DO 629
READINGS IN WESLEY
SPRING 2000
Dr. Allan Coppedge

PURPOSE

An opportunity for further reading on the life and theology of John Wesley. The totality of Wesley's theological doctrines will be studied in reference to his life, work, religious experience on the evangelical revival of the eighteenth-century. Taught concurrently with DO 628, John Wesley's Theology For Today, this course provides the student with a greater first-hand acquaintance with Wesley and key works on his theology.

RELATIONSHIP TO DO628, WESLEY'S THEOLOGY FOR TODAY

This course is designed to be a supplement to the basic course on theology of Wesley. It should be taken concurrently with DO628 to provide the student a greater depth of understanding the life and theology of Wesley.

LEARNING GOALS

1. To provide an introduction to the theology and thought patterns of John Wesley in the following areas:
Prevenient grace and sin; Universal atonement and transforming grace; Justification and regeneration; Sanctification and Christian perfection; Christian life and means of grace; Doctrine of God the Father; Doctrines of Grace; Predestination; Religious Authority; Pluralism and the Bible.
2. To offer an analysis of the background factors that influenced Wesley's life and thought.
3. To introduce the life of Wesley and his influence in shaping eighteenth-century Methodism.
4. To understand how Methodism is a part of the larger Christian Church and where it contributes to it, especially in the areas of theology and the practice of the Christian life.
5. To see some historical models of the transforming power of grace in the application of Biblical truth to individual lives, the Church and society.
6. To recognize the practical implications of the theological ideas.
7. To understand the positive and negative lessons from the rise of Methodism and personal lives, the collected body of believers, and the culture at large.
8. To be able from within this heritage to address the theological issues that confront the church and the world today. This goal will be accomplished primarily through lecture and discussion in class.
