, and vineyards, upon the coastal plain of Sharon. Up went the Zionist flag. Filled with enthusiasm to fill the ranks in the redemption of Palestine from its 1900 years of desolation, the new-comers were unaware that they were helping to set the stage for the final conflict before Christ's return as revealed unto us in Ezekiel 38:39.

Decrying Zionism as a vain human effort to establish millennial conditions, the Orthodox look for a heavenly Messiah to be revealed shortly to restore their ancient Davidic kingdom and inaugurate the Millennium. Every day they pray in synagogues and at the historic Wailing Wall along the western wall of Solomon's Temple area. Here at the heart of Judaism they fervently pray for the return of the lost glory of Israel, the regathering of their nation, the rebuilding of the Temple, and for the coming of the Messiah.

When the young Zionist pioneers play Sabbath football and attend Sabbath talkie-movies instead of praying at the synagogue the Orthodox are found bemoaning and even protesting. Carried away by British police from the Jerusalem football field recently, a dozen Orthodox had been wounded in a mass attack of 5,000 in an unsuccessful attempt to break up a Sabbath game. They lament this desecration, thinking that it will incur the condemnation of God upon their nation.

The "atheist" accusation against the Zionist pioneers made by the priest was confirmed on a visit to twenty agricultural colonies with three classmates from Asbury College, Wilmore, Ky., stopping off in Palestine on a world missionary tour. They were Eugene Erny of Chicago, Virgil Kirkpatrick of Mansfield, Ohio, and Byron Crouse of Greensboro, North Carolina. Leaving Jerusalem in an auto overloaded with musical instruments, New Testaments, Christian tracts, cameras, food and bedding, we had a most interesting seven-hours' run to our first Jewish colony passing and visiting such sacred sites as the Mount of Olives, Mizpah, Ramah, Beeroth, Bethel, Shiloh, Jacob's Well, Sychar, Shechem, the Samaritan synagogue on Mt. Gerizim, Mt. Ebal, Samaria, Dothan and down into the great plain of Megiddo, called Armageddon in the book of Revelation.

Descending into the valley of Jezreel through the ancient town of Jezebel and Ahab we beheld a land, desolate and full of malaria breeding swamps before the war, now blossoming as a rose. Wheat fields, orange and banana groves, extensive vineyards hanging ripe bunches or grapes a foot long, and forests of newly planted trees met our gaze at every turn.

Driving up the slopes of hill Moreh, on the opposite side of which is Endor, where Saul consulted the witch, we entered a picturesque colony of white stucco dormitories with red tile roofs and surrounded by luxurious flower gardens. It was called Ain Harod because of its situation near the well of Harod where Gideon selected his 300 warriors. We found the whole village eating supper in one dining hall, for this was a communal type settlement. After accepting the invitation to eat of the abundance of their fresh vegetables and other farm products, we learned that these youthful pioneers between 20-30 years were here attempting to live a life in common, very much like the Bolsheviks in Russia. The commune owned everything. No wages were given. All individual needs were supplied from the communal treasury. All the children received equal care in an up-to-date nursery. Wives, instead of performing the duties of housewives, took their places as "workers" in the division of labor. Some worked in the kitchen, nursery, laundry, shoe-shop, gardens, dairy barns and, even some chose to work alongside the men in the fields.

Proudly they admitted that they had no synagogue, (place of worship) desired no rabbis, (religious teachers) and had substituted Socialism for religion. We played Christian songs with our brass quartet in the schoolhouse, and distributed only a few of the New Testaments for they were not in demand by these who boasted of their irreligious attitude.

In the pre-Zionist colonies, however, settled about 1882 with financial aid from the benevolent Baron Edmond de Rothchild of Paris who has invested $50,000,000 in helping Russian and Roumanian refugees, fleeing from the bloody pogroms of eastern Europe, to find new homes on farm lands of Palestine, we found a semi-religious attitude and were warmly received as messengers of the Gospel. Our auto was stormed for Hebrew New Testaments after we had played a couple of rousing Christian militant hymns at the prosperous orange-growing colony of Peta Tikvah.

"Ninety percent of my fellow-countrymen returning to Palestine now are unbelievers," declared an orthodox Jew from America, engaged in poultry-raising near Tel Aviv. "My nation was dispersed from Palestine in 70 A. D. because of their unbelief. Then 1,500,000 suffered cruel death in the struggle with the Romans, and God will not allow them to reconstruct a national life in unbelief," said the young prophet. "The nations of the world will soon gather against Jerusalem to battle," he prophesied. "Then a great universally recognized leader will appear from heaven to defeat the enemies of Israel and to introduce a new era of world peace."

Personally, I can foresee a renewal of the Arab-Jewish conflict which cost several hundred lives in the bloody Palestine riots of 1929. At the next big outbreak, probably Pan-Islam will rise in arms against the British Empire causing another world war and ending in the final battle of Armageddon. After the destruction of our present civilizations, (Jeremiah 30:11), it is thought by multitudes of Christians, Jesus Christ will return to earth and establish his millennial kingdom of peace ruling the world in righteousness from the great capital, Jerusalem. Christians living now in Jerusalem are thinking and conversing daily about these prophetic events and the signs pointing to their near fulfillment. Before a notable body of high Government officials and distinguished Arab and Jewish business men who were honoring his seventieth birthday with a banquet this afternoon at the Palace Hotel, Mr. Shelley, the Australian president of the Jerusalem Chamber of Commerce, openly and boldly confessed, "I have only sought to live amongst you as a humble believer in the Lord Jesus Christ who died for me on Calvary, near by, and to whose return I longingly look forward."

FORT FAIRFIELD, MAINE.

We are in the third week of the revival campaign here, and the Lord is graciously pouring out his blessings upon us.

Our first meeting held during the month of June was at Washburn, Maine. We were somewhat hampered by rain and cool weather, making it impossible to hold more than half of the services in the tent, but a goodly number of souls were blessed and the influence of the meeting was felt over a large scope of country. The meeting here is being held in a tent located on the school grounds close in. The tent has "run over" several times. People are coming from towns from ten to thirty miles distant, and from New Brunswick, Canada. After this meeting, which will close August 2, we will have charge of Robinson camp, (under the auspices of the Reformed Baptist Church), August 7-17. Following this meeting another campaign will open at Mars Hill. These meetings, with the exception of the camp, are being sponsored by some of the leading laymen of this section. All churches are represented among them. These laymen, alarmed over the terrible spiritual dearth prevailing in this section, and seeing nothing being done about it, decided that they would do something themselves to give souls a chance to find God. I have never found finer men anywhere, and the gospel cannot be preached too strong and straight for them! In fact, a "pussyfoot" would last just one sermon. Amen! These brethren have the co-operation of several preachers. Already a great "stir" is on in the county. The brethren say that this series of meetings has started more religious "movements" than have been known hereabouts for many years, if ever. They are planning to make this movement permanent by effecting an organization—an interdenominational association. And they believe, and intend to do what they can to further it, that the movement will spread all over the state.

This statement in the Sunday School Times of July 11, by a pastor in New Hampshire, will show that something needs to be done. Under this caption, "New England's Spiritual Death—A Call to Revival," he says: "Of the 7,000 ordained ministers residing in New England, it is safe to say that not more than 1,000 would definitely take their position as believers in the deity of Christ, his atonement for sin, and the authority of the Scriptures. Of this number, a large proportion have lost their vision and are discouraged." Thank God for faithful laymen, anywhere, who love the truth of God and souls, and are willing to give of their time and money to give the GOOD NEWS to others. These men are not come-outers or church fighters, but men of stalwart faith, who intend, by the help of God, to resist with all their powers the destructive "gospel" that is being propagated by so many pulpits today. The true preachers are standing by them and urging them on. But the modernistic crowd (one of whom, just a few days ago, criticised Peter for starting all this revival trouble on the day of Pentecost), is running around in circles and wondering whereof this thing will grow. For these men are men, not only of influence in the churches, but they carry mighty "prosperous" pocketbooks. And their number is increasing as the days go by.

Aroostook county is the largest and richest county in Maine. I have never seen a more wonderful country anywhere. The potato is king up here. To look out over hundreds of acres of potatoes in full bloom is a thrilling sight. Up-to-date homes with lawns beautifully kept are seen everywhere. The Englishman, who sometime ago, criticised American towns because of their unsightliness, evidently did not "travel" this far up! His criticism wouldn't "fit" hereabouts.

We are having great song services under the direction of C. P. Gossett. He is religious, cheerful, a hard worker, and the people are delighted with his work. He is superior as a soloist. We pray, work, and rejoice together as souls find the Lord, and come up to their Pentecost. At the close of the campaign I shall have more to say of this movement, and the brethren sponsoring it.

GOOD MEETING IN EL DARA, ILLINOIS.

It has been some time since I reported my work. We have been busy in the white harvest field gathering a few sheaves for the Master. We have had a revival effort in two of our churches, fairly good meetings for the times. Brothers Moore and Patterson were our helpers and I have never had better help. I have held a number of meetings for the brethren, two short ones at Middletown, Ohio, one at West Liberty, Ohio, and one on the Milton charge. Great good was accomplished in all of these meetings. We give God all the glory.

We just closed one of the best meetings I have had in recent years with my son in El Dara, Ill. Near a half hundred were definitely blessed. Taking everything into consideration this was a most wonderful revival. The thermometer stood around 100 degrees, sometimes above. The farmers were in the largest wheat crop they have had in years. The crowds were small, but in midst of so many handicaps our God heard and answered prayer. After the general break came we hardly had a barren altar service to the close. When my son went to El Dara three years ago he found a discouraged, scattered membership, with an old dilapidated hull as a place of worship. In the three years he has gotten together as fine a group of folk as you can find anywhere. With their help, loyalty and co-operation they have built one of the most beautiful modern churches to be seen in a town of this size. He, his good little wife, and loyal people have labored hard to bring the church to the place where this revival could be made possible. The pastor and wife have the confidence and love of the entire town and they certainly love their people and their work. He took into the church a nice class at the close of the meeting, with more to follow. My younger son, Paul, was with us and added no little to the meeting with his saxophone, guitar and singing.

We have never labored among a finer people than the El Dara people. So many of them were like the rich Young Ruler, one thing they lacked, the pearl of great price. Many, thank God, found the wonderful pearl. May the blessings of our God be upon the pastor, his family and wonderful people.

We leave the 23rd for a camp in Indiana. Our meeting will begin here at Oddville, the first of August. We want all who know the worth of prayer to remember these meetings in their petitions and do not forget.

Your little brother,

friendly attitude toward the Bible, and the Christ of the Bible. Modern education is shot through with the teachings of evolutionists. Animalism is strong in textbook, classroom and lecture. The whole matter of the soul and the future state is blurred with a big question mark. Many of the young voters are church members, but church membership has become cheap and easy. Our Lord Jesus said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Millions of young people who have been brought into the church know utterly nothing of the self-denial and crossbearing that are necessary to become a disciple of Christ. It is understood by every one that has intelligence enough for consideration in matters of this character, that joining the church today means almost nothing. It does not require repentance, regeneration or consistent Christian living in harmony with the teachings of the New Testament. The vast millions of young people who are coming to voting age in the church, and out of it, are not Christians; they are not possessed with high moral, spiritual ideals. They have not deep convictions inwrought by the Spirit of Christ, for which they are willing to separate themselves from the godless multitudes, to sacrifice and suffer.

If, somehow, the preachers could be aroused, get a conception of the dangerous conditions with which we are surrounded, and determine to pray, to preach, to fast, to visit, to warn, to exhort, have protracted meetings, go on week after week until they could awaken the multitudes in the church and out, who are dead in trespasses and in sin, we might be able to bring the mass of humanity between twelve and thirty-five years of age, to Christ. The thing is not impossible, if God can have human instrumentality through which to work; but somebody is going to have to get a soul passion—let me say a Christ passion—for souls. There must be some holy men and women who are willing to sacrifice and suffer, if the young people are saved. If these young voters are not saved, it is a serious question whether or not the American republic will survive, to say nothing of a fearful over-crowding of hell in that future state that awaits the impenitent wicked.

I don't care to associate with any jolly preacher who has no burden for souls, and no deep concern or anxiety with reference to the future of the nation, and the future state of human souls. We have come to a period in our history when people of any degree of intelligence, ought to be serious and prayerful. They ought to unite themselves in tremendous protest against wickedness and a great prayer to God for a revival that will touch with divine power all parts of this republic. Some time when you are not too busy, think about these things.

Asbury College.

The first semester of the present college year of Asbury College will open September the 22nd.

In my travels, I find a surprisingly large number of parents who desire to educate their children in Asbury College. I doubt if there is a safer place on the continent. Asbury is beautiful for situation. The surrounding country is remarkably attractive. The buildings are so constructed and arranged that they have an inspiring and cultural effect.

The school has a great Faculty. The men and women on the teaching staff of Asbury College are remarkably well equipped for their work, and deeply interested in the students who are placed under their care. There is a fine, healthful, cheerful, moral, spiritual atmosphere at Asbury. Students who come here fall in love with the institution. They respect the Faculty and have fine fellowship with the student body. I do not believe there is a more sane and safe place for the education of young people anywhere. Young people seeking a place for their education and equipment for useful lives will do well to acquaint themselves with the advantages of Asbury College. Parents who desire to place their children in a fine, moral, spiritual atmosphere cannot find a better place than Asbury. The people here believe the Bible. In teaching and life, they are in harmony with all the fundamental truths of Bible Christianity. They are in the fullest sympathy with the doctrines and experiences taught by John Wesley, the founder of Methodism: the fall of man, his exceeding sinfulness, the necessity of repentance, regeneration, entire sanctification, and a righteous life devoted to the service of God and humanity.

Those who may be interested, write for catalog or other information, to Dean W. Brandt Hughes, Wilmore, Ky.

Faithfully yours,
H. C. MORRISON.

We Shall See What We Shall See.

Many years ago when I was much younger than I am now, that famous old preacher, A. A. Niles, long since gone to be with God, with that peculiar smile that radiated his shining face, asked me the following question: "Morrison, what would occur if an irresistible force should strike an immovable object?"

That was a pretty tough question. I did not undertake to answer it, and am not ready to answer it now. Perhaps, when the conflict between the Pope and Mussolini is settled we shall have an answer to this question. The Pope is supposed to be immovable; Mussolini irresistible. We shall see what we shall see.

Just to Remind You

That those who have made five-year pledges for the Asbury Theological Seminary, please to send in their second payment as soon as convenient. School opens in September and we shall want to know what we may depend on in the way of assisting the young men who will want to attend the Seminary the coming year. A number have already sent their second installment on their pledge. We are not pressing any one, but simply remind you that, if convenient, let us have your payment by September 1.

LOVE'S NO.

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

THAT is a queer title to give to an article, but after we shall have finished its explanation, I think you will understand what I mean by it.

Jesus, in speaking to his disciples in John 13:7, says: "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." This indicates that the disciples, in their limited knowledge and short-sighted vision, could not comprehend the Master's teaching at that time.

Is it not true that we are of the same disposition? Are there not times when we wonder why things are not just as we desire them to be? We can see no reason why the Lord does not readily grant our requests, when the affirmative answer would mean so much to us, as we suppose. But, remember that his ways are past our understanding, and that in the by and by he will make it plain to us why his answer to our petition was a No instead of a Yes.

I recall reading where some one said that, "God nothing does, nor suffers to be done, but we ourselves would do, if we could see the end of all events as well as he." How true this is! We judge by "feeble sense," but when the devious leadings of his providence are understood we know why clouds were sent instead of sun, and why the smile gave place to briny tears; why the heart with sorrow should be torn, when we longed for happiness and contentment. In such times, let us do as did David, when he said, "What time I am afraid, I will trust in the Lord." And what Paul declared when he gave vent to that utterance which has been the solace of many a despondent, discouraged heart. We know that "all things work together for good to them who love the Lord." That promise is one of the Lord's peaks of deliverance which the Devil cannot overtop, for it takes in ALL THINGS.

We recently read something that is very comforting to those of us who may wonder why "Love's No" is so often the answer to our prayers. The illuminating comment on the scripture, John 13:7, was written by F. P. LeBuffe, and will be read with interest by those who may chance to see this article. I trust when you shall have read it there may come into your hearts that submissive assurance that, whether God's answer is Yes or No to our petitions, he will grant us the best there is for us. The comment is as follows:

When we were children in the "dead dead days beyond recall," we would often hurry to our loving mother, to entreat and beg in childhood's most artful way for a gift on which we had set our hearts. There at her knees, with our hands fondly clasping hers and our eyes peering deep into her own for answer, we would plead in our childish error for a gift that would have been to our harm. What then did mother do? Refuse us she did, as her best love prompted, though she knew denial meant a shadow over our expectant face and a twinging at our little heart. With our narrow grasp of things and of their values, we could not know the reason of her way, but now that the days have rolled by and we have stood on the heap of moulded years, as mother stood in the days gone by, do we not thank her for a love that was wisely cruel enough to say us nay?

As with child and mother, so with us and our Lord at times. "Children of a larger growth"—and yet of how much larger?—we come to our Lord and plead for a gift that is all to our liking; health for ourselves or our ailing loved ones, a richer store of this world's goods, success before the public eye, or a deeper draught from the fountain of knowledge. For these and a host of other trinkets, that trick a passing love from men, we beg, thinking therein to find a span of happiness that will last us well. We have prayed long and hard and we beg it of him in his own dear Name and for his love for us, and we want it so. Expectant we wait with hands eager to grasp the cherished boon—and sometimes it does not come. And then? Shall we scant in our manners as ill-bred children, sulk and pout and question the wisdom of our blessed Lord? Or shall we bethink ourselves of the lesson learnt from long ago, and trust our Friend, before whose prudence mother's is as naught? He stands, not on the tiny mound of a handful of years, but upon the mountains of eternity, far separate from the darkening shadows of life, and he views all things with the boundless wisdom of God. The health we crave for may bring the chance to ruin. Riches, as is often their wont, may bring in their train forgetfulness of God and hardness of heart to fellowmen. Success may blind our eyes to the light of God's grace, which would teach us the proper value of time's baubles, and the will-o'-the-wisp of human lore may lead our feet from off the straight and narrow path of holy and humble submission to God's Church, that all must walk, if they would be without fear when the summons comes to hurry home. But with the wonted shortsightedness of children we may not see the off-side of the gift we ask. Yet when our prayer is not heard, let us trust the larger wisdom of our Friend, let us yield, if not joyfully, at least with good grace, to his prudent denial. We may not see it all just now, but when the years have lapsed by and we stand at his side on "eternity's jubilant shore," shall we not thank him, as we thank dear mother now, for a love that was strong enough to say "No" to a foolish child?

Jesus, lover of my soul, if ever I ask for a gift that would work harm, I beg you now to keep it from my hands. In my ignorance I may plead, I may beg, I may grow importunate, but harken not to my prayer. Give or bestow or take away, as you think best, since you are wise and I am very ignorant. Just guide me home to you, until life's running shadows fall their longest. Whether I am sick or well, rich or poor, learned or in ignorance—just see me safely home.

"And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh, God's plans go on as best for you and me; How, when we called, he heeded not our cry, Because his wisdom to the end could see. And e'en as prudent parents disallow Too much of sweet to craving babyhood, So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good."

Marriage, Divorce, Birth Control.

REV. A. S. HUNTER.

RECENTLY, Dr. H. C. Morrison published a series of editorials in THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD on the relation of the white and colored races, and the future of the white race. He scents danger ahead for the white race, because he sees it losing out, and its God-given prestige slipping from it. There is no denying the underlying facts, whether or not we accept all his conclusions.

It is undeniable that the white race, especially the American section of it, is trending toward race suicide. The birth-rate among what we now know as "Americans," is declining, and that falling off in population is being supplied by the colored and un-American races, both here and throughout the world. This decline of births among the white race is due, not to legitimate natural causes, but is because we discard the Divine law in the matter.

First, there are millions of unmarried people among us, of both sexes, who are at the marriageable age. Tens of thousands of women choose to remain unmarried and hold a job, rather than marry and raise a family. Tens of thousands of men realize that they cannot afford to marry, with the present artificially expensive standard of living.

Then, thousands of couples marry with the avowal of no children. Many times, both parties continue to hold salaried positions, and are able to live luxuriously; and do not want children to interfere with the business and pleasures. Other thousands of couples have one or two children. Many women seem to prefer poodles to babies.

All of this is foreign to and inimical to God's design for us. Sex is for the propagation of the race, and antedates man's fall. In man's original, unfallen state, God said to him to "be fruitful and multiply"; and he has not recalled that command. Scriptural marriage, one man and one woman for life, is God's safeguard for the sex relation in our present fallen state; and also his provision for the rearing of children. So-called "high society," and not a little that is not reckoned "high", revolts against that. The colored races, and most of the foreign peoples of the white race, are seldom guilty of that.

Now, if the white race, the custodian of the gospel for 1900 years past, will deliberately disregard God's known law, while other races, with or without the gospel, follow it; why should not God allow the white race to fall by its own sins, and the colored races supersede it? Has he a perpetual covenant with the white race, as such, as with the Jews through Abraham? He has cast off the Jews (temporarily) because of their disobedience! Why not the white race?

It is true that civilization and progress have come, almost exclusively, through the white race, and doubtless by God's design. Our superior progress and culture have been due, above all else, to the gospel which we have had. But now, with all our gospel light, and with centuries of tradition back of us, we are renouncing the Divine truth of God, and substituting the human fiction of evolution! We are rejecting the Deity of Jesus, and exalting the affirmed divinity of man! We are spurning God's plan and purpose of holy marriage and families, and substituting free-love, either straight, or in "companionate marriage," or by easy and quick divorce, and so-called re-marriage. With free-love, easy divorce, illicit relations out of marriage, and childless marriages, all in open disobedience to God's known will; why should not the white race lose its prestige?

BIRTH CONTROL.

Realizing the physical and mental unfitness of so many for parenthood, the godless scientists are now advocating birth-control as the way to stay our further physical and mental degeneration. They disregard the question of moral fitness to be parents and train children.

What is needed infinitely more than medical clinics to decide who may and who may not marry, is the old gospel of salvation; to have people born of the Spirit, made new creatures in Christ and purified in heart! When people are right with God in their own souls, and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and are taught from the Bible, there is little risk in the way of marriage and families. That is God's clinic for marriage, as well as everything else. All the progress that the white race has ever made beyond other races, was made without this recent fad of birth-control by the state! "Birth-control" of the godless, by the godless (and no others want it), must be a miserable failure, if it is tried! It will not improve marriage, but will multiply illicit relations out of marriage!

The present deplorable situation has come about because we have so largely left God out, or have ruled him out, of our affairs! Had the preachers of the United States (not now to go outside), during the past fifty years (not to go farther back), been preaching the gospel of Christ as Wesley and our pioneer Methodists preached it, we would now have none of these problems on our hands! Think of more than a thousand souls converted, and nearly as many sanctified in one of those early camp meetings! Add to that the hundreds and thousands converted and sanctified from week to week, through the year, under the ministry of the pastors! Such gospel ministry was the source of our racial and national greatness! But, recently, the churches (all denominations, except some of the newer and smaller) have imitated Judah in forsaking God, the Fountain of Living Waters, and hewing out for themselves broken, leaky cisterns, which can hold no water!

If the white race, these United States, and Methodism, are worthy of preservation and continued primacy, no doubt God will see to it that they continue. Otherwise, why should they?

A Last Minute Help.

If you are a Sunday school teacher and pressed for time, you will always find Arnold's Commentary full of rich spiritual truths on the S. S. Lesson. You can't afford to be without it at this closing-out price of 50 cents.

Satan knows he cannot frighten saints with hideous creatures or overcome them by coarse enticement. He stands at the portals of the holy of holies as an "angel of light." He does not openly attack, he diverts. The church that lost its Christ was full of good works (Rev. 2:4). Activities are multiplied that meditation may be ousted, and organizations are increased that prayer may have no chance. Souls may be lost in good works, as surely as in evil ways. The one concern of Satan is to keep the saints from prayer. He fears nothing from prayerless studies, prayerless work, prayerless religion. He laughs at our toil, mocks our wisdom, but trembles when we pray.—Selected.

We have handled several books on this subject, but this is quite the most convincing one. ### HOW NELLIE GOT RIGHT.

Nellie had just recovered from a serious illness. "Mama," she said, "I prayed last night."

"Did you, dear? Don't you always pray?"

"Oh, yes, but I prayed a real prayer last night. I don't think I ever prayed a real prayer before. I lay awake a long time. I thought what a naughty girl I had been so often. I tried to reckon up all the bad things I had done; there seemed to be lots of them. And I tried to remember what I did one week, but there seemed to be such a heap; then I knew I had not remembered them all. And I thought, what if Jesus had come to me when I was ill? Then I thought about Jesus coming to die for bad people, and how he delights to forgive them."

"So I got out of bed, and knelt down, and tried to tell Jesus how bad I was; and I asked him to think over the sins that I could not remember. Then I waited and gave him time to think of them; and when I thought he had remembered them all, I asked him to forgive them. And I am sure he did, Mama, because he said he would. Then I felt so happy, and I got into bed and did not feel a bit afraid of God any more."

"Blessed are those whose iniquities are forgiven and whose sins are covered."—Herald of Light.

Dear Aunt Bettie: As I looked at the picture of the ministerial group of students I prayed God that I might be able to do something to help them to carry the Gospel to this sinful world. I take your paper and enjoy it so much. It comes next to my Bible. I am one of your elderly nieces, but I like to read page ten. I give my paper to my granddaughter. She loves to read page ten. I read about the revivals and it makes me hungry for one too. I am hoping and praying that we may have a good old-fashion revival. Our minister does work so hard. I ask an interest in your prayers that the leaders in our church may in some way be aroused to their great responsibility.

Grandma Glaze.
Hitchcock, S. D.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you please let a Pennsylvania girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I am fourteen years old. I am in the seventh grade. I have been reading page ten. It is very good. There are nine of us in our family. I have two sisters and four brothers. I have one sister dead; she was drowned in Conneaut Creek, Dec. 12, 1926. I have a brother and sister saved and both parents are saved. My mother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. My birthday is January 12. Have I a twin? Who can guess my middle name? It begins with M and ends in E, and has five letters in it. I am a Christian. This is my first letter to The Herald. I hope Mr. W. B. doesn't get hold of this letter.

Ethel M. Abbott.
Rt. 2, Conneautville, Pa.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Please ask through the Children's Page if any one knows of a home of charity in the south that an old lady fifty years of age might have a chance to enter. The winters in Kentucky are cold and cause her to suffer with neuritis, so she is unable to work and has no one to depend on. She is in great need of a home. Address all answers to Mrs. Gertrude Ricks, Rt. 7, Cadiz, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you move over and give a little Tennessee boy room to join your happy band of boys and girls? I live on the Cumberland Mountain. It is three miles high. Ruth Knowles, you have the same last name as I have. I guess Frank Knowles is your brother. I guess your first name is Deborah. I have a brother named Paul. He is sixteen. I am twelve years old, and am in the seventh grade. My schoolteacher is Mr. Howard Sanders. I made the highest grade in the room on final examination. I go to Sunday school and church most every Sunday. Martha Allen, I guess your name to be Mary. Am I right? Hope so. My father is a Methodist preacher. My Sunday school teacher is Mrs. D. H. Bryan. I love the Lord, don't you? We take The Herald and I enjoy page ten very much. I will appreciate all letters received. I will answer them all, and will exchange photos with any one.

My teacher is Miss Christine Vest, from Kentucky. I have three brothers and two sisters living and one sister and three brothers dead. Any boy or girl who would like to correspond with me I would like to hear from them.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you please let a little Blue-ridge Mountain girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I was seven years old March 2. I go to school at President Hoover's school which he built for the mountain children. It is two and one-half miles from my home. We have a nice teacher. We like her fine. Dear Aunt Bettie: May a little North Dakota girl join your happy band of boys and girls? My grandfather sends me The Pentecostal Herald and I enjoy the children's page so much. I am ten years old; will be in the fourth grade next year. I go to Sunday school every Sunday. We live one-half mile from town. Dear Aunt Bettie. Would you let a little New York boy join your happy band of boys and girls? I was twelve years old April 16. I am four feet, ten inches and one-half. I have light golden brown hair and blue eyes and light complexion. I want all boys and girls to write to me for I will answer every letter that I receive. I gave my heart to God at the age of eleven years and I feel that he is with me every moment of my life. We have an airport that is open all day Sunday and I think that that is not living up to the rules of Christ.

Arthur Darwin Slaughter.
Ripley, N. Y.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Would you let a little Virginia boy join your happy band of boys and girls? I am only sixty-one. I am five feet and a half high and weigh 155. I am a reader of The Pentecostal Herald, and would not be without it, for that and the home paper and the Bible and Sunday school lesson are about all that I read. I think The Herald is one paper that has no equal as a religious paper. I don't think there is a book or paper that teaches one so much about the Bible as it does. I enjoy page ten very much. My birthday is Jan. 23. If I have a twin please write to me. My middle name begins with S and ends with D, and has ten letters in it. Who can guess it? I am a Christian and believe in full salvation.

C. S. Lawson.
Saluda, Va.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let an Illinois girl join your circle of boys and girls? I am sixteen years old, five feet, four inches tall, weigh 120 pounds. I have dark brown hair and eyes, fair complexion, and I have dimples. Mother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading page ten. Grandfather Tillmore Winchell died May 14, 1930. I never thought when we left Kentucky five years ago, but what I would get to see him once more to talk with him, but I never. Mother went back in February and stayed two weeks, then we all went when he died. I have had the measles and my eyes are hurting some now so I had better rest them awhile. Hoping to receive lots of letters, especially the ones from Kentucky.

Vonnie Fay Hornback.
Rt. 2, Towanda, Ill.

If so, please write to me. I have five sisters and no brothers. We have come from a small city of Southern California called Redlands. As this is my first letter to The Herald I would like to see it in print. I hope Mr. W. B. has lost his appetite when my letter arrives. I am a Christian. Dear Aunt Bettie: Here is a letter from Wisconsin. This is my first letter to The Herald so I would like to see it in print. Mother and father take The Herald and I enjoy reading it, especially page ten. I am fourteen years old and graduated in May from the eighth grade. I have a great desire to be a missionary for I feel God is calling me, but whatever he wants me to do I'll do, and wherever he wants me to go I'll go. I'd love to go to the foreign field and teach. I have three brothers. Mother, father and I go to Sunday school every Sunday morning and stay to church, and then we go again in the evening. I attend Epworth League every Sunday night. League starts at seven and lasts until church time at eight o'clock. We go to prayer meeting every Thursday night and the Lord surely blesses us. We have a wonderful minister here. He is a fine and sincere man. We like him very much. His name is Rev. C. Paul Nulton. I would like to hear from some of the boys and girls and I'll be sure and answer all the letters I receive.

Faye Heifner.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I thought I would write a few lines again. I wrote once before and was pleased to see it in print. Mother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading it. I was thirteen June 1. ## FALLEN ASLEEP

VINEYARD.

On October 22, 1931, the death angel visited the home of J. A. Vineyard, of Abernathy, Texas, and claimed for its victim his beloved wife, Sallie Bishop Vineyard, daughter of Jefferson Bishop. She was born in Alabama, May 3, 1859. Two brothers and a sister had preceded her to the other land. She was reared an orphan and knew something of the hardships they have to endure. She was converted and united with the Baptist Church when a girl. She was united in marriage to J. A. Vineyard, to which union three children were born, one dying at birth.

Mrs. Vineyard was a devout Christian, never tiring of serving the Lord. She attended church as long as her health would permit, but failing eyesight prevented her later from either attending the house of the Lord or reading his Word. She was a subscriber to The Pentecostal Herald and read it as long as her eyesight enabled her to do so. She was a member of the Nazarene Church, her pastor, Brother Woods, preaching her funeral. She testified that she was ready to take her departure, but regretted that her family were not Christians.

A precious one from us has gone,

A voice we loved is still;
A place is vacant in our home,
That never can be filled."

Her niece,
Nora Vineyard Wilson.

BRIGMAN.

Death visited our community on February 28, 1931, and carried away one of its oldest and most beloved citizens, Mr. J. M. Brigman. Mr. Brigman was born three miles south of Freeport, Fla., Jan. 13, 1858. He was married to Miss Catherine A. Brown, May 29, 1881. To this union were born nine children, five of whom survive him. Two brothers, two sisters and nine grandchildren also mourn his loss. Mr. Brigman was converted and joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. L. C. Calhoun, at Black Creek Church on the Freeport Circuit in 1877. He was soon made steward and Sunday school superintendent and continued to serve his church as such until he moved to Westville, where he sustained the same official relation until a few years ago when declining health forced him to give it up. He was very interested in the welfare of the church and loved to attend upon her ordinances when health permitted. For more than thirty-five years Mr. Brigman has made his home in Westville for the most of which time in the mercantile business. His early life was spent with his brothers in the logging and lumber business.

His pastor, Rev. E. W. Coleman, conducted his funeral at the Methodist Church in the presence of the largest congregation ever seen there, after which his body was conveyed to the grave.

REST COTTAGE, PILOT POINT, TEXAS.

Our campaign for funds for the Minnie L. Roberts Memorial Building was completed with success, thus affording us a laundry and canning department which has been partially equipped. God has surely looked with favor upon us, for after this building was completed there was enough material left over to build a two-room office and the builder made such an attractive contract price that it seemed to us to please God that this improvement should also be made. For the first time in our history a commodious office was a reality. We feel such a deep appreciation for everyone who has assisted us in any way to the completion of this work and we thank you one and all.

There have been a good many readjustments in the personnel of our helpers in the Home, changes have come but even in this God has shown us his mercy in sending us an efficient and capable co-laborer in Miss Daisy Kindred of Detroit, Mich. These changes with the constant charge in the coming and going of our Rest Cottage family of young women and children make our work especially difficult. In the midst of such variation we have sought to keep ever before our needy children the precious opportunities of the Gospel. We have been conscious of the blessed visitations of his Spirit working in their hearts and enabling them to lay hold by faith on the all-sufficient grace of God.

Our material benefits have been accompanied by spiritual benefits. We have witnessed some glorious outpourings of the Holy Spirit in the salvation of our precious young women. Not only have they been led to Christ themselves but many of their parents and loved ones have been prayed with and prayed for and found the Savior in pardon or reclamation.

We want to make special mention of the boxes sent in by our Women's Missionary Societies, Young People's Societies and Sunday school classes and for the splendid response they gave to our Christmas appeal which enabled every member of our family to be remembered with gifts. We have had under our care one hundred young women and sixty-seven children with a total cash outlay of $10,560.64. We have made provisions for homes for twenty-four of our little ones, either directly or through the aid of a home-finding agency.

The economic operation of the institution has been an outstanding feature which has brought the highest commendation for years. This has been possible by the utilizing of every available resource such as the climate and land afforded to provide good wholesome food for the family and provender for stock and poultry. This supplemented by the kind contributions of supplies and cash have enabled us to do a creditable work for this special group of dependents. As servants of God in the church we have been reaching out our hands to the needy that have knocked at our doors and ministered to them both of material and spiritual benefits, seeking if we might by all means "save some."

J. P. Roberts, Supt.
Mrs. J. P. Roberts, Mgr.

GOD IS WAITING.

God seems waiting for his people to get the emphasis on the single supreme thing needed for victory, even the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Our constant proneness is to try something else. The early disciples emphasized none of the things our churches today are so busied with. Everywhere you turn, in conferences, assemblies, conventions, there is discussion and planning to operate our institutions and meet earthly demands and further our programs. Methodism's best days were her first days before other things became prominent. The Holiness Movement in the U. S. were her best days, before we became so concerned about schools and churches and plans.

Again we suffer from leanness of soul, due to doctrine and profession without reality. It's common now to call hungry hearts to the altar for holiness and urge them along a few minutes, tell them to "take it by faith," and go along. They get nothing real, often go out professing and failing and discouraged till, in some fanatical meeting they land and become prey to errors, or else drift along through life with no power. There are hundreds of holiness preach-

Adam Clarke---Great Commentary

Dr. Clarke was one of a long succession of men who, in every age of the Christian Church, have applied the best energies of their intellect and heart to the study and interpretation of the Scriptures. The seven gifts which, according to Augustine, the true expositor of Scripture must possess—reverence, piety, science, fortitude, prudence, cleanness of heart, and heavenly wisdom—were his portions.

The studies of his earlier years always had a bearing on this great work. From the beginning he felt the need of being taught by God to understand his own word. Referring to this, he says: "No man ever taught me the doctrine I embrace; I received it singly by reading the Bible."

Sufficiently critical to aid the inquiries of the more serious student, and yet sufficiently popular to serve the purpose of general edification. He gives a lucid view of the several books of Scripture, as to their dates and authors, their scope and connection; he expounds the original text in a manner adapted to the deficiencies of the reader; he elucidates difficulties in chronology, history, and oriental manners; he develops the grand doctrines of revelation, and applies the whole to the great concerns of human salvation and duty.

One leading feature in its character is independence in thinking. While he availed himself of the labors of others, the great number of his expositions are emphatically his own.

DR. ADAM CLARKE'S COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE

is one of the noblest works of the class in the entire domain of sacred literature. It is a thesaurus of general learning.

Its luminous expositions of the Law and the Gospel; its earnest and forceful appeals to the conscience of the sinner and the unbeliever; its rich counsels for the well-understood wants of the Christian's inner life; its endless exhibitions of general knowledge; and its valuable aids to the students of those holy tongues in which revelation took its first recorded forms—all will render this book the companion and the counselor of multitudes as long as the English language may endure. The man who accomplished it achieved immortality, his name having become identified with an indestructible monument of learning and religion.

We commend it as the most spiritual commentary published. Six large volumes, good paper, good binding, new type.

ers today, good men preaching the doctrine whose hearts are hungry. They are not just perfectly clear and satisfied. They go to various meetings and camps hoping to dive into a deep spiritual Pentecost and yet return lean and dissatisfied. Many of our great camp meeting preachers have more sermons than power, because they have read and studied more than they have prayed. Our meetings depend too much on preaching and stirring songs and demonstrations. But the one thing indispensable is prayer. How we need to quit other things and all pray. Pray day and night until. This is the only rule Jesus laid down for his church to get ready to save the world. Reader hear it, just two words tarry until. Not build schools, nor read papers, nor hold conferences, nor theorize doctrines, nor organize forces, nor "take it by dry faith," nor profess it and believe you have it—No not any of these, but tarry until. God is waiting for his people to get away from all else for awhile and desire just this one thing and tarry until and receive and go out, not to build institutions nor churches, nor "carry on", but to simply call men to repentance and salvation. Let this be our only thought and prayer and purpose. Just talk it, preach it, seek it everywhere, all the time. Souls, souls, souls for Christ! What a revival would sweep down upon us. How the multitudes would tremble and seek God. Lord, help us to be wise and willing. Let us holiness folk first get the fullness ourselves, then proceed.

TEACH ME TO LOVE.

Love of Jesus, fill my heart
Teach me to love.
Thou the sum of goodness art;
Light from above.
I would walk the narrow way,—
Give me thy light.
Jesus, keep me thine today,
Banish my night.
Help me serve and toil and give,—
Show me thy grace.
I the Christ-like life would live,—
Thy cross embrace.
Let my spirit humble be,
Jesus, like thine.
I would lift men up to thee,
Saviour, divine.
Teach me then thy power of love,
O wondrous friend,
Till hate and strife heaven shall remove,
And peace ne'er end.

Paul Barton.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson VIII.—August 23, 1931.

Subject.—A Gospel for All Men. Acts 11:5-18.

Golden Text.—There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. Rom. 10:12.

Time.—About A. D. 40.

Places.—Joppa; Cæsarea; Jerusalem.

Introduction.—This lesson is a clash between Judaism and Christianity. The forces had been mobilizing for sometime; but now they meet for a settlement. The battle easily swings around two characters, Peter and Cornelius. The contrast between the two men is almost painful. The former was a rabid Jew, a fisherman from the Sea of Galilee. The latter was a Centurion, a trained Roman soldier who knew how to command men. Both of them were case-hardened in national pride. The Roman boasted citizenship in the nation that was ruling the then known world. The Jew was one of Jehovah's chosen race. To him, all men outside of Jewry were on a level with prairie dogs. Peter had walked with the Master for some years; but he had been slow to imbibe the world-wide spirit of the Christ; albeit, he had made some little progress. Cornelius had fully known the power of paganism; but he had come in contact with Judaism to some extent; and living at Cæsarea, the home town of the evangelist Philip, he had doubtless heard much of Christianity—perhaps had listened to Philip's preaching. Acting on what light had come to him, he had become a devout praying man. The contrast between the two men was complete, but with a certain shattering of caste notions on both sides. God's clock had struck; and they must now be brought together—not by personal choice, but by divine appointment. The barriers must be broken down forever.

In India the caste system has become religious, and has cursed the life of the entire nation. Among the Jews caste was rife between them and all other peoples; and again it was religious caste. In their estimation, their temple was so sacred that the entrance of a Gentile would defile it. Not only in America, but in Africa itself, there is a caste feeling between Caucasian and Negro. In South Africa the feeling is bitter. Here in America is an impassable barrier between the two races. To tell the plain truth, neither race wants much intercourse with the other. If this race prejudice ever dies it will be killed by the influence of New Testament Christianity. Meantime it constitutes an impregnable barrier against civilization and Christianity. God alone knows how many millions of souls are being eternally lost through race prejudice and caste prejudice. In theory we subscribe to the doctrine of human brotherhood, while in practice we trample it beneath our feet. "Am I my brother's keeper," Cain's question, can never die. Yes; every man is his brother's keeper without regard to race, color, or national distinction. This is one of the unsettled problems of what we term Christian civilization.

Comments on the Lesson.

5. The city of Joppa.—Look on your map of Palestine, and you will find Joppa situated about five miles north of the 32nd parallel. Being a sea-coast town it is naturally the port of entry for Jerusalem; although it is almost worthless as a harbor. Peter says that while he was praying, he fell into a trance and saw a vision. As the entire transaction was miraculous, I shall take it literally; but when I say that, I do not mean that there was a literal sheet. As far as Peter was concerned the letting down from heaven of the sheet was perfectly literal. To all intents and purposes, he saw the entire thing; and to him it was real; although it was but a spiritual vision. It carried with it a tremendous spiritual lesson, and that is the important thing for us, and for all men. Peter got that lesson.

6. Beasts.—According to Jewish law, some animals were known as clean and fit for human food; while others were termed unclean and unfit for food. In Peter's vision God uses these animals to represent the various races of men. The Jew had as great prejudice against Gentiles as he had against eating the flesh of unclean beasts. The purpose of the vision was to break down this prejudice in the heart of Peter, in order to prepare him to preach the gospel among the Gentiles.

7. Arise, Peter; slay and eat.—An American may get some faint notion of Peter's feeling by remembering his own prejudice against dog-meat, save that Peter's prejudice was religious, and therefore much stronger than ours. The man was simply disgusted at the order.

8. Not so, Lord.—In other words, "I refuse to obey your orders." And he boasts of the fact that nothing common, or unclean, had ever entered into his mouth. We are queer animals in our inconsistencies. I have known a man who would not under any consideration eat meat on Friday, but would go fishing and hunting on Sunday. The Jews cried for the blood of Jesus of Nazareth, but would not defile themselves by entering the Roman court.

9 and 10. Here we meet God's pronouncement against all caste and race hatred. I feel sure that it is not best for different races to intermarry, and produce hybrid peoples; but God's word has gone forth that he has no patience with race prejudice and race hatred. Jesus Christ tasted death for every man; and all Christians must recognize the fact that we are all one in Christ Jesus our Lord. That thing is forever settled. We may discard it, if we so desire; but we do so at our peril.

11. Three men...Cæsarea.—When God commands A to preach the gospel to B, it means that God is preparing B to receive A's message. I have never found it otherwise. Peter must go to Cæsarea to preach the gospel to the household of the Roman Centurion, Cornelius; but Cornelius and his household would be ready for the message at his coming.

12. Six brethren.—Peter was to do the preaching; but he must have some witnesses to the truth he was to declare. God could carry on without them; but the hearers would need them. I am persuaded that one of the greatest needs of the present hour is witnesses, bright and happy, to the saving power of the blood of Jesus Christ. When I used to go to baseball games I found no trouble in telling which side the fans were on; but when I go to church I am troubled to find the standing of most churchmembers. They not only dress and act like the world; but, if they have salvation from sin, they are strangers to its joy. In the long ago I used to hear hallelujahs in old-time Methodist meetings that made the angels glad; but such shouts would chill the spinal cords of modern Methodists. Yesterday I was reading a doctor's directions for caring for one who had been pulled from water in a drowning condition. He said use artificial breathing, and to keep it up with great regularity, because it was almost impossible to say when a human body is really dead. Maybe so; but I am wondering if many preachers are not preaching to a lot of sitting corpses. Good Lord, give us saved witnesses to the truth. Peter needed some; and God sent them along to say Amen.

13. An angel.—God's messenger in visible form. The word angel always means messenger, one sent. God sent this one to tell Cornelius what to do; Send men to Joppa after Simon Peter.

14. Who shall tell thee words.—Mere words could not save them from sin; but words are vehicles of thought, of truth; and God uses them to bring to us messages that kindle our faith unto salvation.

15. The Holy Ghost fell on them.—Some who oppose sanctification as a second work of grace have had no little trouble with this story of Cornelius and his household. They will have it that this was their conversion, when they would be tickled nearly to death to be pastors of such people. Cornelius and his household were converted people; and this was their baptism with the Holy Spirit. Others tell us that the gift of the Spirit at Jerusalem was the Jewish Pentecost, and this the Gentile Pentecost, and that it will never be repeated. But it was repeated up in Samaria and at Ephesus; and Peter said: "The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." I wonder why people hate holiness so bitterly.

16. This verse clinches all that I have said: "Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." Now I know they were converted before Peter's visit, because Jesus says unconverted people cannot receive the baptism with the Holy Ghost. See John 14:17.

17. God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ.—Peter turns a flood of light on this in his speech before the church at Jerusalem, as recorded in Acts 15:8, 9: "And God, which knoweth the hearts, bear them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." So then we have simply a repetition of Pentecost. If Peter, James and John, and the mother of our Lord were converted before that event, Cornelius and his household were converted before Peter's visit.

18. Although there was still much Jewish prejudice in the Jerusalem church it was moving ahead somewhat; for when they heard this wonderful news from the lips of Peter, "they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to

by DR. C. F. WIMBERLY.

After reading sophisticated novels, sex stories, and tales of pagan glory, one comes with a great deal of delight and satisfaction upon this splendid story of Dr. C. F. Wimberly—"The Mills of the Gods." As the title implies it is a story of justice and recompense, and reveals in no uncertain manner how God, and not Chance, is ruling the Universe. The story moves with sure and certain strides, is gripping, worth reading, and the book deserves a wide circulation in this day of lost faith and false values.—JOHN RICHARD MORELAND, Poet and Critic, Norfolk, Va.

Let us be glad, and thank God for a world-wide Savior. Let us speedily spread the Good News to the ends of the earth. Amen!

A WORLD METHODIST GATHERING.

Plans for the Sixth Ecumenical Methodist Conference which is to meet October 16 to 25 in Atlanta, Ga., are going forward through the activities of committees in Great Britain and the United States and Canada. These committees are international in scope and are working out details of a very comprehensive program. Local committees in Atlanta are carrying forward preparations for the welcome and entertainment of the delegates of Methodism who will come from all parts of the world.

The Western section has not entirely completed the details of its part of the program. However, it has selected some two score speakers who will present various phases of the general subject, "Methodism in the Life of Today," which is the general topic of the conference. It will work out further details of the program at a committee meeting of representatives from the Methodisms of the United States and Canada at Cincinnati on the 14th of July.

The opening session of the Ecumenical Conference will listen to addresses from Bishop William Fraser McDowell, senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Dr. C. Ryder Smith of London, president of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. Already the detailed part of the program which is to be furnished by the Eastern Division has been received from the committee with headquarters in London and assures a great program participated in by its leading brethren, both lay and clerical. Its list of speakers includes many well known authors and noted preachers. Some of them will come from India and China and other parts of their far-reaching field of activities. One of the daily features of the program will be a closing service under the leadership of the beloved and widely known Gipsy Smith.

While great emphasis will be placed upon personal Christian experience, every phase of the social aspects of Christianity will be dealt with. Noted speakers have been chosen to deal with such subjects as: Christianity and modern science; modern amusements and divorce questions; relation of capital and labor; the governmental and international implications of Christianity; and other phases of our modern life as it is related to the Church.

Arrangements are being carried forward by the Methodists of Georgia to make Wednesday, October 21st, an outstanding day for those in attendance upon the convention by a trip to Savannah, Ga., where John and Charles Wesley carried on their labors in their early life. It is expected that not only the delegates will make this trip but also that many of those who will be visitors at the conference will join in the interesting experience which this trip assures.

The local committees in charge are making all plans for entertaining not alone the delegates but also thousands of visitors who, it is expected, will desire to enjoy the advantages offered by this representative gathering of world Methodists. Special rates are being arranged at the hotels and plans are being perfected for welcoming those who come both by rail and by auto. The auditorium seating 6,000 persons will be used for the general meetings of the convention and nearby churches will be made available for various group gatherings. Further information as to hotels and other arrangements may be had by writing to the Atlanta Convention Bureau which is co-operating to make all arrangements for a successful conference.—H. E. Wollever, Washington, D. C.

PERSONALS.

Prof. Blish R. Shaw, whose address is Oakland, Cal., General Delivery, has open dates for meetings as song evangelist and guitar player.

L. J. Gage, 3515 Humbolt Ave., No., Minneapolis, Minn., has some time he can give to any one needing help in revival meetings.

The Annual Camp Meeting of the Northwest Virginia Holiness Association will be held at Salem, Va., Tabernacle, August 28 to September 6. Rev. R. A. Young, of Riverside, Cal., Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Rice, M. V. Lewis, Rev. and Mrs. Orville French, missionaries of the Oriental Missionary Society, will be the workers. Mrs. M. V. Lewis will be the pianist. Meals will be served on the ground and other accommodations provided.

F. W. Gress: "A very fruitful revival meeting was conducted at a country schoolhouse eight miles east of Underwood, N. Dak. Rev. Fred Canaday, of Portland, Ore., was the evangelist, and the pastor, F. W. Gress, led the song service. Some twenty knelt at the altar for pardon, reclamation and heart purity. Rev. Canaday preached some great gospel messages, and exposed sin, bringing strong conviction to the hearers. Brother Canaday is a fine brother and anyone wanting a reliable evangelist cannot fail if they secure this brother."

Spotsylvania Camp Meeting will be held August 16-30. This camp is located in the midst of the Battlefield Park, 60 miles south of Washington. Workers: O. B. Newton, Bessie Larkin, W. Luther King, S. H. Magee, Granville B. King, assisted by Asbury College Quartette and Robert Mortensen. No charge made for lodging, but campers will bring their sheets, pillow-cases and towels; other bedding and furnishings will be supplied. Good meals will be furnished, with special rates to ministers, their wives and children. Mail addressed to Chancellor, Va., care camp meeting, will reach parties.

R. H. Garrison: "I went to Merry Oaks, Barren County, Ky., July 19 to begin a revival. It was hot and dry. We began to pray for rain and for the revival of love in the hearts of the saints. The Lord wonderfully blessed us by sending us a good rain; saints rejoiced, then we asked the Lord for the power of the Holy Spirit to convict sinners and bring them to repentance. We did not hurry, but tarried until imbued with power from on high. People came for miles; one hundred people in the day services, and at night the auditorium and Sunday school rooms were filled to overflowing. The pastor gave a broad invitation to all denominations that attended to worship God as they did in their own church and to feel perfectly at home. The pastor, Robt. H. Garrison, did the preaching the best he could, driving 85 miles every day and preaching two sermons each day. The Lord crowned our feeble efforts with 66 souls saved in the old-fashion way, praying through to victory. Grandfathers, grandmothers, fathers, mothers, wives, husbands, children, entire families found the Lord. Ex-convicts, murderers and all were blessed. Old-time shouting was in evidence. Some forty or more were revived. I took into the church 48, with more to follow. We looked after the cemetery and church grounds in a beautiful way. Old-time revivals can still be had if we will pay the price. The pastor was given a shower of eats that he could not take in his car, but had to have a truck to carry them. Pray for me, brethren. Let us pray for one another that the Holy Ghost may direct us in our work. Let us not keep our mind upon the finances of the church, so much. I believe that if we preachers will do our duty while we are in the vineyard the finances will be forthcoming. May the Lord continue to be with thy servants."

H. T. Heironimus: "You are sure making a great paper out of The Herald. The Prohibition Number was excellent. Dr. Morrison's editorials are superb. My! but we enjoy reading its great messages. Wish I were able to put it in every preacher's home. How they need The Herald in these times!"

GOOD NEWS—THE FAMILY REVIVED!

It is a source of great satisfaction and joy to know that so many homes are consecrated to God and hallowed by prayer. During the past year many family altars have been erected. The Lord's blessings have been on this special work. What could be better for the home?

People in thirty-eight states have testified as to the blessing of the "sanctuary in the home." My little message, "The Family Altar Revived," sent out last winter has stirred the hearts of many parents and young people. The writer thanks God and takes courage. Allow me to ask the reader to kindly write me a word about the family altar, or what prayer has done for your home. You can help greatly in this needed and gracious revival.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith my spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.

WIREMAN, C. L. (Campton, Ky., Aug. 12-30.)

"Scarlet Thread," by Rev. L. W. Dolan, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, Danville. Here is something unique. 104 pages with 104 illustrations, "explaining and impressing Calvary Christianity." I read the book with pleasure and profit. So far as I am advised it is by all odds the richest collection dealing expressly with the sacrificial aspect of Christ's death. How often the pastor in his evangelistic messages is put to for fresh and telling incidents that will bring home the truth to his hearers. We have in this booklet a fine supply and many of them are very telling. They are gathered from many sources and most any point of view can be illustrated. This reviewer counts himself the richer for the possession of this multum imparvo in the way of illustrating the vicarious work of Christ. Fellow ministers who would add to the effectiveness of the evangelistic messages are sure to do so if they buy and use this work.

This reviewer ventures this suggestion, that the author ask from his many preacher friends their two or more best illustrations of the atoning work of Christ and when there is occasion for a second edition bring one greatly enlarged and published by a publishing house that has a way of getting its publications before the public. I am led to make this last remark because the best illustration I have ever had of the work of Christ is not in the book and a hundred or two hundred more would greatly add to the value thereof. Another thing calculated to be exceedingly helpful is in so far as practical to connect each illustration with the text it best illustrates. I congratulate my friend and brother on his splendid piece of work.

Rev. C. F. Wimberly says: "It is fresh, juicy, unctious and witty. He has given us the cream of his thought, feelings and imagination under the tuition of the Holy Spirit. There is not a dull or uninteresting page or paragraph in the book. The book will enrich the soul of every one who reads it. It should be in ten thousand homes that love full salvation. ## THE IMMUTABLE WORD.

By The Editor.

HEAVEN and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away."—Jesus.

"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." . . . "whoso keepeth his word in him verily is the love of God perfected."

"For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

"The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes."

Aside from the fact that the Bible is an inspired book, revealing the laws of God for the just, equal and happy regulation of society, and the gospel plan for the saving of a lost race, it is also the most interesting book in all the world's literature. Its records are the most ancient, its history the most accurate, its incidents the most thrilling to be found anywhere on the printed page. Where will one find such startling stories of war, such peaceful, pastoral tales, such heart-warming romances of love, as are found related in its pages. Its poetry is pitched on the highest plane, its proverbs contain the richest wisdom, its prophecies reveal the future and its promises give anchorage and hope to the soul.

Lord Bacon has truly said that "There never was found in any age of the world, either religion or law, that did so highly exalt the public good as the Bible." A whole-some truth was expressed by some one who declared "That the truths of the Bible have the power of awakening an intense moral feeling in man under every variety of character, learned or ignorant, civilized or savage; that they make bad men good, and send a pulse of healthful feeling through all the domestic, civil and social relations; that they teach men to live right, to hate wrong and to seek each other's welfare; that they control the baleful passions of the human heart, and thus make men proficient in the science of government; and, that they teach him to aspire after conformity to a Being of infinite holiness, and fill him with hopes infinitely more purifying, more exalted, more suited to his nature, than any other which this world has ever known."

We are glad to note that the Bible is more largely circulated than ever before. The Bible societies printed and circulated 12,843,196 Bibles last year. More Bibles were sold than any other hundred books together. The output of the British and Foreign Bible Societies is increasing from year to year. It is said if you pile in a single pyramid all the copies of the Koran since Mahomet's day till now, with all the copies of the Scandinavian Zend Avesta, the Buddhist Tripitakas and the Chinese Five Kings, and add to the pile the hundred other most famous books the world has ever known, including the "best sellers" of all ages, the pyramid, contrasted with the thousands of millions of copies of the Bible, would be as an ant heap to Mount Everest.

John Wesley said: "I have thought, I am a creature of a day, passing through life, as an arrow through the air. I am a spirit come from God, and returning to God: just hovering over the great gulf; till a few moments hence, I am no more seen! I want to know one thing, the way to heaven: how to land safe on that happy shore. God himself has condescended to teach the way; for this very end he came from heaven. He hath written it down in a book! Oh give me that book! At any price, give me the book of God! I have it: here is knowledge enough for me. Let me be homo unius libri."

Monthly Sermon.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

"As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings; so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him." Deut. 32:11, 12.

The text is taken from a song of Moses. The time of his departure was at hand; he was full of solicitude for his people, and in this song he reminds them of the gracious deliverance, care and guidance of God. The song abounds in figures; the text is one of the most beautiful and suggestive. He is singing of God's dealings with Jacob, who represents Israel. Through these figures he is conveying to the people ideas of God and his method of directing, developing and strengthening character.

We must keep in mind the fact that God's great objective is the development of genuine Christian character. He desires to fix men so they can stand all the tests and never become unfixed. Salvation is by faith; regeneration is a powerful act of the Holy Ghost, but it is an initiation into a new life, an introduction into a new spiritual world. It is the beginning of a succession of processes, building and development into sainthood, into strength and preparation for service, into fitness for heaven.

The wheat must pass under flail in order to separation from the straw and chaff; the gold must go through the fire if you would purify it and bring it into service. It is so in the development of Christian character. Perhaps all of us are ready to say, "Let me die the death of the righteous," but are we willing to pass through the processes that purge out all impurity, that takes away every passion, that brings strength out of weakness, wisdom out of ignorance, patience out of petulance, destroys resentment and pride, and fills us with the spirit of humility and forgiveness.

There are auspicious moments in the lives of men, times when great issues hang on a word, a step, a decision, turning points that seal destiny. This was true of Moses when he chose to "suffer affliction with the people of God, rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." When he preferred, with a shepherd's crook, to guide a few sheep in the mountains rather than wield a scepter over a nation. It is true of Jacob, when he wrestled with a strange and mighty Being through the night crying out, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me."

This was true of the persecutor Saul, when a great light shone about him, and he must make his choice to continue his persecution, or to surrender himself and become a chosen vessel of the Lord. Abraham reached a climax in his history when he built his altar, bound Isaac, laid him upon it and lifted the sacrificial knife to take the life of him who was dearest of all things, and heard the voice of God staying his hand, and stood forth crowned forever as the "father of the faithful."

In some way these times come to all of us, times of decision, times of consecration, times when ladders lead up to heaven; when our dearest Isaacs must be bound and laid upon the altar of sacrifice, times when men come to the forks of the road and turn their feet into the paths of holiness and walk in the light, or into the paths of selfishness and grope in darkness.

There is no such thing as a development of strong, holy character without sore trial, bitter testing, severe temptation and positive decision. Where there are mountains there must be valleys. If we would climb into the mountains of transfiguration we must pass through the dark valleys of humiliation, surrender, death to self, and consecration to our Lord. If we would stand upon the mountain peaks of spiritual victory we must be willing, before such elevation, to descend deep into the valley of death to self, of a crucifixion which eliminates from our nature all carnal love, and brings into our hearts by the power of the Holy Spirit, the love of God.

This way of death to self, to the incoming of the divine nature, at times, would seem impossible, but we must not turn back. Heaven is our great objective; eternity lies out before us. We are transacting business for an unending existence. We can afford to pay a great price for there is a great prize. Sad to say, many turn back and die in the valley and shadows, but those who press forward,

EXPERIENCES IN SOUTH AMERICAN REVIVALS.

Rev. G. W. Ridout D.D., Corresponding Editor.

I never expected that such experiences awaited me on this continent such as I am writing about in this article. I have often preached from Acts 2:17, and have witnessed the pouring out of the Spirit of God in Japan, Korea, China, India, Egypt, Malaya, etc. In Chili I am witnessing the most unusual things in the operations of the Spirit. Hebrews 2:4 is being verified. I am living and preaching greatly these days in the Acts of the Apostles. In this book I believe we find God's program for the church of all ages, and for the twentieth century as well as the first. If the churches would get back to the Acts of the Apostles they would fill their empty pews, fill up their prayer meetings, and altars again would be scenes of penitence, pardon, holiness and power. Brother preacher, when have you last seen tears on the altar and on the floor of your church? This is a common thing over here in our meetings!

II.

'Twas Saturday night in the big Chilean city! I had been going all week without any stops in the program. Sunday I had preached four times; began again Monday morning and at night. This continued all the week, preaching twice each day. We thought we would have a short meeting Saturday night but the Second Methodist Church was fast filling up, soon extra benches had to be brought in and even the people had to stand around. Didn't think I would preach much but got started on "God's Plan of Salvation," as illustrated by Naaman, 2 Kings 5: The message grew on my soul and thus the meeting went on. Ten o'clock came and the call for prayer and seeking was made; instantly the altar was crowded, a second call was made and sinners came forward and thus that meeting that we intended to be short went on till close to 11 o'clock that night. We had to be up in the morning again for a seven o'clock service.

If this was time of hot weather we should hardly be able to stand this strain, but 'tis winter in Chili. Santiago is surrounded with mountains; yesterday they say there was snow storms on the mountains. Winters in South America are not so severe as in North America. Winter in Chili makes the nights and early mornings chilly; people come to fireless churches, however, with their overcoats and wraps, think nothing of two and three hours in meeting. Unusual things happen sometimes in meetings. The other day in the midst of preaching, two men bearing a very sick woman, came up the aisle and laid the woman at the altar for prayer; instantly the whole meeting turned to prayer. We laid hands upon the sick woman who was groaning under terrific pain, prayer prevailed; husband reported in subsequent meeting his wife had been healed in answer to prayer. Now why did they bring that woman forward for prayer instead of rushing her to a doctor? Well they believed in God's power to heal and they think nothing of breaking up the order of meeting if some one wants to seek God's power right now.

III.

'Tis Sunday night, past midnight. This has been a busy and eventful day speaking four times. At 6:30 P. M. preached at Baptist Church which was crowded; as many people standing almost as those sitting. How the news of revival spreads and people come from long distances to the meetings. Same in Chili as it used to be in the days of good old time Methodist revivals of long ago. Preached at 8:30 at Pentecostal Temple and the audience was fully 2500 people. What a

CHANNELS ONLY.

How I praise thee, precious Saviour,
That thy love laid hold on me;
Thou hast saved and cleansed and filled me,
That I might thy channel be.

Just a channel full of blessing,
To the thirsty hearts around;
To tell of thy full salvation,
And thy loving message sound.

Emptied that thou shouldst fill me
A clean vessel in thy hand;
With no power but as thou givest
Graciously with each command.

Witnessing thy power to save me,
Setting free from self and sin;
Thou hast bought me to possess me,
In thy fullness Lord come in.

Hearts that full surrender know;
That the streams of living water
From our inner man may flow.

meeting! Though I had to preach through interpreter yet God gave me wonderful liberty. What an object lesson that meeting was to pastors who, year after year, are content to preach to 100 people and less, and what a rebuke to missionaries who think the kingdom is going to be brought in by educational programs, religious education, etc. Here is a work of old-time Methodism, as it used to be, getting the common people, filling one Temple with more people than all the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches of the whole city could get together.

IV.

Preaching in the many churches of Santiago is a very difficult proposition; they are scattered all over the city. Methodists have no central church in the city; the new First is away off from the center, but this week is Methodist week and I am preaching, daily, in two M. E. Churches at 10:30 A. M. and 8:00 P. M. Monday and Tuesday nights I preached at "The Neely Chapel," called after Bishop Neely. I was glad to be in a church which enshrines his memory because the Bishop was a Methodist truly, and stood for Bible and real essential Methodism. I recall an incident at the Springfield General Conference. I went over to the hotel and was there till quite late. About 10:30 Bishop Berry entered, coming back possibly from some important meeting. Bishop Neely met him at the door, looked at him and said, "Well, Bishop Berry, is there anything of the old church left?"

Well Bishop Neely would have rejoiced if he saw the crowd in the Methodist Chapel last night as we preached on "The Power of the Holy Spirit," Acts 1:8. Several people got happy and wanted to demonstrate as we preached, but we kept on and got through in good shape, then made an altar call, and in a few minutes the altar and aisles were crowded with people and there was an intense spirit of prayer on the people. Then we arose and made special appeal to sinners to seek God; we sang a sinner's invitation hymn, at once, men from various parts of the building came forward and we had another altar full of seekers. Thus the meeting went on and God's power came down. Before we finished another appeal was made to members of that particular church to come up for prayers; at once, the altar filled again and we had another time of blessing and of power.

V.

Now and then as I travel around I see the church papers. I notice that the M. E. Bishops in their recent meeting said a few things about evangelism and its need in the following words: THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

"While we would keep the emphasis upon the increase of the evangelistic spirit, being sure that this spirit will in various localities and churches proceed by wisely selected methods, we would also stress the wisdom of a definite program.

"1. That on Sunday, May 24, 1931, we observe the anniversary of John Wesley's experience of the warmed heart, by earnest prayer on the part of pastors and by a summoning of lay people to prayer, with special intercession for the increase of the missionary and evangelistic spirit among our churches.

"2. That our summer and fall Conferences be made occasions for such devotional seasons as shall increase in ourselves and our pastors the evangelistic passion and send us back to our work with a new consecration to the primary task of the church."

'Tis a pity the Bishops did not say May 24 was anniversary of John Wesley's Conversion. Too much in our day is the term conversion, regeneration and justification avoided for something more modern and polished. I recall just here Luke 9:26: "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels."

I recall also that unique incident in Isaac's history, Gen. 26:18: "And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham: and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them."

John Wesley's conversion was more than a warm heart; he received justifying grace and the witness of the Spirit that his sins were forgiven and that he was a child of God.

How exceptionally guarded our Bishops are that evangelism should proceed by "wisely selected methods." That is the very thing which has killed revivals in the Methodist Church; we want quiet, dignified meetings in which no one gets happy, no one gets any demonstration of the Spirit; meetings must be run by the clock instead of by the Spirit, and there must be no mourner's bench because we no longer call sinners to repent, but we call them to an adventure for the building up of the Kingdom.

VI.

A clear case of regeneration by the power of the Spirit radically changes a man, and especially does it change an educated man. Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage, tells of his former state as a sinner, and then the transformation which regeneration brought. He said:

"When I lay in the darkness, in the depths of the night, when I was tossed hither and thither by the billows of the world, and wandered about with an uncertain and fluctuating course, I deemed it a matter of extreme difficulty that anyone could be born again—could it lay aside what he was before, while his corporal nature remained what it was. How, said I, can there be so great a transformation as that a man should all at once lay aside what is innate from his very organization or, through habit, has become a second nature. How should a man learn frugality who has been accustomed to luxuries? How should he who has been clad in gold and purple condescend to simple attire; the man who has been surrounded with public honors take to privacy, or another exchange admiring troops of dependents for voluntary solitude? The allurements of sense, I said to myself, are surely very tenacious. Intemperance, pride, anger, ambition, lust—these must, when once indulged, they must perforce, retain their hold. So I said to myself, for I was, in truth, entangled, yet in the errors of my former life, and did not believe that I could be freed from them; and so I complied with the vices that still cleaved to me, and in despair of amendment submitted to my evil inclinations as if they were part of my nature. But when the stain of my form- er life had been washed out by the laver of regeneration a pure and serene light was poured into my reconciled heart. When the second birth received from heaven through the Spirit had changed me into a new man, things formerly doubtful were confirmed in a wonderful manner. What had been closed before became open before my eyes; what had been dark was now illuminated; power was given to do what had seemed difficult; the impossible had become possible. I can see now that my former life, being of fleshly origin and spent in sin, was a life of earth. The life which the Holy One has kindled in me is a life from God."

NEEDED! PATRIOTISM.

By Georgia Robertson.

(Read before the Business Women's Council, Washington, D. C.)

FLAGS were unfurled. Workers were throwing down tools and students their books to enlist. Women were knitting, serving food to passing soldier-laden trains and taking up tasks men had left. War gardens were planted, "meatless and wheatless days" observed. Ships laden with soldiers sailed under cover of night with lights out to elude submarines. Soldiers lived in mud-soaked trenches overrun with vermin, faced poison gas and barrage fire, died in battle or languished in prisons or hospitals crippled or blinded for life. Multimillionaires forsook their offices and toiled early and late for their country when a foreign foe threatened to invade our land a few years ago.

All is changed. Apparently peace reigns, but while our citizens slumber unmindful of danger an enemy "within our gates" is trying to overthrow our government!

We need an adequate army and navy for defense in case of attack and also as a safeguard against attack. Our new foe is not using cannon and bombs as yet, but is working "under cover," quietly and stealthily planting dangerous, fallacious ideas in the minds of our children and our college and university students. This enemy has its followers scattered all over our country in many of our institutions of learning, even in our theological seminaries and our public schools.

In some of our leading women's colleges the questionnaires are shockingly immoral and indecent. "Companionate marriage and immorality" are frankly alluded to. Foes of civilization in our country are trying to break down the sanctity of marriage and the home, and to do away with personal purity, the Sabbath, and religious belief of every kind. No religious sect whatever escapes their hatred and avowed destruction.

In Soviet Russia "Sundays as days of rest and worship long since have passed." Their women have been nationalized, parents are separated and sent into different parts of the country. Children are taken from their parents and brought up in Socialist institutions where instructors teach them communism. Boys and girls mingle freely together and little girls of premature age often become mothers. This is their first line of attack, in their carefully and skillfully planned destruction of every existing government of the world that is not Communistic.

Every teacher in our public schools should be compelled to take an oath of allegiance to our flag and all it stands for. While sectarian teaching must be barred, there should be a book of excerpts from the Bible suitable to read in the public schools, and it should be required to be read regularly every school day in accordance with our laws. "By the fear of Jehovah men depart from evil." The stability of a nation depends upon the reliable, upright character of its citizens.

With theft and burglary made easy by the modern acetylene torch and automobile as a quick get-away, what other causes are there for the increase in crime and for the lowered age of the criminal—even boys in their teens? What has caused lowering of personal standards until greed stops at nothing—however vile, wicked, or inhuman—that will accomplish its ends?

Are our homes and schools responsible for this? Two generations ago there had not been the general deterioration of moral standards. Mothers had not forsaken their homes for the gay life of today filled with its ceaseless round of movies, dances, cards, cigarettes and cocktails, or gone unnecessarily into the business world to the neglect of their children.

The Sabbath had not been robbed of its sanctity. Its hours filled with week-day activities and quest of pleasure with church attendance neglected. The Sabbath had not been commercialized through open theaters, movies, ball games and the sale of children's toys on our streets. The command "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" had not been discarded. Reverence for God and his holy day still lingered. Man had not been elevated to the divine and Christ torn down and robbed of his Deity, and declared only a superman! It was still remembered that God's voice from Heaven had borne him witness saying, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." And he himself had said, "I and my Father are one." How much obedience to the Golden Rule—"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise" can one expect from those who believe that the one who uttered it was not God but man?

A few years ago our schools and colleges were not the godless places some of them are today turning out citizens robbed of their belief in God, the Deity of Christ, and a hereafter. We are reaping what we have sown! Communists by playing games, telling stories, teaching music, handicraft, dramatics, and athletics in various public places gain the confidence of children of all ages. Then they gather them into clubs, and summer camps and teach thousands of them every year that "There is no God," no hereafter—no future punishment or future happiness—saying to them, "Do whatever you like." They are taught to hate those who have more of this world's goods than they have, to hate their parents if they are not Communists, and even if they are, to despise and disobey them. They are taught to salute the red flag and to spit and trample on our flag! They foment strikes and discontent that they may plant their ideas more successfully in the minds of the people and disturb the confidence of the public in banks, often causing serious runs.

It was Lenin who said, years ago, "The capitalists of America will commit suicide for money" Meaning that they were willing for present gain to loan huge sums of money to Soviet Russia, sell her tractors, farm machinery, and send over our skilled engineers and outstanding men of business ability to teach them how to develop their mines, build bridges, railroads, and factories the most approved ways to compete with us later and undermine our government. A late statement gives the number of skilled American men in Soviet Russia as 18,000.

The Soviet or Communist Government is financing its undertakings with the property stolen in 1917 from the prosperous Russians. Now through forced labor at pitifully low pay and starvation rations—even before the completion of its five-year plan—it is able to undersell the nations of the world—and is doing it along certain lines. Soviet Russia plans in this way the financial ruin of all governments that are not Communistic. Lumber, wood-pulp, coal, oil, wheat, manganese dumping have already spread alarm among various nations, where they have been underselling the home market. Russian people are kept on starvation rations, and are destitute of warm clothing.

We need patriotism that will refuse to send our farm implements, electric machinery and our skilled engineers over there to aid them in destroying our country by dumping their vast natural resources and their manufactured goods on the world markets and ruin us by competition. They are even planning to undersell us in our own home markets, leaving our workmen without employment. We are "aiding and abetting" the enemy when we do these things just as much as though the battle with guns and ammunition had begun; for their declared purpose is to overthrow our government. We need patriotism that will make the manufacturer refuse to buy their cheap raw material, our merchants their cheap manufactured goods and the ultimate consumer refuse to buy Russian goods made by forced, ill-paid labor, with stolen capital, and so increase our unemployment. We need patriotism that will not for present personal or national greed sell our country to the enemy to despoil. Greed for money in exchange for our glorious freedom, and the finest opportunity for self-development and personal initiative the world has ever known. We also need patriotism that will not scrap the Constitution for the sake of unlawful self-indulgence, or illegitimate gain.

"That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death."—Phil. 3:10.

I am so glad that Jesus Christ offers to us the deepest thing in his heart; not only to share his glory and his joy forever; not only to sit down with him upon his throne and share all that eternity will mean when he shall reign and we shall live and reign with him forever. He does offer us that—the fellowship of his glory—and we accept that, and rejoice in it; but there is something deeper in the heart of Christ than that—he offers to us the fellowship of his sufferings.—Geraldine Guinness Taylor.

THE DANGER OF MORAL DECLENSION IN THE YOUTH

Rev. W. Edmund Smith.

RECENTLY we heard an eminent theological leader, giving a Commencement address to a class of graduating nurses, raise a laugh about the fears of certain pessimistic moralists, who are so often ready to cry "The young people of our day are going to the dogs." To state the same idea in more elegant words would be to say, the young people of this generation are deteriorating morally; are losing those high ideals and that moral fibre so necessary to the development of sturdy manhood and womanhood. This bishop intimated that he had heard the same cry raised when he was a boy, by extremely pious folks, against the popularity of buggy-riding by young people. Then came the skating-rink, then the bicycle craze, and more recently the moving pictures and the automobile. The popularity of the last two mentioned with the young folk, indicates they are "going to the dogs."

Another learned Commencement speaker, inveighing against such raw pessimism, took occasion to go far back in history, found in the Greek and Roman classics, to prove that in the days of Herodotus and Virgil, kill-joys even then were declaring that the world was growing worse due largely to youthful delinquency, and that disaster was sure to come unless there was a speedy reformation of morals.

Both these speakers raised the laugh, of course, against such old-fogy notions, and assured their audiences that such morbid prophets are never popular, and ever have been left behind in the march of material, intellectual and moral progress, for they usually have been the victims of a bad digestion, that has superinduced needless fears and made impossible clear mental and moral vision.

But the observations of these wise men led me to serious reflection. I asked myself the question, were not those ancient moralists, who attempted to diagnose the moral conditions of their day, often right in their conclusions that the youth of their land was in a moral slump, that might be expressed by the homely phrase "Going to the dogs"?

If I have read aright the history of such nations as Assyria, Babylonia, Israel, Persia, Media, Egypt, Greece and Rome, I must conclude that each and every one of these nations rose to a commanding position of power, culture and general prosperity, but gradually suffered a decline, so that students of history regard most of these nations as only wrecks along the shores of time, blasted and ruined by a moral disintegration that made them unworthy to be determining factors in the world's progress.

Let us notice, briefly, some of the most important of these nations. They prove that while "The mills of the gods grind slowly, they grind exceeding fine." There is a Nemesis that pursues nations that yield to the lower instead of following the higher. These nations prove that the prosperity that comes to children through the sacrifice and courage of the fathers, often kills out the spirit of self-denial in the new generation, that gives itself over to ease and self-indulgence. The history of many a nation might be epitomized in one significant sentence: This nation died because its youth lost its grip on the higher values of life: They literally, "Went to the dogs."

Look at Greece! Her name has been written large in history. Her military power and glory were even excelled by her culture and learning. What a roster the names of her philosophers, dramatists, soldiers, poets, sculptors, historians and orators make! Their names are familiar to every high school student. Greece felt secure in her pre-eminence amongst the nations of the earth. The moralist, who would dare prophesy of her coming doom, would be ridiculed by the eloquent Commencement orator at the Academy and the Porch. Those who were enjoying the honors and the good things of the day were the apostles of a rosy optimism. Socrates rebuked the trifling, self-indulgent spirit of his day and was called the "gad-fly of the Athenian conscience." They gave him the cup of poison because of his pessimism.

Greece went down. Read the impassioned words of Byron if you wish to know how terrible was the fall. "'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more." Thermopylae and Marathon were glorious events in Grecian history, but they only mocked the servility and ignorance of the descendants of those who had fought there. Yes, that learned doctor could say the cry of 'going to the dogs' is as old as Thucydides very true. Some men of vision in that day could see the oncoming doom; but they were laughed at and called apostles of despair, and so could not be popular with the generation that wanted smooth things.

Look at Rome with more than a millennium of history, and much of it glorious, from the standpoint of military conquest, material and intellectual progress. There was a time when Rome was at the zenith of her power and prosperity. That was the time when her citizens gloried in discipline and sacrifice for the sake of the state. Such a spirit brought her success out of which developed a prosperity that made the new generation more desirous of ease and self-indulgence than self-denial. Wealth increased and homes became luxurious. Then as now, people prosperous, became more anxious to contend for their rights than to meet their responsibilities. Immorality increased and the home became unstable. The craze for amusement and recreation in the theater and the stadium captivated the people. Some Roman moralists saw the trend of things and uttered their warning. But they were laughed at. A people drunk with prosperity never has had ears to listen to the prophecy of retribution. The philosophy of Coue was not new with him: It is older than the Flood. There is a false spirit that whispers a rosy optimism into the carnal heart, and proclaims it through the lips of every false prophet: "Every day and in every way we are growing better and better." The decline and fall of all the nations we have mentioned has no warning to sentimental optimists today. They say, "going to the dogs" has been the cry of all the misanthropes in all ages. Our sympathy is with the dogs.

We might refer to the history of Israel. Faithful prophets saw the trend of popular feeling and action and raised the warning cry. Those prophets were regarded, for the most part, as apostles of despair. In the midst of material prosperity and national triumph, they would come before the king and speak the word of Jehovah. Often they were driven from court and martyred for their prediction of retribution. It seemed as if Isaiah, in his description of the pride and vanity of Hebrew youth, was looking at the fashions of Paris and New York. Read that third chapter of his prophecy, in which he pours contempt on all the pride of the people, reaching his climax in the words: "And it shall come to pass, that instead of a sweet smell there shall be a stink; and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well set hair baldness; instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty. Thy men shall fall by the sword, and thy mighty in the war. And her gates shall lament and mourn, and she being desolate shall sit upon the ground." Those old prophets could cry aloud and spare not. They were "Prophets," not "profits." Their reward from the generation they served was reproach, shame and often death.

How about our own country? Are we exempt from the operation of laws that work retribution for their violation? If God spared not the heathen nations, and even his chosen people, can he spare us, even though we may regard ourselves the chosen of the Lord because he has so richly dowered us with material benefits, and his hand has been so evident in moulding our history? The greater our blessings and privileges the greater will be our humiliation and punishment if we, as a people, forget the law of God and exalt the dignity and rights of man above the glory of Jehovah.

We glory in our material and intellectual progress. We look at our skyscrapers and wonderful works in steel and masonry and call these permanent. We forget that the nation that built the pyramids perished, while their work remains to baffle the power and skill of modern genius to build anything half so stable. We are captivated with the glamor of outward things. We view, with pride, the parades of learned faculties and the graceful lines of proud young college graduates, and dream that America may see an intellectual age that shall vie with the "Golden age of Pericles." Our youth excel in athletic contests, and we are objects of envy of people of other lands. We are inclined to feel secure.

Truly, God's hand has been upon us for much good. We have a goodly heritage. But our nation is very young and the question is, can the youth of our land resist the enervating influence of such luxury, submitting to the rule of temperance and discipline, rather than giving way to self-indulgence and pleasure? It is the youth, or young, that establishes the home, for the most part. We see how unstable the American home is when one marriage in every six ends in the divorce court. "Flaming youth," "The revolt of youth" are no figments of the imagination when we see our reformatories, our jails and prisons crowded with youthful prisoners. In some of our colleges our youth is taught that the Ten Commandments are obsolete, and that self-expression is the true rule of life. Right in the midst of our so-called intellectual progress we see a recrudescence of the heathen Epicurean philosophy that makes pleasure the chief end of life. Young people laugh at the authority of the Word of God, because the materialistic philosophy of evolution, that has flowered and fruited in the theology of Modernism, has undermined their faith. Authorities high and low, are appalled at the increase of crime and lawlessness amongst the youth of our land.

But there is a greater rebellion against the law of God than against civil law, and here lies the greater danger. A Christless intellectualism is as great a menace to our national safety as degraded ignorance. Both work together to drag the nation down. Where is our hope? It is in him who has a kingdom that cannot be moved. Man has ever been a failure, but Christ is no failure. He shall never be discouraged till he has set judgment in the earth and the Isles shall wait for his coming. We may have revivals of religion as great as those Wesley and Finney witnessed. A multitude of young people, now enslaved by the flesh and the love of the world, may catch the higher vision of salvation that brings true liberty and the nobler self-expression through Christ being formed in them the hope of glory. Things, on the whole, will get worse instead of better. We are living in the last times. We may take great hope in the World Court, the Kellogg Peace Pact, the expression of joy in Europe at the intervention of our President in its affairs to bring relief. These things may bring temporal good, but it is only temporary good. Our hope for better things is in the return of him who makes all things new. When the hearts of the youth will seek him and find in him their all and in all.

JESUS, THE WORLD'S SAVIOR

J. W. BEESON.

"And thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. 1:21.

OLGOTHA'S summit is the central point of the Bible. From Genesis to Revelation there runs a scarlet thread through the inspired Book leading to the supreme sacrifice.

Jesus was the greatest Preacher the world ever had, or ever will have. After his first great sermon he never lacked for an audience. The crowds thronged about him and hung on his words by the hour. He could take a text from a lily blooming by the wayside, a bird flying overhead, a farmer sowing seed on the hillside, a flock of sheep grazing in the meadow, and preach a masterful sermon. When the Roman soldiers were sent to arrest him they stood spellbound listening to his magic words and, returning without their prisoner, said: "Never man spake like this man." Yet if he came only to preach he would never have left his throne in heaven for a preaching tour on earth.

Jesus was the greatest Teacher of all time. He had no college education or university training. He had no great teachers and no great libraries for study; yet his teaching has changed the philosophy of the world and has influenced all nations and races of earth. Still this was not his great mission to mankind.

He was the greatest of all Physicians. He healed all manner of disease, he cured the incurable; he never lost a case. But he came to do a greater work than to heal the body. He sympathized with the sorrowing, but did not come to take sorrow out of the world. He resisted temptations, but did not come to keep us from being tempted, but gave power to resist and overcome temptation.

He was a wonderful example to humanity to show us how to live righteous lives, and many in modern times would base the whole reason for his coming into the world upon his life and his example. But if he came simply as a model for mankind to imitate, that would appeal only to the strong-minded, those who have strong will power, who feel that they can manage themselves and walk independently of any outside or supernatural assistance. It would have no appeal for those who have gone far out into sin and are bound by the power of evil habits and Satan's influences.

Jesus had all of these attributes we have mentioned, and many more too numerous to mention. Yet none of these, nor all of these combined, induced him to embark upon his foreign missionary journey to earth to save humanity. He came into this world as a Savior of man. He came to atone for our sins. He came "to seek and to save that which was lost." Not merely to save them by his example and teachings; other great teachers of earth have tried that, but it did not save the people from their sins. Suppose one had the power within himself to quit sin. Suppose the thief would quit stealing, the murderer would cease to kill, the debaucher of young people would turn over a new leaf, and they all had the power to "stay quit," what about their past sins? What will become of the stain of sin? He alone can save from the uttermost to the uttermost all who come unto God by him. He is the antidote, the remedy for sin. He alone can say with authority: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." "There is no other name given under heaven whereby we must be saved." Yes, Jesus is the only Savior of the world.

Yet his followers are slow about telling the "good news" to the lost. After 1931 years less than half the human race ever heard the name of Jesus. Nineteen hundred years ago he laid down his life on Calvary's hill that he might atone for the sins of all who will accept him as a Savior. That cross on which he was crucified became a four-way fingerboard to point humanity to the way out of sin into eternal life. The first point of the cross was downward. It sank into earth to lift fallen humanity out of their sins. The second finger points upward to the great love of the Father God who "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." The third and fourth fingers of the cross point outward east and west, and with its outstretched arms it girdles the globe to take in all humanity—who-soever will—white, yellow, red, brown and black people, high and low, rich and poor. He gave up his life for the sins of the whole world, if they will accept him as their Savior.

Sin cannot be evolved out of the heart. It cannot be educated away. Culture and refinement provide no antidote for sin. Only the "blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin." His mission to earth is to supply earth's greatest need—that of a SAVIOR, from sin. That is the remedy for all earth's ills. Social reforms are all useful; a cleansing of civic and political life is desirable, but Jesus the Savior of the world, cleansing the hearts of men, will solve all these problems. The greatest of earth's needs today is for Jesus the Savior to come into the hearts and lives of men and women the world over. Let us spread the "Good News" of "Jesus the Savior of the world." But let us first be sure he is our personal Savior and that he rules and reigns in our own lives. Then we can tell the good news to others.

Some Rare Opportunities of Service.

In the year 1919, there was graduated from Asbury College, a young man from China by the name of Pak Chue Chan. This young man had gifts and graces sufficient for some of us who knew him, to prophecy for him a career of great usefulness. As a foreign student he excelled many of the orientals in his ability to acquire the technique of the English language, and to command a good style and diction in the use of it. His processes of thought were logical and forceful. He had a heart burning with a passion for man's redemption. He wanted to prepare himself well to take back a message of hope to his own countrymen.

After finishing at Asbury, he was led to go to Emory University for two more years of training. It was here that he decided to take a medical course in George Washington University Medical Department, Washington, D. C. When he had finished his medical training, he returned to his native land, and became the President of a hospital in Canton, China. Here he remained until three years ago, the Lord led him to establish a hospital under his own control. This new hospital has a foundation of one-third of a million dollars. A concrete building four stories high and occupying an entire city block in the heart of the great city of Canton, China, is erected. Mr. Chan now wants to operate this new hospital on a Christian basis and he is anxious to get into communication with a number of American Christian physicians and nurses, who are willing to carry the spirit of Christ into their work, and serve humanity not for pecuniary reward, but in order to make the medical service serve as an approach to that greater work of the restoration of the souls of men. Where in America are there some very fine Christian young men and women who will respond to this splendid opportunity for service? If you are interested, write to Dr. Pak Chue Chan, Central Hospital, Canton, China.

Behaviorism—A Battle Line.

The above is the title of a large, handsome volume of 369 pages, edited by Rev. William P. King, D. D., Book Editor of the M. E. Church, South. It is excellent print, on good paper, and neatly bound. The book is published by the Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Dr. King has secured, from some nineteen or twenty prominent, scholarly men, a series of carefully prepared articles on the subject indicated at the head of this notice.

The book is a protest against a modern heresy under the head of Behaviorism, a teaching which has been spreading rapidly, and has gathered unto itself a considerable following. It occurs to me that Behaviorism is a sort of natural fungus growth on the tree of evolution. If you destroy the faith of the people in God and the Bible, they are certain to wander about in darkness, taking up with all sorts of strange notions and false teachings.

Dr. King, himself, makes a fine contribution to the book. One of the charming chapters is written by Dr. Lynn Harold Hough. One of the ablest and clearest discussions contained in the book is by Julius Mark, Rabbi of the Vine Street Temple, Nashville, Tenn., as you see, a Jew. The book offers some difficult reading, and calls for a bit of study to get at the thought of a number of the contributors. It can be had of The Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

"Blood and Fire—General William Booth." By William Hamilton Nelson, D. D. The Century Co., New York. Now $1.00.

This is a book which should have a very wide reading. The author, William Hamilton Nelson, D. D., is editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, and has written several books in recent years which have had a wide circulation. Dr. Nelson has a background which eminently qualifies him to write a biography of William Booth. He was himself a member of the Salvation Army for some years, and is well acquainted with the spirit and genius of the organization. Commander Evangeline Booth has given the book her approval and by permission it is dedicated to her.

The author places William Booth in the same class with John Wesley as a great spiritual leader. He asserts that if William Booth had lived in Wesley's day, he would have been chosen by Wesley as his successor.

Equally great with William Booth was Catherine Booth, his wife. As a remarkable woman she ranks along with Susanna Wesley, the mother of John and Charles Wesley. The reader will appreciate the fine portrayal of character of Catherine Booth in this volume.

The people who believe in sanctification as taught by John Wesley will greatly appreciate the attention which the author gives this experience, which has a large place in the teaching and doctrine of the Salvation Army. William Booth was as strong an expounder of the doctrine of sanctification as was Francis Asbury. A wide reading of this book will do much to promote a great spiritual awakening which the church and the nation is so much in need of at this hour.—Julian C. McPheeters, San Francisco, Calif.

E. STANLEY JONES' LETTER

My Dear Friends:

We are now about to finish up the work of the Ashram for this summer, so I will send you word as to how things have gone.

The term Ashram means the ancient forest schools where the guru, or teacher, would retire with his chelas, or disciples, and by personal contact indoctrinate them with his ideas. The keynote of these schools was and is simplicity and spirituality.

* We have tried to be true to this ideal with this difference, that we made Christ the center. This is the second year of the Ashram so we were no longer experimenting. Our purpose was clear and our goal definite. We who had been in active service for the rest of the year wanted to get aside in the quiet to brood over our problems in quiet meditation and prayer. This could only be done in an out-of-the-way place where there would be no cross-currents whatever. Sat Tal lends itself to that for here we are surrounded by forests. This morning while we were in our time of morning meditation and prayer a barking deer stood close to us and barked at us! Some leopards have visited us but have taken nothing more than some dogs! We make the place a sanctuary for birds and animals so they become very tame.

The rising bell goes at five and at five-fifteen we assembled on the knoll with our Bibles for our early morning hour of prayer and meditation. We opened this with a hymn but the rest of the time was spent in personal quest and quiet. At the close of this prayer hour we came back walking in line singing a processional hymn written by one of our Indian members who is quite a poet. We kept silence as far as speaking with each other from the time we arose until morning tea time at 6:30. After tea we hurriedly cleaned up our rooms and then went to the grounds to work an hour with the hands at something. My job was carrying wood and I learned to bring it in Indian style on the head. Many a time as we trudged home with a heavy load of wood we discussed God and life with some companion. It is a good time to discuss things for then you feel the problem from the standpoint of the toiler. After this hour of work we assembled at 8 for our first group study. This was usually a study in the New Testament. For the most part I led it with a study of the Sermon on the Mount. During the year I had written a book on the subject so I have had the very great advantage of going over the manuscript with the members of the Ashram. Their criticism was invaluable. After this we studied various topics connected with the Christian Message which was our general topic for this year's study. Four experts came to study with us our message to Islam. Three of these were connected with the school of Islamics at Lahore. One gave us a picture of what the Gospel is according to Islam. It was interesting and instructive to find out just what the Gospel is according to the Koran. The fatal twists they gave to things! Then we studied The Christian Message on Sex led by a lady who had spent years studying this subject. The Christian Message and Immanence was led by a man who has given years to it. One of the members of the Christa Seva Sangha, a group of Christian ascetics, led us in a course on Karl Barth's teaching. A member of the Servants of India Society led us in a study of the Christian Message on the Social, Economic and Political. Two friends came from South India and gave us a course on Church Union with special reference to the union about to take place in South India between the Wesleys, the Anglicans and the South India United Church. We felt the union there was rather weighed on the side of the bishops. So we are approaching the matter from the side of the congregation in the North. Perhaps in the end when we put these two schemes together we will get something that is close to comprehensive. Two friends of very real ability led us in the Bhakti movements and their relationship to the Gospel. One led us in the study of the History of Indian culture and showed the elements that were worth preserving in it. Some of the younger group of Indians and missionaries got together and brought in a paper on "The Reconstruction of Missions" which caused a good deal of heart searching. Another friend talked to us about ways of sharing with other faiths which brought out a real difference of opinion. We felt that there was real danger of syncretism and this would be fatal to the Gospel. "The Impact of Science on Religion" was a topic that made us think and in thinking we found ourselves in healthy disagreement with the writer of the paper.

FACTS FROM THE FIRING LINE.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."—Hos. 4:6.

Prohibition has wrought miracles of moral, social and economic redemption, but thousands of dries do not know it. Every pastor is urged to reprint the following Fact in the Church Calendar, or read it from the pulpit to offset the destructive wet propaganda which appears in many of the secular newspapers. A new Fact appears in this place in each issue.

The national convention of the superintendence division, National Education Association adopted the strongest prohibition resolution in its history, declaring the 18th Amendment "the most effective means yet devised to curtail the use of alcohol," Associated Press reported "with only one voice against it."

Of course this cursory statement gives nothing of the beautiful spirit that ran through all our study and meditation. Some described the days we spent together in this way as "days of heaven on earth." They were. While the divergences were often real yet we were always true to a motto on the wall of our meeting room: "Here we enter a Fellowship, sometimes we will agree to differ, always we will resolve to love and unite to serve." The spirit of that motto has been through the whole of the summer. I do not think there has been an ugly thing spoken and yet we faced questions with a realism that was searching. Out of this summer discussions we will publish a book which will be published as our Ashram volume.

One of the most beautiful things of the summer was the coming to the Ashram of a rather famous swami. He has a very large Ashram himself and has about 3,000 families who take him as their guru. When he walked into the room on arrival he fell at my feet and said, "You are my guru." He took that literally and was ready to do anything I said. It laid on me a very heavy responsibility. But he opened like a flower to Christian truth. The day came when he wanted me to baptize him. But just before the Sunday came on which he was to be baptized he revealed, as in a flash, the terrible hatred he had toward the British. It wasn't just the ordinary nationalistic feeling. It was bitter and fierce. I told him I wanted him to be a nationalist but I could not baptize him when his heart was filled with this fierce bitterness. It was a terrible disappointment to him. He had walked hundreds of miles to get to me and here I was refusing him. The tears rolled down his cheeks. He turned to me rather fiercely and said, "How can I get rid of this hatred. Can I change my own heart?" He could not. But Christ did. Some time later he came to me and said, "You will baptize me next Sunday. The hatred is gone." It was!

I have scarcely ever been in such a meeting as the one in which we baptized him. Every heart there was melted. Two of our missionaries wanted their little baby baptized along with the swami, so we baptized them together, for the swami had become a little child too. He stayed with us a month and then went back to the place where he had built up his great work as a Hindu to begin all over again as a Christian. He will have to stand much, but he faces it with a song. He declared that he would win five hundred sannyasis in a year. I believe he will. He has rajas and maharajas as his disciples and many temples under him. It will be a grim struggle but he will win. The day he left we asked him where we could send him the photos we had taken of him. He waved his hand with a laugh and said, "I have no address now," and off he marched with just a little bundle of books and a change of his saffron robe.

It has been a great summer, one of the very best of my life. The intimate fellowships, the hours of communion, the struggle for souls that needed light, the clearing of truth in the mind, the exquisite presence of the living Christ, the enriching of the whole of life—these are some of the things that happened.

I have decided I could not go to China. India is too interesting and compelling. So I shall stay on here and throw myself into this great struggle for the soul of a great people. You who are helping with prayer and money are real partners. Keep it up!

The Two Lawyers.

This is a book with a warp of fiction and a filling of facts. It presents the Methodist doctrine of entire sanctification, and the war which has been made against the doctrine in the Methodist Church, in clear and striking fashion.

A certain pastor was preaching a series of sermons against the holiness people whom he called "second blessingists." Two prominent lawyers in his church became so interested that they turned to the Methodist authorities as printed in the historical and doctrinal books of Methodism, and found their pastor was densely ignorant and bitterly prejudiced. They called his hand, and one of the lawyers offered to debate the subject with him publicly. The outcome was quite confusing and amusing. The pastor soon arranged to move into another conference on the pretext of his wife's poor health.

The book has valuable history in it, clear-cut doctrinal discussion; is written in attractive style, and can be read profitably by young and old. It has had a remarkable influence on the minds of many. One woman bought and placed six copies among prominent men in her congregation, which swept away their prejudices and led most of them into the experience of full salvation. The book is printed on excellent paper, bound in cloth, and is an attractive volume of 240 pages. Price is $1.50. The sale of this book has passed quite beyond the thirty thousand mark. It has a powerful influence in the removal of prejudices and the inculcation of spiritual truth. Order a copy of The Pentecostal Publishing Co., Louisville, Ky.

---GLEANINGS FROM THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD---

ASBURY CAMP MEETING.

This vigorous young camp is located in Washburn, N. D., one of the splendid towns of the great Northwest, some fifty miles from Bismarck, the capital of the state. Among its trustees are such capable and consecrated men as Brothers Bibleheimer, Gress, Pfaff, Swenson, Schaeffer, and others. Under the leadership of Dr. Akers it was organized some six years ago, and their growth has been steady and sure. Right on the banks of the Missouri River, near a beautiful grove, they have one of the best appointed tabernacles in the Holiness Movement; and their constituency is gathered from North and South Dakota in increasing numbers.

Dr. Akers, my co-laborer, was back at the camp this year for the third time, and is universally popular with the people. Fred Canaday of Portland, Ore., had charge of the music, while Miss Florence Bergquist, of Washburn, N. D., had charge of the work with children and young people. Scarcely a service passed without numbers getting saved, reclaimed, or sanctified; and the brethren felt that from every standpoint it was the best meeting in the history of the camp.

Rarely have I enjoyed such delightful Christian fellowship as was mine with both the workers and with these great hearted people of the Northwest. After ten days of the intimacies of the camp in prayer, altar work, preaching, and social contacts, I am persuaded that if the trustees of Asbury College had searched the holiness field over, they could not have found a happier combination of devout scholarship, complete consecration, school technique, and administrative ability than they have in Dr. Akers as President of Asbury College. In his splendid success under peculiarly trying conditions I have great joy but no surprise. To me, it was a delight to hear him pour out his soul in prayer for the meeting, and in the altar to see him get right down and help one after another through to victory for conversion, reclamation, or sanctification. He is one of the most effective preachers in the holiness pulpit, and is in large demand for camp meeting and revival work. Fred Canaday is a great soul, a wonderful singer, with a deep consecration. The story of his life on the last Sunday night touched many hearts and blessed all who heard. Miss Bergquist is a pastor in the M. E. Church, and an efficient worker with children and young people. Rev. Paul Rees, one of the gifted young preachers of the holiness movement, was present for a day in the camp, and brought a message of charm and power. He and this scribe are to be the preachers in this camp for 1933, and many are the happy anticipations of the occasion. J. M. Glenn.

BECK BROTHERS' REPORT.

At this writing we are in a tent meeting on Taylor Boulevard, Louisville, Ky. The attendance is increasing and interest growing.

Our tent work began at old Hickory, Tenn., a city of 10,000; the silk mills are there and 3500 people are employed. We had to go outside the city limits for the meeting as they do not allow meetings held except in churches. The ministers of the city are trying to get control of the lots outside the city limits, hence we had trouble getting a lot. There was so much shift work in the mills that we had practically a new crowd every week. The sinners expressed themselves as appreciating the truth that we preached, and some of them indicated their interest by contributing to the expenses of the meeting. Some fifteen or more prayed through at the altar, and many said they were blessed. We found some holiness folk, but were starved for the full gospel, and took courage, determined to press on.

Our next meeting was at Scottsville, Ky., where Rev. W. E. Thomas had begun the work and had to leave. We moved his tent and put up our tent over the same platform and seats. Crowds never dropped off, but increased. Fifteen or twenty found victory, among them four heads of families. From the beginning, the tent would not hold the people. Brother Wade, the Methodist pastor, dismissed on both Sunday evenings; many ministers came and people drove fifty miles to be in the meeting. Some business men of the town are planning for our return this fall with a tent seating 2,000, holding a union meeting. God bless the faithful people who stood by us at Scottsville. Beck Brothers.

A WESTERN ITINERARY.

On June 22, I left my home at Lowell, Mass., to make a visit with relatives in the west, and to fill an engagement with the Gordon, Neb., camp meeting from June 26 to July 5. This was our third time to be a worker at this splendid camp meeting, and I can truly say that this was the biggest and best camp we have ever had at Gordon. We enjoyed good fellowship again with the management of the camp, all of whom we have come to know and to love; and enjoyed working with Rev. George Bennard (author of "The Old Rugged Cross") as the other preacher, and Rev. and Mrs. B. D. Sutton who had charge of the music. The preaching was easy, the spirit of the meeting was most excellent, and there was good response to the invitations. Many sought and obtained both experiences of grace. This camp meeting is truly the center of holiness activity in northwestern Nebraska, and should have the support of every lover of holiness in that portion of the state. It draws very widely from this section and from South Dakota, and is attended by an unusually large number of pastors of various denominations. We have seen several of these receive heart purity at its altars during the three years we have been there. We do not know of a camp in the country that is more indispensable than the Gordon Camp. It fulfills a real mission.

On our way out to Nebraska we went through Greeley, Colorado, where we found the Nazarene District Assembly in session. We were privileged to preach to this great body on Thursday night, June 25th. There was great grace and aggressiveness upon the Assembly. We also returned from Nebraska through Colorado and Kansas, where we visited relatives and preached on Sunday night, July 12 for Rev. L. A. Reed and the congregation of the First Church of the Nazarene at Kansas City, Mo. We then spent three days with my mother near Newcastle, Ind., and while there preached one night for Rev. Carl Thornburg at Hagerstown.

Before Sunday, July 19, I was back home again, and spent this Sunday with my own local church at Lowell, Mass. The glory of God is upon the people, and God is blessing on every line. We are at liberty to accept some camp meeting engagements for the summer of 1932, anywhere east or west. Write me at 57 Fremont St., Lowell, Mass.

IRON MOUNTAIN, MICHIGAN.

The Iron Mountain Holiness Camp Meeting concluded its fruitful ten days services, July 20. This camp continues to grow. Rev. George Bennard, author of "The Old Rugged Cross," preached the gospel of full salvation in a clear, definite way. Each evening the tabernacle was crowded with eager listeners. Arthur and Vernita Bailey, child musicians from Chicago, assisted by local talent, furnished the music.

These children play the piano, trombone, cornet and musical saw. Arthur performs the feat of playing a piano-trombone duet. Vernita matches him by playing a piano-cornet duet. They also gave most interesting chalk talks which proved to be of much value both in the children's meetings and in the adult services.

Mrs. W. I. Francis of Bessemer, presided at the piano and also took charge of the children's meetings. Each morning a crowd of children, numbering as high as 148, attended her services; many of whom sought the Lord. Rev. W. S. Hubbard, pastor of the First Methodist Church in Iron Mountain, led the congregational singing. Rev. Wm. Combella, pastor of the Newport Methodist Episcopal Church, took charge of the morning services. These morning services soon became enquiry meetings. Many troubled souls who had become bewildered by the various cults, were taught "The more excellent way" of 1st Corinthians chapter 13. A beautiful spirit of harmony prevailed throughout the entire camp. The response to the altar calls was very gratifying. Over one hundred souls sought our Lord for pardon and purity.

On the last Sunday afternoon the camp president, Rev. Wm. Combella, stated briefly the financial needs, and in a few minutes the amount was covered by cash and pledges. It was decided to hold another camp meeting in 1932.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Rev. Wm. Combella, of Ironwood, Mich., Pres.; Mr. A. B. Hansen, of Quinnesec, Vice-Pres.; Rev. W. S. Hubbard, of Iron Mountain, Secretary; Mr. Harry Cowling, Treasurer. Mr. Cowling's address is 104 W. Flesiem St., Iron Mountain, Mich. W. S. Hubbard, Sec. of the U. P.

OLD TIME REVIVALS.

After having served a pastorate for eighteen months at Shirley, Ind., wife and I are again back in the evangelistic field, with the Lord's blessing upon our hearts and his seeming favor upon our labors. From April 19 to July 19 we were in unceasing revival effort. Held five revivals, three in New York and two in Pennsylvania, without skipping one day between meetings. Four of these meetings were held with Asbury boys serving pastorates in this section—Elmer Lewis, Paul Keller and Virgil Priddy. All are doing good work, standing in favor with their people and winning souls for Christ. We have been working in Dr. Young's district in the Genesee Conference. He has several Asburians in his employ, and seems pleased with their work. He has given us a hearty welcome in his district, and a good recommendation to his preachers. It is refreshing and encouraging to meet a district superintendent of this type.

We have had nearly 200 professions of pardon, reclamation, or sanctification. The last two revivals were most fruitful in numbers. They reminded us of old-time days of revivalism; sometimes a score or more at the altar praying and weeping their way through to victory. Some very wonderfully saved and sanctified souls. Souls were saved from the ages of 10 to 80 years; among them ten old men past the age of 60. These two revivals were held in the midst of harvest, one of the busiest seasons of the year in this section, with a church full of people at nearly every service. Brother Priddy and his wife rendered most noble service in helping on the work.

The past few days we have taken a rest, by spending a week at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y., enjoying some great programs there, which are largely intellectual feasts, but greatly lacking in soul food. There we met more Asburians; our daughter and her husband who are taking their vacation by attending the Chautauqua Summer School, also Misses Helen Morrison, Elizabeth Gaugh, Miriam Larabee, Junita May, who are spending their summer there. They looked well and happy.

Our plan is to spend the fall in this section and go south for evangelistic work in the winter. We would appreciate calls from any desiring evangelistic help for revivals.

THE LEAGUE IN MISSISSIPPI.

Before reaching Mississippi the Mississippi Quartet held a revival for Rev. Franklin N. Brose at the new Pinemore Camp which was recently opened by the first revival. Before the tent was taken down the tabernacle was under construction. Many seekers came to the altar during this campaign, and in this opened the way for others to come. Since leaving Maryland the Mississippi Quartet was divided into three groups for evangelistic work, Rev. Cross and Rev. Amos Laine being in the present party at work in Mississippi.

The first revival was held in Meridian, the sight of the great school of former days—"Beeson College," or known sometime as the Meridian College. Many seekers came to the altar to be saved and sanctified. Old-time shouting was in the camp the last night of the revival. After leaving Meridian another successful campaign was held for Rev. Marvin Beadle, a former Asburian at Varnado, La. We are now in one week of a two-weeks' meeting for Rev. Kinsey, a former Beeson College man, at the Methodist Protestant Church, Ovett, Miss. Some fifteen were at the altar the second service. An unusual thing was, that the tent was taxed to capacity on Monday evening. Over fifty were at the altar the first week. People are getting under the burden of the meeting. Rev. Amos Laine, the song evangelist, is doing a wonderful work in this revival with his preaching and singing. The people enjoy his playing on the auto-harp and Hawaiian guitar. Walter Cross, a former graduate of Asbury College, is the evangelist. The next three campaigns will be held at Union, Miss., Grayson, La., and Monroe. Remember these workers in your prayers.

Walter Cross.

SAN LUIS POTOSI.

Greetings in the name of him who said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel." How we praise him for the privilege of obeying this command.

Have just returned from a trip over the Huasteca which proved to be one of the best and most fruitful trips I ever made. I saw something over 200 seekers in a month and four days which I spent on the trip. As many hundreds of you dear friends who are praying for this work and sacrificing to carry it forward really know little about this great field, I am going to take time in this letter to tell you in detail a number of things which may make the letter a little lengthy.

I left home Dec. 2, arriving at Valles that same day. This is a trip of about ten hours on the train. Our congregation there is small but full of faith and the Holy Ghost. We had a very spiritual service with them and were delayed there one day more because one of our horses was stolen from the pasture.

This is the first time we have ever had a horse stolen in our nine years of experience in that field. The rains have been late this season and the roads were terrible. Usually we can go in a car from Valles to a place near Coxcatlan covering about 35 miles of the trip in auto, but on this trip we had to go horse-back from Valles on. Our first stop was at Tantizohuiche where we have a few Christian families. We had a good service with them, having about forty in the service. The next day we made a long, hard trip arriving at Coxcatlan at night.

As we arrived late we had no service that night but the following night the church was packed. Our church there is made of adobe brick and has a galvanized roof, it holds about 300 people. Night after night for a week we had a full house and the altar was full. During the day we would go up among the mountain fastnesses to our little congregations of faithful Indians to have services with them. In one place we had about 150 in the services. God is blessing these Indians and has transformed their lives entirely. During the week God gave us between 80 or 100 souls.

Juan Lopez Portillo is the faithful pastor of our church in Coxcatlan. He has some of the most spiritual and enthusiastic workers one could find anywhere. They have carried the Gospel to many towns and villages all around. There are others where they are literally pleading for them to go and they have not been able to. The harvest field is white. We do not have to push doors open any more, all are wide open. True, there is still just enough persecution, stonings, threats, etc., to keep up the real soldier spirit but God has opened the doors everywhere. Rev. Francis H. Soltero.

One of the most concise, most spiritual helps on the Sunday School Lessons is Arnold's Commentary. Every word is meaningful. Just a few copies left, regular price $1.00, and you may have one for 50c. Stamps will be acceptable.

as they approach the summits of grace and love, may enter clouds, may become discouraged, may feel that they have reached the highest heights possible to the human, but there are peaks that shoot into the sunlight far above the clouds. Shall we climb them upon our knees? What brightness, what warmth, what purity of atmosphere, what select company! The multitudes have stopped far below; the world with its glamor and falsehood, pomp and tinsel, seems so far away and heaven so very near.

There are high peaks along the mountain range of religious experience, and God invites us there. Not only so, but in infinite love he comes to us with those influences and tests that would break our souls loose from the world and its littleness, and lift us upon the wings of his power into the high altitudes of faith and life and light.

This is the thought in the text: The eagle delights to build its nest amid the rugged crags of the highest mountain; the nest is made of sticks and twigs. When the eaglets have grown to age and strength sufficient to fly the mother bird insists that they shall leave their nest, and the crag upon which they have perched and plunge out into the air. The young birds hesitate; their wings have not been tested, and the mother bird tears away the sticks and twigs of which the nest is constructed; she determines to give her young ones comfort and repose no longer; they must learn to fly, seek the prey, and support themselves. If the mother bird permitted her young to remain too long in its nest, the muscles of the wings might eventually become so hardened that they never could be used for flight; so she refuses longer to supply her young with food, and she stirreth up her nest, drives them out of their comfort, gives them rest no longer, because continued rest would disqualify them for the high delights of flight. She destroys their place of abode in order that they may seek something far better. When the young bird is forced off the edge of the precipice, and flutters about with its wings unaccustomed to flight, the mother bird will not permit it to fall, but finally diving beneath she catches her young upon her wings and bears it to a place of safety. It is thus that what may seem cruel to the young bird, is really the means of instruction and help until directly it spreads its wings in graceful strength and sails away into the blue vault of heaven.

This is the prophet's figure of God's method with the souls of men. There is an infancy in religious experience; a time when God shelters with great care the little ones in his kingdom; he lets them lie in the nest of comfort and ease while he protects them from the encroachments of the enemy. But there comes a time when they must arouse themselves; they must be up and out and doing something for Christ and humanity; a time for great faith and zealous action. Not infrequently God is compelled in the development of Christian character, to break up the nest in which his children are disposed to rest, to find comfort and contentment. There are countless Christians who can point to experiences that tried their souls; losses that they cannot explain, sorrows that, for the time, tempted them to believe that God cared nothing for their souls; but later on they have come to realize that God was breaking up their nest in order to lead them on to a higher and better state of grace; to bring them into a stronger faith, a deeper experience of divine love, and a service far more active and fruitful than they had once believed possible.

God in mercy plucks away the thing to which we cling in order that our aching hearts may seek better things, and our empty hands may lay hold on eternal things. In the progress of our souls upward, he makes our stopping places so uncomfortable that we are bound to move out and on. At times he appears to leave us alone to struggle; our strength gives way, we sink down, it appears that our all is lost; our sufferings are unbearable, the wings of our faith seem to be exhausted, the storm beats upon us, and then it is that he comes beneath us and bears us aloft and brings us into a profound sense of our utter dependence upon him, and that his love and presence mean infinitely more to us than the things to which we once clung; our loss has been our gain.

I am not coming to you in this exhortation with the lullaby words of a mother to her infant, but with the shout of a captain to his soldiers in battle. I would be almost harsh in voice and startling in statement. I would warn you to expect that if God loves you he will pluck away the decaying sticks and twigs on which you rest, that you get out and go up to higher peaks. Satisfied, contented! No, no, out, up, on and on to higher heights until your faith in God shall be like the wings of the eagle in the air. What room, what light, what purity; the world is far below; it sinks away, its fields become garden spots, its great rivers are but threads, its mountains mole-hills, its noise is hushed; it is like a distant star; it is out of sight. There is music, there is strange fragrance in the air; there is great buoyancy that bears us on; there is a new light, there is a city; it flashes in gold and sparkles in diamonds. Its walls are jasper; it is the New Jerusalem.

Wet Offensive Started in the South.

We notice the above caption in the daily press with an article telling how a group of lawyers in New York City is undertaking to invade the South through the influence of an attorney by the name of Battle, who is going to try to organize the lawyers of the South into a body to assist in breaking down prohibition laws doing away with the Eighteenth Amendment. The writer of this article tells that this man Battle is president of the Southern Society of New York, that he is active in democratic politics in that city, and has worked in co-operation with Tammany Hall. They should have added, the great political cesspool of graft and lawlessness. One can but wish that this representative of the saloons and lawlessness might not only meet with a warm, but with a hot reception in the South.

It is certainly no credit to the lawyers of this nation in uniting themselves in an effort to break down prohibition laws and restore the bar-room. Of course, a large percent of lawyers make their living prosecuting and defending the lawless. The more drunkenness and crime committed by men under the influence of liquor, the more employment and fees they receive.

One is appalled to think there is any such a set of men in influential positions in this country as lawyers, who unite themselves to oppose the prohibition of the liquor traffic. All this clamor that is being made about State Control of the liquor traffic, and shouting about state rights is a tissue of falsehood and hypocrisy. These men who are clamoring for state rights and the liquor controlled by the states, understand the great difficulty that would be found in enforcing prohibition in one state, surrounded by liquor states. They wish to complicate and increase all of the difficulties possible. What they desire is the sale of liquor, and the money and drink they can get out of it. It is a time for the excellent use of righteous indignation.

HONEST FANATICISMS.

recent issue of that very excellent paper, the Nashville Christian Advocate, contained an article from A. C. Briggs, under the suggestive head of "Honest Fanaticisms." We give our readers a paragraph, word for word, as it appeared in the Advocate.

HONEST FANATICISMS

BY A. C. BRIGGS

"In the time of John Wesley there arose a new, high grade of religion, called second-blessing holiness. It existed for a number of years, but finally lost its force. It made a new upheaval about fifty years ago and permeated the Church to a considerable extent, but attracts no considerable attention at the present time. The believers in this doctrine were honest but did not comprehend that a person might just as well obtain a third, a tenth, a twentieth and more blessings and still possess the same abiding presence of the Holy Spirit in his soul."

From the above it seems that our Brother Briggs would make the impression that the doctrine of "second-blessing holiness" was of little importance and short-lived existence in early Methodism. He is certainly a reckless writer. He is either densely ignorant of Methodist history and doctrine, or wilfully deceptive, which we are not at all willing to believe. John Wesley was a faithful preacher of the scriptural doctrine of the remains of sin in the regenerated, and its removal by a distinct second work of grace. Practically all of the early preachers of the Methodist Church believed and taught this doctrine and, better still, enjoyed the experience.

Charles Wesley's hymns radiate with this gracious doctrine of "Speak the second time, be clean; take away my inbred sin." There is nothing better known in the early history of Methodism than that the saintly John Fletcher claimed the second work of grace of entire sanctification, and beautifully exemplified the life of Christian holiness.

Our Brother Briggs is no doubt ignorant of the fact that Bishops Asbury and McKendree not only preached the doctrine of entire sanctification as a second work of grace, but enjoyed the experience and witnessed to the same in their devoted lives.

Pity, that Brother Briggs has not read Clarke, the great Methodist scholar, on this subject, Watson's Institutes, Pope and Paley's Systematic Theology in which they make the second work of grace very clear.

One wonders if Brother Briggs ever attended a Methodist conference and heard the bishop ask those who were admitted on trial, "If they expected to be made perfect in love in this life, and were groaning after it." After what? This gracious second work, this pentecostal baptism, this crucifixion of the old man.

The brother informs us that this doctrine "made a new upheaval about fifty years ago and permeated the church to a considerable extent, but attracts no considerable attention at the present time." He is quite mistaken. Is it possible that a man of any sort of information does not know that we have several great schools in this country built up and carrying on their vigorous work by people who profess to have received the second work of grace in sanctifying power? Is he ignorant of the fact that there are camp meetings sprinkled across the continent, from north to south, from east to west, where hundreds of thousands gather annually to hear the old Methodist doctrine of entire sanctification preached as a direct, instantaneous baptism of the Holy Ghost, as a second work of grace cleansing the hearts of the regenerated from all sin?

As Brother Briggs suggests, there are many blessings, both in the justified and sanctified state, but the baptism with the Holy Spirit in the destruction of the carnal nature, is a distinct work of grace. Regeneration is the coming in of a new life; sanctification is the casting out of an old life—the crucifixion of our "old man."

Brother Briggs also exposes great ignorance on the subject of divine healing. We have no sympathy with much that goes on in a sort of public show of divine healing, nevertheless, that many are divinely healed is a well known fact. Brother Briggs makes a very positive statement when he says, "No miracles have been performed since the days of the apostles." I rarely hold a revival meeting that some time during the service the pastor does not stand up in the pulpit, give the name of some sick person who is a member of the church, or living in the community, and ask that special prayer be made for the recovery of this person.

Some years ago Bishop Haygood, a great, brilliant and much beloved man, presided over the Kentucky Conference. During the conference there was a debate over a brother who was in very poor health, and his supernumerary relation was asked for. During the debate some one said that this brother was a great believer in divine healing. The supernumerary relation was granted. When it was all over Bishop Haygood said, "Of course, I could say nothing during the discussion, but now that it is concluded, I wish to say you are in danger of making the false impression that this brother has been granted the supernumerary relation because he believed in divine healing. My brethren, I am sitting in this chair, presiding over this conference in answer to prayer. I was in very feeble health, indeed a very sick man; the church was called upon through the church press to pray God to heal and raise me up. The prayers of the church were answered and I am here as a result. This is not the first time prayer has been heard for my healing. When a boy I was critically ill; my health was restored, I grew up, was converted and called to the ministry. An old Aunt of mine said, 'I knew Atticus was not going to die when he was sick, for I prayed to God and he gave me the answer that he would raise him up, and that he would preach the gospel.'"

Men of the type of the brother who wrote the article under consideration, have little idea of what is going on in the upper world of faith, prayer, communion and fellowship between God and men. Jesus is the same yesterday, today, and forever. Thousands of humble people are going to God in prayer for their bodies, and those of their friends, and he is giving gracious answers.

This writer, after long wasting illness, came to the very borders of death, was unconscious twenty-four hours; late at night the doctor called my wife out and said I would not live until morning. Prayer was offered by devout people for my recovery, and I am here today in answer to prayer, for which I praise God.

Jesus Christ makes some remarkable promises to those who pray the prayer of faith. Would God there was greater faith and more prayer. This old world is in dire need of mighty manifestations of God's power. Prayer and faith furnish God with an opportunity to reveal himself among men to heal their sicknesses and sanctify their souls.

What It Means to Consecrate.

MRS. H. C. MORRISON.

CONSECRATION is not part of a sinner's program. He has nothing to present to the Lord, but must fall at his feet as an enemy to righteousness, and as a rebel against God and his law; must surrender and plead for mercy and forgiveness.

After one is born into the family of God, he then has a life to consecrate to the Father to be used in any way the Lord may designate. Paul insisted in most pleading terms, that Christians "present themselves a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is their reasonable service."

The Bible emphasizes the fact that we must be wholly the Lord's, for unless we do thus consecrate ourselves to him, we cannot render unto him the kind of service that is wholehearted and pleasing to God. But it is difficult for us to come to the point where we absolutely "sell out" lock, stock and barrel, to the Lord. We want to be the boss of our lives and do somewhat as we please; but how many times we fail to choose that which is best, either for us or those concerned.

In a recent issue of The Western Recorder, a splendid Baptist paper published in this city, we read the experience of a preacher who was led through the valley of suffering into the plains of perfect rest and peace in Christ. It is such a concrete case of what it means to consecrate that I am taking the liberty of giving it to our readers, trusting there may be those who are seeking the light who will profit by this man's experience. There is only one way to this land of perfect peace and joy—an absolute abandonment of our all to the will of God, as clay in the hands of the potter to be moulded and fashioned as he will. Read the interesting account of this man who, we believe, received the old Methodist experience of entire sanctification.

MY THREE YEARS SOJOURN IN THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW.

Let me tell you about it, and may God's name be greatly glorified.

On May 28, 1928 after nearly thirty-nine years of incessant toil as pastor with one month's vacation in the time I was told by Dr. J. W. Hayes, physician, of Franklin, Ky., that I needed a long rest. He said, "Suppose you try three months during the hot summer weather anyway." I yielded. So arrangements were made for preaching at my churches and I found myself at home for the needed rest. My first thought was to raise the best garden of my life, thinking that the rest punctured with healthful exercise would the better prepare me to take up my work in the fall with renewed vigor, but God soon let me know that my plan was not his plan, for in a few days I was not able to go to the garden at all. So there I was with a nervous breakdown. The trip to the valley of the shadow was already begun and I didn't know it.

Every day for sometime brought me nothing but dismal disappointment. And on June 26th the wire flashed the news of my brother's death, this of course added to my gloom, and the more so because it left me the only member of a large family to wander a while on this side of the river, the rest having all passed over.

Early Sunday morning, July 8, I felt my left arm and limb give way and I thought I was paralyzed. I called my family to the bedside and gave them what I thought might be my last message, but Dr. Carroll, my family physician, came rushing in directly and in a few moments said, "No, this is not paralysis." That eased my mind somewhat.

This point was the beginning of six weeks of the darkest period of my life. Physical suffering, nerves shot to pieces, the densest gloom and frightful fear. It was awful and indescribable. There was no ceasing of this agony. What must I do? To rebel against God was useless. I thought of two verses of his word, "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him and he shall bring it to pass." "Casting all your care upon him for he careth for you." I cast my soul upon these sayings of the Lord and handed myself over to him, and awaited results.

The hot summer days dragged wearily by, all was gloom, seemingly as dense as Paul's last journey to Rome. I was driven to a life of prayer and meditation. My patience and faith were sorely tried. One day as the month of August was waning I was sitting by my wife who was my guardian angel during this experience and watched over me with heavenly vigilance every step of the way. I said to her, "I have heard people say they had no fears of death, that they were just waiting for the summons to come home. I do not think I can say that." Her quick response was, "Do you think the Lord would have you preach all these years and then cast you off at last." I said, "No, I know I have been converted and I have his word for the rest." Yet all was gloom still. About three days after this I was sitting again in prayer and meditation I felt my heart melt, as it were, toward Jesus Christ in perfect resignation to his will and providence; in a moment I was filled with a heavenly glory and ecstasy that were about all this shattered nervous frame would stand. All gloom was driven away as thick fog before a bright sunrise. This was the beginning of seasons of heavenly experiences that have lasted unto the present. No language that I can use can begin to express the joy and bliss of these experiences. They can best be expressed by a stanza of the familiar hymn, "Beulah Land":

"My Saviour comes and walks with be,
And sweet communion here have we;
He gently leads me by his hand,
For this is heaven's border land."

Yes, many times I could truly sing:

"The Zephyr seems to float to me Sweet sounds of heaven's melody."

I have always thought that Bunyan in his "Pilgrim" gave us a pretty true picture of Beulah Land and now I'm more convinced of it than ever.

Many and varied are the experiences of these three years. It would delight me to tell them all. In fact, they would fill a booklet but I must have respect to the length of this article so must content myself with a few.

The doctor told me to rest three months and I have been at home three years. Why this strange providence? Was it a chastisement or was it meant as a preparation for me to bring forth yet the best fruit of my life? An inner circle of friends have been praying that the latter may come true. What about my future? I leave all plans in the hands of him whose I am, and who never makes a mistake. As I look forward toward the River it is with a calmness and serenity begotten and sustained by the power of the Holy Spirit in me. There is not a cloud in sight. As I look across yonder to the glory land by faith I see Jesus enthroned, and the angels casting their glittering crowns before him in adoration and worship crying "Holy, Holy, Holy," and by faith I hear the million voices of the heavenly choir as the voice of many waters singing, "Worthy is the lamb that was slain," and as I listen even while I write these words my soul is well attuned to the sentiment of the sacred old soul-stirring stanza,

"When we've been there ten thousand years
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun."
Hallelujah! Hallelujah!

Believing that a Divinely-called, wholly-sanctified, well-equipped, Spirit-filled ministry is one of the greatest needs of our times, and for all time to come, I am glad to make a donation for the upbuilding of the Asbury Theological Seminary at Wilmore, Ky.

For this great work, I promise to give $..... per year for five years, first installment due September 1, 1931. I will join all who are helping in this good work in prayer for the blessing of the Lord to rest upon it.

THE NICKEL BROUGHT HAPPINESS.

James found a nickel in the dust that mother emptied out of the sweep-er. Nobody claimed it, so mother said James could have it. What should he do with it? James wanted to spend it for something that would make someone happy.

When his Uncle Frank came in that evening, James brought out the coin. "If I bought peanuts they would not last long," he said. "Even if I divided them with someone they would soon be eaten up. Can you think of a good way to spend the money?"

Uncle Frank looked very thoughtful. After a bit he said: "You want to make as many people as possible happy. Is that the idea? Well, how would it be to spend your money for seed pop corn. Then next fall you will have several bushels of corn. You can pop every Saturday and carry some to people who do not have any. What do you think of that plan?"

"And I know of several persons who would buy a sack of nicely buttered pop corn every Saturday," put in mother. "And you would have a nice sum to put in your missionary box, too."

James skipped around the room and clapped his hands. "In the morning I will go down and buy the corn," he said.

The storekeeper did not weigh the corn when James told him what he was going to do. The sack was heaped full. James worked after school hours and on Saturday until he had the ground in fine shape. He was so tired that he almost went to sleep at the supper table. Mother helped to mark off the ground so that the seeds would not be planted too close. Then James dropped the grains and carefully covered them.

Never was there a better showing for a crop. It seemed as though every grain grew. The little green stalks pushed through the ground. A little later the blades began to appear. And after a long time the silky fringe proved that the ears were forming.

After another time of waiting, one frosty morning James came running into the house. "Father says I can bring some in today," he called in his shrill voice.

"Who are you going to bring in?" asked mother. But the little boy was halfway down the garden path. Pretty soon he came back with a little basket full of corn. It was hung around the kitchen range and then came busy Saturdays for James.

There was little Stevie Dorr who had a lame back and could not get around in the winter at all. He said the pop corn balls were as good as candy. Mrs. Worth who had five children, and lived where there was only a scrap of ground in the back yard, could hardly believe James when he said that he had a sack of corn for each of the children.

Then there was the blacksmith's family who lived next door to the shop, and did not even have a scrap of a back yard. James carried the corn to them, and their mother made cracker-jack for the children.

There were other places where James went now and then. At Christmas time he was very busy.

But best of all, the little mite box filled up so fast that James had to carry it to the missionary secretary to be emptied.

"Well, how did the plan work out?" asked Uncle Frank when he came home to spend the holidays.

"It would take a long time to tell about the people I have made happy," said James as he stretched out on the rug before the hard coal burner and looked up at his uncle. "I have saved some corn for seed, and so you see I can go right on making people happy. It was just the best plan. I am so glad that I didn't spend my nickel for peanuts."—Selected.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you scoot over and let me join your happy band of boys and girls? I was thirteen June 7. I was born in Alaska. I hope you will print this letter as it is the

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a little Virginia girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I take The Herald and I enjoy reading it, especially page ten. A friend of mine, Mrs. Owens, subscribed for me two years ago. The old lady is very kind to every one. I have brown hair and eyes. I am five feet high and my weight is 103 pounds. I am eleven years of age and am in the sixth grade. I hope Mr. W. B. has gone to the market when this letter arrives. Who can guess my middle name? It begins with B and ends with A; it has six letters in it. Whoever can guess it I will send them a present or a snapshot.
Irene Jones.
Dunavant, Va.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a Tennessee girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I have written to The Herald once before but Mr. W. B. got it. We take The Herald and I enjoy reading it. I think it is a wonderful paper. I am glad so many of the cousins are Christians. I was eighteen years old Jan. 11. Have I a twin? If so, please write to me. I have brown eyes, red hair and fair complexion. I weigh 145 pounds.
Velma Wells.
Rt. 10, Lewisburg, Tenn.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a little Nashville girl join your happy band of boys and girls? I like to read page ten. I have black curly hair, brown eyes and dark complexion. I am in the sixth grade. I have just finished reading The Herald and thought I would write. Mother takes The Herald. I like to read page ten best of all. As this is my first letter I hope to see it in print.
Ercile Mae Bedwell.
Rt. 3, Nashville, Ark.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Would you let a Tennessee girl join your happy band of boys and girls? This is my first letter to The Herald. I enjoy reading page ten. Katherine Ridgway.
Rt. 1, St. Joseph, La.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you let a young minister join your happy band of boys and girls? I have been a reader of The Herald for several years and think it one of the best papers ever printed for young people as well as the old to read. I feel that if we had more readers of The Herald we would have more Christians. Young people, you are facing the greatest temptations the world has ever faced, and there is only one way to overcome these temptations; that is, to take Jesus with you, for he said, "I am the way, the truth, and the light." If you are not a Christian give your heart to God, for without Christ we are failures in this world. "For what doth it profit a man if he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what would he give in exchange for his soul?"
I am pastor of the First M. E.

Church; have a large church and a good salary. I have light complexion, dark brown hair, blue eyes, six feet high, weigh 180 pounds, age between eighteen and twenty-eight. I would be glad to correspond with some good Christian girl who has a high school education and musical talent.
G. W. Prince.
Ness City, Kansas.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I have been reading page ten for a good while, and thought I would write my first letter to The Herald. I am seventeen years of age, have black curly hair, brown eyes, am five feet, six inches tall, and weigh about 125 pounds. I am a Christian, and attend The Calvary M. E. Church here in the city. I have a friend that works at The Pentecostal Pub. Co. He and I are great pals, in fact he is the one that suggested my writing to The Herald. He said I would enjoy getting letters from the cousins. So please publish this letter, so the cousins can send their letters to Frank Bibby.
1519 S. 2nd St., Louisville, Ky.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Will you move over and let a little Iowa girl in? I have been reading some of the letters on page ten and have not found one from Iowa. I am not a Christian and I hope you and the cousins will pray for me. I go to Sunday school when I can. I am a brunette, weigh 99 pounds; have fair complexion. I am twelve years old and in the sixth grade. My hair is cut wind-blown, bobbed and wavy. Have I a twin? If so, write to me. I will promise to write to anyone who will guess my second name. It begins with E, ends with H, and has five letters in it. As this is my first letter I hope Mr. W. B. is in Russia on a visit.
Beulah E. Peterson.
Rt. 3, Nevada, Ia.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I don't often see letters from West Virginia, so I am writing to you. I have never written to The Herald but have greatly enjoyed reading the letters of some who have written. I have been corresponding with some who wrote to page ten and have appreciated the letters very much. Mother takes The Herald and I enjoy reading it very much. I have been a Christian for about five years. I am twenty-one years old, five feet, four inches tall and have dark red hair. I am a junior in high school and enjoy my school work. As this is my first letter, I am wondering if I shall see it in print. I would like to receive letters from any of the cousins who would care to write to me, and will try to answer all I receive.
Lillie Knapp.
Sandyville, W. Va.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I would like to join your happy band of girls and boys. I was eleven years old May 21. I am in the sixth grade. Father is a Methodist preacher and he surely knows the Lord; so does mother. Father gets The Pentecostal Herald every week. Mother taught in Asbury College for six years. Her name was Miss Nevitt. When I am big enough I expect to go to Asbury College, too. I hope Mr. Waste Basket has gone to dump his letters when mine arrives.
Edward Carson.
Wheeling, W. Va.

Dear Aunt Bettie: I am a reader of The Herald and think it one of the best, if not the very best religious papers I ever read. I am a Christian and love Jesus with all my heart, and why shouldn't I, or any one else love such a great and good Friend and Saviour who has done so much for us redeeming us from sin and making it possible for us to live clean, pure, holy lives and filling our souls with unspeakable joy and gladness here and now, and then Heaven, with all its eternal glories with God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, when this life is over. All glory and praise to his dear name forever. I was saved when I was sixteen years old, and from that day to this I have had no other desire or ambition in life than to love and serve him with all my might. I want to say to the young folk that it pays to give yourself to the Lord while young; there is no other life worth living. There is more real joy and happiness in one year of real Christian experience and living than there could possibly be in a century away from God. So you who are outside of the family and fold of God, please do not eat or sleep until you know beyond the shadow of a doubt that your sins are all under the blood, and you are a new creature in Christ Jesus. I don't see how parents dare try to bring children up without God; it is a tremendous responsibility, and God will not hold you guiltless if you fail. I found out long ago that if there were one place we needed God more than another, it is in the home, bringing up a family. I am so very glad I learned to know, and love, and trust God early in life, if I hadn't I do not know where or what I might be today. Now I must not make my first letter too long and wear my welcome out to begin with, but in closing I want to ask a favor of all The Herald readers which, if granted, will be appreciated more than I could possibly tell you in mere words. My request is that you write me a nice fat letter, as my life is somewhat lonely being an invalid bedfast for more than eleven years. My husband and I live alone on our little farm and when he is out at work I am all alone. He arranges something in the window so I can signal him if I need him. Our only son, a dear lad of 24 years, is 600 miles from home working his way through Bible School, a fact for which we praise and thank our God, for in this evil day not many youth, or older ones, for that matter, are choosing to walk with God. The Bible says: "This is the way, walk ye in it." Let us obey God. I shall be watching the mail man.

Dear Aunt Bettie: May a little North Carolina boy join your happy group? I am eleven years old. I do not see many letters from dear old North Carolina. Please wake up boys and girls and join this happy band. I think The Herald is a wonderful paper. My uncle from Hillsville, Va., sent it to us several years ago and I have been reading it continually. As this is my first letter I must not stay long. Love to Aunt Bettie and cousins.

Dear Aunt Bettie: Here I am for the first time to introduce myself as a member of your band. I am seven years old, and am in the third grade. I have been handicapped by being crippled, but that is not going to keep me from living for Jesus and getting an education. My twin sister and I sang for the League; our songs were "Jesus Never Fails," and "I Am His." All you boys and girls write me. Good bye, everybody.

FALLEN ASLEEP

HAYES.

May 24, our dear brother, Peter C. Hayes, left us to join those who have gone on before. He was only ill a few days but seemed to know long before he died that he was going soon. Praise the Lord, he was ready to go. He was born in 1859; was married to Miss Mary Evers in 1883. He left behind, beside his widow, one son, Richard Hayes, two daughters, two brothers, and one sister, Mrs. J. W. Dassey. "Uncle Pete," as he was affectionately called, was a friend to every one, always helping those who were in need and sacrificing self for others. He always had a kind word and encouraging bit of advice. His neighbors, friends, and kinsfolk loved him and he will be much missed by all, as he was a pioneer and was widely known. He was a member of the Audilla Baptist Church at Midulla, Fla., and his funeral was held from there. Truly a Christian spirit has left us the better for his being among us.

He is not here, he is just beyond,
Where dwells the angel band.
He's happy there in that bright home,
Beyond dark Jordan's strand.

So cheer up friends who loved him best,
We, too, shall go some day.
May we live true and stand the test
Of God's true love and righteousness,
So we through his great kindness
May meet our Brother Hayes.

Mrs. Nannie Hayes.
Rt. 1, Lakeland, Fla.

CAVE.

Rev. Ashby Cave departed this life July 13, leaving a wife and six children to mourn his home-going. He was sixty-four years of age, and had been preaching twenty-eight years. He lived a good life and was kind to every one with whom he came in contact. He has laid aside the toils and cares of this life and has gone to be with his Lord and Master on the other side, where he will meet the loved ones gone before. During his three months' illness he suffered without complaint. He left a bright testimony behind, his last words being, "The Lord is with me," after which he fell asleep in Jesus to await the resurrection morn, when the dead in Christ shall rise to meet their Lord in the air.

His sister,
Lily Cave.

WET AND DRY PLANKS.

Joseph T. Cargo.

There is said, printed, and heard these days a great deal about the "wet and dry" planks in each political party. Some people are for modification and some for repeal of the 18th Amendment. Some people have gone so far as to form themselves into a society by name of "The Crusaders of America" in order to get members enough to throw out the 18th Amendment and Jones Act so they can manage and conduct the sale of liquor.

I will venture to say, "There is not a person that is in favor of abolishing the 18th Amendment that will hunt or send for an intoxicated person, or even furnish liquor to a person to drink until he is drunk, to take charge of the steering wheel of an automobile or steamer to go any distance with them. Another thing about the women in "The Crusaders of America"; there are some fine, well meaning women therein who, if they understood the true meaning of their acts, would never have anything to do with the Crusaders of America. If our laws are upheld and society protected some one has to suffer. The criminal does not intend to abide by the law, and of course, he resists the law by shooting his way out. If the criminal were allowed freedom, there would be no need of laws for protection from robbers, murderers, arson, etc.

It is therefore necessary for the law enforcement officers to bear arms. No woman wants to be a wife to a man who gets drunk, to come home and beat her senseless, kick her and all her children out of doors in all kinds of weather without something to keep them warm, or anything to eat. I am inclined to believe when Mrs. Norton rebuked Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, by saying "That the womanhood of America will be the strongest factor in bringing about the repeal of the 18th Amendment," she surely must have been deceived. There are thousands of men and women who have a voice in the election who do not understand the position of the liquor interests, and when it comes to a showdown, if ever, the womanhood of America will show that intoxicating drinks are not wanted. There is no sadder sight than to see the women of a land grasping at the ignoble and rejecting the noble. Abdicating their true throne over the heart to grasp at the kingdom over fashion; ceasing to protest against impurity and unbelief and giving an underhand encouragement to the criminal element of drunkenness and vice, turning away from their mission to bless, while thousands of their sisters are crying in the night for something to eat. Who, if not the women, are to be the hearts of redemption of the poor from social wrong.

The liquor interest has had a chance at all kinds of laws, during the last century. Did they obey the laws of the country? Not much, only as they were compelled so to do. Intoxicating liquors are not medicine, food, nor clothing. The party that drinks intoxicating liquors knows very well before he touches the glass of liquor that it will cause him trouble before he is through with it. He there and then becomes a criminal unto himself, and later on to destroy his own home, wife, children and himself. There is no person who wants a drinking man for a foreman, laborer, or mechanic in their employ.

Much as Mr. Raskob, chairman of the Democratic Committee, abuses the 18th Amendment and is in favor of the repeal of the 18th Amendment, he will not, for his own safety, hire a drunken driver to drive an automobile with him in it, through a wild country and over rough roads; neither will he employ a doctor that is drinking to attend a serious case or accident.

There is no better time than now for every person that believes in Christianity, peace, love, sobriety, and loves their fellowmen, loves the flag and country, and who loves old age, to put on the armour of faith and go boldly forth to help subdue the lovers of the enchanted bowl which begets crime, misery and want, and drive them from the face of the earth. All the agents of the liquor interest are organizing for a victory of the liquor traffic over prohibition which means they will undertake to tie up the intelligent people with the underworld and the criminal class in order to overthrow the 18th Amendment or prohibition and bring back the saloon.

What has been done in past days will be done again by the liquor interest, should they get back light wine and beer. Whiskey, as well as other intoxicant liquors, will flow just as freely as in days gone by. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him,

Adam Clarke---Great Commentary

Dr. Clarke was one of a long succession of men who, in every age of the Christian Church, have applied the best energies of their intellect and heart to the study and interpretation of the Scriptures. The seven gifts which, according to Augustine, the true expositor of Scripture must possess—reverence, piety, science, fortitude, prudence, cleanness of heart, and heavenly wisdom—were his portions.

The studies of his earlier years always had a bearing on this great work. From the beginning he felt the need of being taught by God to understand his own word. Referring to this, he says: "No man ever taught me the doctrine I embrace; I received it singly by reading the Bible."

Sufficiently critical to aid the inquiries of the more serious student, and yet sufficiently popular to serve the purpose of general edification. He gives a lucid view of the several books of Scripture, as to their dates and authors, their scope and connection; he expounds the original text in a manner adapted to the deficiencies of the reader; he elucidates difficulties in chronology, history, and oriental manners; he develops the grand doctrines of revelation, and applies the whole to the great concerns of human salvation and duty.

One leading feature in its character is independence in thinking. While he availed himself of the labors of others, the great number of his expositions are emphatically his own.

DR. ADAM CLARKE'S COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE

is one of the noblest works of the class in the entire domain of sacred literature. It is a thesaurus of general learning.

Its luminous expositions of the Law and the Gospel; its earnest and forceful appeals to the conscience of the sinner and the unbeliever; its rich counsels for the well-understood wants of the Christian's inner life; its endless exhibitions of general knowledge; and its valuable aids to the students of those holy tongues in which revelation took its first recorded forms—all will render this book the companion and the counselor of multitudes as long as the English language may endure. The man who accomplished it achieved immortality, his name having become identified with an indestructible monument of learning and religion.

We commend it as the most spiritual commentary published. Six large volumes, good paper, good binding, new type.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

REV. O. G. MINGLEDORFF, D. D.

Lesson IX.—August 30, 1931.

Subject.—The Mission to Cyprus. Acts 12:25 to 13:1-12.

Golden Text.—I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Rom. 1:16.

Time.—About A. D. 44 to 47.

Places.—Antioch and Cyprus.

Introduction.—It was necessary for the life of Christianity that the early Church should become missionary, for a non-missionary church soon dies. At one time there was a sort of slogan in the Church, that said: "Go or Send." Then some good brother with more sense changed it to "Go or Die." The Dead Sea receives fresh water from the River Jordan and several other streams, but gives out nothing; and it is so dead that nothing can live in it. In Egypt the Nile gathers up all the waters from the melting snows about its headwaters, and pours them out over a vast alluvial plain that furnishes bread for millions of people, and it was kept sweet. The selfish man shuts himself in with his own bad company and dies, while the liberal soul feels and supplies his neighbor's need, grows fat, and lives. The home church needs missions as sorely as the heathen.

Comments on the Lesson.

25. Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem.—If you will read the 11th chapter of Acts you will learn how at that time God was beginning to break down Jewish prejudice against the Gentiles, and to move the disciples to carry the gospel to them. Peter was sent to the household of Cornelius, a Roman Centurion, after his house-top experience. After the murder of Stephen, the disciples were scattered abroad, and preached everywhere as they went. Some found their way into Antioch, and established a church there, "speaking the word to none save only to Jews." A little later certain others came from "Cyprus and Cyrene, who when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Greeks also, preaching the Lord Jesus Christ." Many were converted; and when the news reached Jerusalem, the church there sent Barnabas to Antioch to see about the matter. Needing more help, Barnabas went to Tarsus and brought Saul to Antioch to assist him in the work. In those days a certain brother by the name of Agabus went to Antioch from Jerusalem, and prophesied that there would soon be a great famine. This "came to pass in the days of Claudius;" and the Antioch church sent relief to the poor saints at Jerusalem, sending by the hand of Barnabas and Saul. Their return to Antioch was after they had delivered this help at Jerusalem. Took with them John.... Mark.—This young man belonged to a well-to-do family in Jerusalem. He must have had some fine characteristics; or Barnabas and Saul would not have become so attached to him. Although he failed them on their first missionary journey, he afterwards righted himself and went with Barnabas on another missionary tour; and Saul became reconciled to him, and found him very helpful in the work. John Mark wrote the second Gospel; although he seems to have gathered most of the story from the lips of Peter, so much so that some have called it "Peter's Gospel."

1. Prophets and teachers.—These two words are frequently used in almost the same sense in the New Testament, although there must be some distinction in their use in this verse. Prophets is a larger word than teachers, in that the former both taught the word and foretold coming events; while the latter were such as taught in the Word. The Antioch church was somewhat cosmopolitan. Simeon Niger must have been a very dark-skinned Jew, if judged by the import of his surname. Lucius of Cyrene has a Roman name, but may have been of Hebrew extraction. Manaen had been brought up with Herod; but nothing is known of his origin. He may have been a Jew. Barnabas and Saul were both Jews. The little church was well manned.

2. As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted.—That was a good time and place for the Lord to find real missionaries. Well educated missionaries are needed; but they are less than worthless on the field, except they be full of the Holy Ghost and power. The Holy Ghost said.—Here we have marked evidence of the personality and office-work of the third Person in the Holy Trinity. A mere influence could not speak. Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.—Again in proof of the personality of the Holy Spirit, I call attention to the two personal pronouns, ME and I. Certainly they could not be applied to anything other than a person. All true missionaries are called of God for their work. Others had better stay at home.

3. Fasted and prayed.—That was proper—the more praying the better. I like this old Bible custom of laying on hands. These brethren could not thereby confer any special blessing upon the two outgoing missionaries; but there is a certain solemnity in such an act that is worth while; and, in a sense, it confers upon such workers a sense of the authority of the Church to commission its workers. In other words, all church work should be characterized by decency and order, in order that there may be no room for harsh criticism.

4. Being sent forth by the Holy Ghost.—This was their chief sending. The Holy Spirit recognizes the authority of the Church, and does not discount it; but endorses it by adding thereto his own authority to send men into foreign fields to preach the gospel. Seleucia.—Antioch was some 300 miles north of Jerusalem, and Seleucia was west of Antioch about 16 miles on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea. It was a walled seaport town. From this port Barnabas and Saul sailed for the Island of Cyprus, an island lying some little distance off shore. It gave the missionaries some advantage, because it was the native home of Barnabas. Its people were notorious because of their immoral worship of the goddess Venus. Their need of salvation was a distinct note in the call for the gospel; for Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost.

5. Salamis.—Your map will show you the situation of this city on the eastern coast of Cyprus. It was the Greek capital of the island. Here the missionaries preached the gospel in the synagogues of the Jews, as they did in nearly all places. This was their best opportunity to meet the people. John to their minister.—That English is awkward. The R. V. is better: "They had also John as their attendant." Maybe it would be clearer, if we used the word assistant, or helper.

6. Paphos.—Run your eye south-westward across the island, and you will find this city on the shore of Cyprus. It was quite important, being the city in which the Roman governor had residence. In this city the missionaries came in contact with a prominent Jewish sorcerer by the strange name of Barjesus, who gave them some trouble; but Saul gave him more trouble. The term Barjesus means a son of Joshua, although far removed.

7. The deputy of the country.—Proconsul is better (R. V.). Sergius Paulus.—A purely Roman name. A prudent man.—"A man of understanding" is far better. See R. V. The character of this man is proved by the fact that he "called for Barnabas and Saul and desired to hear the word of God." One's expressed desires reveal his inner nature.

8. Elymas the sorcerer.—Sorcerer means a magician, a wizard, a trickster, a fortune teller. Withstood them.—He knew that if the proconsul became a Christian, his gains would be at an end; therefore he tried to turn away the proconsul from the faith.

9. Saul, (who is also called Paul).—Here for the first time Saul's Roman name is used. Henceforth he is known as Paul. This fact, possibly, brought out more clearly his Roman citizenship. Filled with the Holy Ghost.—Some would expect Paul to use great gentleness in dealing with this sinner; but not so. He was filled with the Holy Ghost for a far different purpose. God's messengers must be kind at the proper time and place; but there come occasions when they must be veritable Boanerges, sons of thunder. Such was Paul on this occasion. The sorcerer had met his match.

10. Did one ever use severer words than these: "O full of all guile and all villainy, thou son of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord." That was fearful; but sentence had yet to be passed upon this criminal. I have given the R. V.

11. Here is the sentence: "Behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season." That was none too severe when his crime is considered. And it was fulfilled with no chance of appeal for a new trial, or for commutation; for "immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand." God's judgments are not always so sudden; but they are always certain.

12. The sequel in this case was good. Paul wanted to save the proconsul, but hardly foresaw what was going to happen. Read the verse: "Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord." That is not what we were looking for. Possibly we would have expected him to be astonished at the terrible miracle wrought through Paul, but the two were so closely related that they dovetailed into each other.

I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, Phil. 3:14.

The Mills of The Gods

by DR. C. F. WIMBERLY.

After reading sophisticated novels, sex stories, and tales of pagan glory, one comes with a great deal of delight and satisfaction upon this splendid story of Dr. C. F. Wimberly—"The Mills of the Gods." As the title implies it is a story of justice and recompense, and reveals in no uncertain manner how God, and not Chance, is ruling the Universe. The story moves with sure and certain strides, is gripping, worth reading, and the book deserves a wide circulation in this day of lost faith and false values.—JOHN RICHARD MORELAND, Poet and Critic, Norfolk, Va.

THE DEADLY UNDERTOW.

Will O. Scott.

(Lines composed on occasion of a young girl, at Atlantic City, being drowned when drawn out to sea by an undertow.)

On every sea there's an undertow
Beneath the sporting wave;
A treacherous current just below
That leads to a watery grave.

However strong may be the oars,
However deep the sorrow,
This undertow will strew the shores
With wreckage on the morrow.

There's an undertow in each life, alas!
By the mortal eye unseen,
Though the surface be as smooth as glass
And the skies above, serene.

There's an undertow for the girls and boys
Where the social currents meet,
Where the trap is set 'mid the worldly joys

For their merry, dancing feet.
There's an undertow in the flowing bowl,
With its deadly serpent's bite,
That will sink the precious human soul
To the depths of darkest night.

But thanks to God, our Savior's blood
That washes white as snow,
Will bear us on its crimson flood
Safe home to Heaven we know!

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

I have a list of people I am praying for that the Lord may save some and sanctify others. The very generous offer of The Pentecostal Herald to January 1 for only fifty cents suggested to me that I can supplement my prayers by sending this evangelistic, holiness, gospel preaching weekly into the homes of these people. This insures that at least once a week they will be led to think of spiritual things, and if they read and heed The Pentecostal Herald's messages, perhaps opposite their names on my prayer list can be marked the word "Answered."

T. M. Hofmeister: "We are entering into the ninth week of a revival in Lima, O. Never have we found the people so cold and indifferent. The whole city is apostate. We ask our dear friends to join us in prayer. We hope to continue through August. Pray for a revival for Lima. The tabernacle seats three thousand. Crowds pitiful. Offerings as low as forty cents. Spent $150.00 in advertising. Broadcasted over the radio, but the people are adamant. Churches sell ice cream on the pavements in front of the church buildings. The empty freezers stand there on Sunday morning to welcome the hungry. This city needs missionaries who will be supported from outside friends. This present campaign can be broken through, but it needs much prayer, patience and perseverance."

Rev. Stephen B. Williams, who has recently resigned his pastorate to re-enter evangelistic work, is conducting a meeting in the M. E. Church, South, at Jacoby, La., which his father and mother helped to build thirty-five years ago. He has moved with his family to the old home of both himself and wife, and will do evangelistic work. Following this meeting he will conduct a camp meeting with the M. P. pastor at Broken Bow, Okla. Bro. Williams helped to establish the encampment ground there on beautiful Mountain Fork River, and is president of the Association. He is available for meetings, preferably in Louisiana, and his address is Jacoby, La.

BRIGHT SPOTS IN A CHRISTIAN'S LIFE.

The writer having been converted at the early age of twelve years, has always found unspeakable joy in leading others into the Gospel light. We recall the conversion of one, especially at this time. A precious man, poor in this world's goods and unlettered according to this world's view of wisdom, but, Oh! how full of godly wisdom and rich in the Christian graces—Love and Truth.

One Sabbath morning clad in jean trousers and a blue flannel shirt, I found him seated in the rear of the Sunday school room, of which the writer was acting superintendent. And being led of the Holy Spirit I walked to the rear and welcomed the stranger. Being very-anxious about his soul's welfare I enquired if he were a Christian. And honest soul that he was, he replied that he was not, but that he had an earnest desire to be saved. In a conversation of a few minutes I learned that he had been an altar boy in the St. Louis Cathedral, a Roman Catholic Church in the City of New Orleans, but he informed me that he had failed to find any comfort for his soul in there. He told me that he had visited the different churches in the city in search of some message or word of peace and comfort for his soul, but like Noah's dove, he found no place on which to rest his weary feet. He had even visited a Jewish Synagogue. I then suggested that the Holy Spirit had led him to this spot. He said if he could find the church in which his wife had been "christened" he would go in it. As I had access to the records of this particular church, I promised to look up the record and let him know if she had been christened in our church. To my delight I found that she had been baptized in this church twenty-two years previously.

God was with me in leading this precious soul into the light. Although he was then thirty-four years of age and born and reared in this great city this dear man could neither read nor write. I offered my services to teach him, but he would not accept same. I afterward learned from him that he had since learned to read God's word while kneeling at an old log in the midst of the woods near his house. I visited the spot and saw where the grass had been trodden down in his anxiety to learn to read. Through his energy and help our Sunday school was increased numerically. Joe became an honored member of that church. And it was interesting to notice how through his zeal and loyalty for the cause of God he put many older members to shame.

Shortly after his conversion, he asked me what I thought about his going out on the street with another Roman Catholic convert to preach the Gospel. I told him he must "obey God rather than man"—and he started out on his mission joyfully. Three hours later he called to tell me of a wonderful street meeting, where upward of 200 gathered to hear them, and he judged fully seventy-five to a hundred people raised their hands for prayers.

Joe remained with us for about eighteen months and God called him home.

I expect to meet Joe inside the Golden Gate, some day.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked in the long ago by one who was not asking the question sincerely, but in order to shun the responsibility of helping that one who needed his sympathy and support.

In These Days of Backsliding and Unbelief

I wonder if we are recognizing the fact that we are OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER, and are seeking in every possible way to help them into a higher state of grace?

We Are Giving You An Opportunity,

Will you give a bit of your energy, or a portion of your tithe, in order to put THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD in the homes of your neighbors and friends? It will give them a taste for the higher and better things of life. It will stimulate in them a desire for a closer communion with Christ. It will warn them of the dangers of false teaching that is so prevalent today. What greater service could you render a friend than to stir up his or her heart with earnest desires to know more of the blessed Master?

Reasons Why You Should Circulate The Herald

It is food to hungry souls. It is pure and clean. It fights sin in all its forms. It is a real family paper. It teaches a full gospel from repentance to glorification. It has always stood for the doctrine of Entire Sanctification. Its editorial and literary qualities are of the best. It is a blessing to the shut-in, and they are able to get the pure gospel at home. It has a sermon by some able writer each week, which is worth the price of the paper many times. It contains the best thoughts of our most spiritual writers. THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines upon which the church is founded.

We Offer To Send The Herald

from now until January 1, 1932, weekly, for only 50 cents. We want you to join with us in this campaign, and place THE HERALD in at least ten homes, either by securing their subscriptions, or by sending us $5.00 of your tithe money with names and addresses of ten persons to whom you wish THE HERALD stands true to the church, for it stands true to the doctrines that the paper may find fertile soil in which the roots of faith may spring up to higher and better living. We are counting on you, and it is through you only, that we can hope to accomplish this great and much needed work.
