SEMINAR IN MISSION
(for the Ph.D. degree program)

MI 880
Fall 2003
Meeting Room: MC 302

Dr. Eunice Irwin, Leader
Office: McPheeters 311
Phone: 858-2148 (Office)
858-0705 (Home)

Course Description:

Seminar presentations surveying major transitions in Christian mission from theological and historical perspectives, with special attention given to the leaders and Church conferences (including some writings and documents) which have served to shape the concept and direct the task of mission. Students will participate in constructing parameters for a contemporary missiological paradigm in line with the values and objectives of this institution.

Course Objective: To provide a context in which doctoral students:

1. Develop interdisciplinary focus in the field of Missiology by studying Christian mission from the vantage points of theological, regional, and strategic histories.
2. Use methods of critique and informal debate during seminar discussions in order to strengthen their analytical skills.
3. Use methods of dialogue and consensus-building during seminar discussions in order to advance a missiological tradition of interpretation, appropriate to the E. Stanley Jones School of World Mission and Evangelism. The process will involve the group evaluating, selecting and incorporating contributions made by the participants.
4. Make scholarly presentations and experience the critique of colleagues.
5. Enhance skills in research and scholarly writing.

Course Requirements and Grading Ratio:

1. Attendance and prepared participation in seminar discussions. This includes reading assigned pages beforehand, reporting orally on some assigned pages, and submitting "summary statements" (concise statements articulating your own summation of the ideas formulated by the group as a result of the class presentation and subsequent discussion of these for consensus) at the end of seminar presentation sessions. 15%
2. Leading one seminar session. The format will be to make a presentation and lead the group in discussion of the material, and at the beginning of class the next week to lead the group in producing statements of consensus for the record. Topics will be taken from the assigned readings and:
  - a. Examine current theological theme(s) in mission, and
  - b. Examine specific regional or vocational contexts of mission.A class handout outlining the material covered in the presentation is required. 35%
3. A scholarly paper (of publishable quality) that investigates an issue of immediate concern to Christian mission today. This paper may be an expansion of your seminar presentation, or develop another worthy topic by approval (such as a research theme related to your dissertation). In the final weeks of the term students will give:

- a. A topic proposal for the scholarly paper (rationale and bibliography), due: September 17.
- b. A 10-minute report of the paper's overall research strategy and conclusions.
- c. A Copy of the paper for the ESJ School to be kept on file.

[Final draft due: December 3rd. Paper should be between 15 and 20 pages.
Follow ESJ guidelines for writing, taken from Missiology journal.]
