"THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST." "HE SHALL BAPTIZE YOU WITH THE HOLY GHOST." "THIS IS HE WHICH BAPTIZETH WITH THE HOLY GHOST."

The above, and other similar forms of words, have often met your eye, reader, as you have turned over the sacred page. What great truth of God, or fact of the Christian life, do they suggest to your mind? Have you any definite conception of their real import? The Scriptures also speak of "the promise of the Spirit," and of "the Holy Spirit of promise," and our Saviour asks the question, "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" What do such a promise, and such a question, import? Have you well considered the subject? or are your views vague and indefinite in respect to it? "I will pray the Father for you," says our Saviour, "and he will give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." "I tell you the truth," he adds, "that it is expedient for you, that I go away: for, if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you." "Have you understood all these things?"

There is another class of passages relating to "the promise of the Spirit,—a class which demands very special regard. We refer to such as the following: "He that believeth on me, as the Scriptures hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this he spake of the Spirit, which they that believed on him should receive [that, consequently, none had then received]: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because Jesus was not yet glorified." What fulness of blessedness do you enjoy, reader, if to you the Holy Ghost has been given as here promised? If that blessedness is not yours, but one reason can be assigned for the melancholy fact: the Holy Ghost, as here promised, has not yet been given to you. Paul put this important question to certain believers, when he first met them, to wit: “Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?” Does not this question imply that the promise of the Spirit awaits the believer after conversion? Does not the apostle refer to the same great truth, in the following statement to believers at Ephesus? “In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise.” Have you fully apprehended, and duly pondered, the import of such a question and of such statements as the above? Does not the doctrine of the baptism of the Holy Ghost need, at the present time especially, when so much is thought and said upon the subject, a careful and prayerful examination, and a full elucidation?

Such suggestions may tend to prepare the mind of the reader to peruse the following treatise, with a proper appreciation of the importance of the subject therein professedly elucidated. The object of the work is not mere elucidation or conviction: but these, as a means to a higher end, the introduction of the reader to the privileges and immunities of “the Higher Life,” “the glorious liberty of the sons of God.” If the doctrine taught in this treatise is true, and that doctrine has been correctly set forth and elucidated, then we may say with truth, “Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein.”

DISCOURSE I.

INTRODUCTORY.—THE "NEW MAN," AND GOD'S METHOD OF ATTAINMENT.

John vii. 37-39—"In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink. "He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."

(But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given ; because that Jesus was not yet glorified.)"

Romans ix. 30-32—"What shall we say then? That the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith."

"But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness. Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they stumbled at that stumbling-stone."

WE MUST AIM TO CONFORM TO GOD'S PATTERN, AND METHOD OF OPERATION.

When Moses was about to build the Tabernacle, he received from God a solemn and specific admonition to "make all things according to the pattern shown him in the Mount." We are divinely taught and admonished in this requirement, that whenever we attempt to accomplish any specific work which God has assigned us, we must, if we would not have the work marred in our hands, strictly conform to God's revealed pattern and method of operation.
In the Scriptures we have very distinctly revealed a divinely developed and perfected pattern, or model of Christian character, to which every believer is required to conform. God has also therein disclosed, with equal distinctness, the method by which Christian character may take on the prescribed forms of beauty and perfection. This character is represented by the words "new man," as opposed to "the old man," our former moral and spiritual selves. The latter we are required to "put off," and the former, to "take on." If we have failed to realize in our Christian character and experience all that is represented by the words, "new man in Christ Jesus," it must be for one of two reasons, or for both united. Either we have not attempted obedience to the command before us, or we have failed to conform to God's revealed method of righteousness.

Two inquiries of vital importance here present themselves, to wit: What is this "new man in Christ Jesus," — that is, God's revealed pattern of Christian character; and what is his revealed method or plan, by which we may, as required, "put off the old," and "put on the new man"? To each of these questions we will now proceed to give a concise and specific answer.

"THE NEW MAN IN CHRIST JESUS."

In Old Testament prophecy we have a very distinct revelation of God's ideal of the New Testament saint. He is a redeemed sinner, who, under the provisions and influences of "the new covenant," has been divinely cleansed "from all his filthiness and from all his idols," and whose "iniquities shall be sought for, and there shall be none, and his sins, and they shall not be found." In "his feebleness he is as David," and in his strength "as the Lord, as the angel of the Lord before him." "The sun is no more his light by day, neither for brightness does the moon give light unto him; but the Lord is unto him an everlasting light, and his God, his glory. His sun does no more go down, neither does his moon withdraw itself: for the Lord is his everlasting light, and the days of his mourning are ended.” In his experience has been realized, and is being realized, all that was spoken of by the prophet Joel:

“And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams:

“And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy.”

In the New Testament, this “new man” is revealed as “after God created in righteousness and true holiness,” and as “renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him;” as “ beholding with open face the glory of the Lord, and being changed into the same image from glory to glory;” “as comprehending the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and knowing the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, and being filled with all the fulness of God;” as “walking in the light, as God is in the light;” as “having been made perfect in love;” and as “having fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.”

To him, “Christ manifests himself,” and is “formed within him, the hope of glory.” He is “crucified with Christ,” and “by the cross is crucified to the world, and the world to him.” “He is in the world as Christ was in the world,” and “in the name of Christ asks and receives, until his joy is full;” and “believing in Christ he rejoices with joy unspeakable, and full of glory;” “Out of his belly flow rivers of living water.” “When weak, he is made strong,” and “in tribulation, distress, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril, sword, death, and life,” he is "more than a conqueror, through Him that hath loved us."

In his experience, "tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope;" and "all things work together for his good." When "troubled on every side, he is not distressed; when perplexed, he is not in despair; when persecuted, he is not forsaken; and when cast down, he is not destroyed." In every condition of existence he finds deep content in the centre of the sweet will of God, and verifies in experience the great central fact of the divine life — that "we can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth us."

Clad in the panoply of God, "he stands in the evil day," and "quenches all the fiery darts of the wicked." "His faith groweth exceedingly," and his "charity aboundeth;" and he is constantly growing "into the stature of the fulness of Christ." He also "has power with God and with men." "He asks what he will, and it is done unto him." As reflecting the image and glory of Christ, he is "the light of the world," and "the salt of the earth." Such is God's revealed pattern of the New Testament saint, "the new man" whom we are required to "put on."

GOD'S REVEALED METHOD OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

No one will question the correctness of the above presentation of God's revealed pattern of the New Testament saint, or affirm that we have given any unauthorized coloring to that representation. How shall we obey the command, requiring us to "put off the old," and to "put on the new man?" Have we a revealed method of obedience? In answer to such inquiries, we remark:

1. That whenever any of the leading characteristics of "the new man" are referred to in the Bible, they are specifically represented as induced by the indwelling presence, special agency and influence of the Holy Spirit. Do we “behold with open face the glory of the Lord,” and are we thereby “changed into the same image”? It is “by the Spirit of the Lord;” and this “liberty,” this cloudless sunlight, we are expressly taught, is enjoyed where, and only “where the Spirit of the Lord is.” Do we “have fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ?” Does God “dwell in us and walk in us,” and do Christ and the Father “come to us,” and “make their abode in us”? All this, as we are expressly taught, is but “the fellowship of the Spirit;” the fellowship which the Spirit induces and imparts.

Do we enjoy “assurance of hope”? It is because “the Spirit testifies to our spirit that we are the children of God.” Have we power in prayer? It is because “the Spirit maketh intercession for the saints, according to the will of God.”

Do we “mortify the deeds of the body”? It is “through the Spirit.” Do we “comprehend the breadth, and depth, and length, and height, and know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge”? It is because we have been previously “strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man.” Does Christ become to us “wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption”? It is because he is made such to us “of God;” that is, by the Spirit of God—the Spirit “revealing Christ in us,” and showing us His grace and glory.

When Christ promises to every believer that “out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water,” we must bear in mind that “this he spake of the Spirit.” If, then, we would “put off the old man with his deeds,” and “put on the new man, who after God is created in righteousness and true holiness,” it must be through the prior indwelling of the Spirit in our hearts. On no other condition can we, in full conformity to God’s revealed pattern of Christian character, become New Testament saints.
2. This indwelling presence of the Spirit in our hearts — the presence through which all these revelations of the divine grace and glory occur, and all these moral and spiritual transformations are induced — through which all these divine fellowships are possessed, and these assurances, “everlasting consolations and good hope, through grace,” and this fulness of joy, are vouchsafed — this indwelling presence of the Spirit in our hearts, we say, is distinctly revealed, as promised to us, and given to us, after we have, through his convicting power, “repented of sin, and believed in Christ.”

Nothing is or can be more plain than are the teachings of inspiration on this subject. “Faith cometh by hearing;” “the sealing and earnest of the Spirit” are received “after we have believed.” When Christ “spoke of the Spirit,” he spoke of a blessing which “they that believe were afterward to receive.” The Spirit “convinces the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment,” and thus induces “repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.” He never, however, as specifically promised, “comes upon,” “falls upon,” or “endues with power from on high” any but such as have already believed.

The inquiry which inspired apostles put to recognized believers was this: “Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?”

As soon as individuals were recognized as real believers, special prayer was offered for them that “they might receive the Holy Ghost.” No believer, let us ever bear in mind, carefully realize in experience God’s revealed pattern of the Christian character and life, but upon this one condition, that he is, “after he has believed,” “endued with power from on high.” Then, and not till then, will the waters of life, as promised (John vii. 38), well up in, and flow out from, his heart, and he become “filled with all the fulness of God.”
3. The indwelling presence and power of the Spirit, "the baptism of the Holy Ghost," are, according to the express teachings of inspiration, to be sought and received by faith in God's word of promise, on the part of the believer, after he has believed; just as pardon and eternal life are to be sought by the sinner prior to justification. "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." Between the believer and the gift, the Spirit, lies a divine promise: "the promise of the Spirit." If this promise is not embraced by faith, the gift, "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit," will not be vouchsafed.

Hence the apostles, as soon as a sinner was converted, and became a believer in Christ, turned and fixed his eye upon "the promise of the Spirit," and this as the crowning blessing of divine grace, as the blessing which was to be sought by faith, immediately after justification. Before Christ would allow his disciples to enter upon their world mission, he commanded them to "tarry in Jerusalem, until they were endued with power from on high." So he requires every believer, before he enters upon his life work, to tarry before God, and pray and wait, and wait and pray, until "the Holy Ghost shall fall upon him," as "he did upon the disciples at the beginning."

Here we have God's revealed method of righteousness. That is, of rendering real, in our experience and character, God's own divinely developed and perfected ideal or pattern of the New Testament saint. If, in our endeavors to render that model real in our experience, we "make all things according to the pattern shown us in the Mount," and if those endeavors accord with God's revealed method of righteousness, our characters and lives will be constantly taking on new and higher and higher forms of radiant beauty and perfection. If, on the other hand, we fail to put forth the requisite endeavors, or if those endeavors shall take a wrong direction, God will utterly reject us, as “reprobate silver;” or our spiritual lives will ever take on a feeble and sickly growth, and that when we should be constantly rising “into the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.”

THE EVILS OF A FAILURE IN THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

“My life,” said a very aged man, the most wealthy man that had then lived in this nation, “my life is a complete failure.” This term, failure, represents one of the most affectingly melancholy ideas that ever approached human thought. Life may be a failure for various reasons. No effective endeavors may be put forth in any direction. A purposeless, dreamy, effortless life is, of course, a dead failure.

A life full of purpose and activity may be a failure, because its direction has been towards worthless or unworthy ends. The ends and aims of the Christian life are the most worthy and important known, even to the infinite and eternal mind. To fail here, is to render existence itself a failure; and we do fail so far forth as we come short of our available privileges and advantages.

Not a few fail totally, because their so-called religious life is void of holy purpose, aim, and activity. Others, with the Jew, “follow after the law of righteousness,” without “attaining to the law of righteousness,” and that because their activity is self-originated, and void of faith as its central principle. Others still have in reality holy purposes and aims, and their lives take on some forms of real Christian activity. They have, also, a form of saving faith. Their lives, however, are comparative failures, because that, on account of false methods of righteousness, they live far below their available advantages and privileges, and never possess or exercise “the power with God and with men,” which is divinely given them to possess and exercise.
Let us for a moment turn our attention to the twelve individuals whom Paul met at Ephesus — individuals who had believed, but who had not "received the Holy Ghost since they believed." Suppose, now, that for want of better instruction they had continued on till death in the same state in which they then were. They might have been saved at last. Their Christian lives, however, would have been a melancholy failure, as compared with what they did become after "the Holy Ghost came upon them."

When Apollos first came to Ephesus, he was "mighty in the Scriptures," was "instructed in the way of the Lord," was "fervent in spirit," and "taught diligently the way of the Lord." Like the twelve above referred to, however, "he knew only the baptism of John," and as a consequence "had not received the Holy Ghost since he believed." If no one had "expounded to him the way of God more perfectly," he would have continued on as before — would have been saved himself, and done some good. Even his life would, in that case, have been in important respects a vast failure, as compared with what it did become after he was thus instructed.

Reader, shall your life in Christ be, in any form, a failure? To prevent this sad catastrophe, to "teach you the way of God more perfectly," if you do not now know it, and to insure to you a divine life, of which God shall not be ashamed, is the end for which this treatise has been prepared.

TWO FORMS OF DOCTRINE IN RESPECT TO "THE PROMISE OF THE SPIRIT."

In no era of Church history, since the primitive age passed away, has the mission and "promise of the Spirit" occupied so much attention among all classes of believers as now. Two distinct and opposite forms of instruction upon this subject are being distinctly set forth before the churches.
According to one, "the promise of the Spirit" is always fulfilled at the moment of conversion. What is subsequently to be expected is merely a continuation and gradual increase of what was then conferred.

According to the other view, "the Spirit falls upon," "comes upon," believers, and "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit" are given, not in conversion, but "after we have believed." The Spirit, first of all, induces in the sinner "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." "After he has believed," that is, after conversion, "the Holy Ghost comes upon," "falls upon," and is "poured out upon him," and thus "endues him with power from on high" for his life mission and work. In this baptism of power, this "sealing and earnest of the Spirit," which is always given, not in conversion, but "after we have believed," "the promise of the Spirit" is fulfilled.

THE TRUE DOCTRINE VERIFIED.

It seems undeniable, that if this last is not, and the former is, the correct view, inspired men must have fundamentally erred upon this subject. With them, it is undeniable that conversion was not prima-facie evidence that the convert had received "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit." Hence the question which they everywhere put to converts, to wit: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" The Apostles did not deny or deprecate the importance or necessity of the Spirit's influences in conviction, conversion, and the whole work of justification. Nor would we, by any means, be supposed to entertain such an error. The Spirit, as his mission is revealed in the Scriptures, is in the world to "convince of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment," to induce "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," and thus perfect the work of justification. Nor does the Spirit leave the convert when this necessary work is accomplished, but is ever present, preparing the heart for the promised baptism, which is to be received "after we have believed."

Conviction, conversion, and justification, and the Spirit's influences in inducing the same, are necessary pre-requisites for this great consummation. When the sacred writers employ such terms and phrases as the following: "The Holy Ghost was not yet given," "The Holy Ghost had not fallen upon any of them," "The promise of the Spirit," "The sealing and earnest of the Spirit," "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed," and "Baptized with the Holy Ghost," they referred to the promised baptism of the Spirit, by which we are "endued with power from on high," "after we have believed." As "the promise of the Spirit" awaits the believer after conversion, the Apostles did not regard the fact of conversion as certain proof that the convert had "received the Holy Ghost."

The fact stands recorded, that many individuals were truly converted in Samaria under the preaching of Philip, and that upon not one of them "had the Holy Ghost fallen" when Peter and John first appeared among them. There were many holy men and holy women among the followers of Christ prior to his crucifixion. The Holy Ghost, as promised in the New Testament, however, was not given, as we are absolutely informed, until after "Jesus was glorified." The New Testament saints, or the Scriptures have been broken, were "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise" "after they believed," and not when they were converted. This is sufficient for the present, as the whole subject will be fully elucidated in subsequent discourses.
A WORD TO PASTORS AND TEACHERS.

Those of us who sustain the sacred relations of pastors, and spiritual and theological teachers, have received a special commission to “feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.” This commission is rendered specially sacred by the fact, that of this flock “the Holy Ghost has made us overseers.” When we come to this blood-bought flock, what direction shall our teachings take upon the subject under consideration? If there is any subject that we need to understand, it is this. If there is any subject on which we should borrow our light from “the sure word of prophecy,” and on which our instructions should absolutely accord with that word, it is this. On no subject is wrong instruction more certain to render the religious life a failure.

If “the promise of the Spirit” is fulfilled in conversion, and we teach that “the baptism,” “the sealing,” and “the earnest of the Spirit” are to be sought and received “after we have believed,” then we induce believers to fix their hearts upon what they are never to find.

If, on the other hand, believers, if they “receive the Holy Ghost” at all, as promised, are to be “endued with power from on high,” not in conversion, but “after they have believed,” and we impress upon their minds the opposite view, then we impart a life-long misdirection to their seekings, prayers, and activities. We send them in the direction of darkness, instead of “marvellous light;” of weakness, instead of strength; of doubt, instead of “full assurance of hope;” of emptiness, instead of the “fulness of God;” and of “the bondage of corruption,” instead of “the glorious liberty of the sons of God.” Will you not attend us in a careful investigation of this great theme? If we go wrong, will you not expose the error? If we shall speak “the words of truth and soberness," will you not hold up the light before "the Church of God"?

A WORD TO THE READER.

Reader, the subject before us is not one of mere speculative interest. It is, on the other hand, one of vital importance relatively to the life of God in your soul. If, when you close this book, you do not find yourself nearer to God than you now are, if you do not find yourself in full "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ," and if "your joy shall be full," or you shall not be immutably purposed to "seek with all your heart and with all your soul," until you find this infinite good; then so far we have written, and you have read, in vain.

If you have not "received the Holy Ghost since you believed," you need to know certainly whether there is not in reserve for you "some better thing" than you have yet obtained. Will you not read this treatise, with the fixed purpose to know, if possible, the truth upon this whole subject, and if you find the light, to follow it, until you are "filled with all the fulness of God"?
DISCOURSE II.

EXPERIENCE AND TEACHINGS OF OUR SAVIOUR IN RESPECT TO THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

John iii. 34 — "For He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him.”

The doctrine “of God manifest in the flesh” is a profound mystery, and will no doubt be such to human and angelic minds to eternity. There are certain facts connected with this subject, however—facts clearly ascertainable by us, because we know them on the authority of inspiration. When Christ, for example, voluntarily “took upon himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men,” he subjected himself, physically, at least, to human conditions of growth and development. Hunger and thirst oppressed, and labor and travel wearied him, as they do us; and he had the same need of sleep and rest that we have.

If we will push our inquiries still farther, and that without attempting to be “wise above what is written,” we shall find, we judge, that mental and spiritual development and manifestation, in him, were subject to similar conditions as in us. Of one fact we are absolutely assured, “He was in all points tempted like as we are.” He must have been tempted, therefore, within himself, from physical and mental propensities, and from without, through worldly and Satanic influences. The difference between us and him lies here: “He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin;” we have sinned, through temptation.
If Christ was "tempted like as we are," he had to war against and overcome temptations as we do, when we maintain our integrity; and as he himself informs us, his victory in the hour of trial was obtained upon the same conditions on which ours must be obtained. He "lived by the Father," just as the believer lives by him. His spiritual life was conditioned upon the indwelling of the Father in him, just as our spiritual life is conditioned upon Christ's living in us. He overcame temptation through absolute respect for "what is written," just as we must overcome "through the blood of the Lamb and the word of his testimony." Were this not the case, his example would be of no avail to us in the matter of "life and godliness." Christ, by his example, has taught us not only what kind of lives we must live, but how to "walk even as he walked."

In Christ were two forms of manifestation equally conspicuous, to wit: Deity "in the brightness of his glory," and "the express image of his substance;" and humanity in absolute beauty and perfection. In the former relation, he is "the Lord our righteousness." In the latter, he is our divine-human exemplar, teaching us not only what we shall do and become, but how to do and become all that is required of us.

CHRIST'S RELATIONS TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

So far all is plain, and within the circle of clear light from "the oracles of God." A new question here arises — a question which, to our knowledge, has not been put before. The question is this: Did the development or manifestation of the spiritual life in Christ depend upon the indwelling, and influence, and baptism of the Holy Spirit, the same in all essential particulars as in us? Did he seek and secure this divine anointing as the necessary condition and means of nis "finishing the work which the Father had given him to do”—just as we are necessitated to seek and secure the same “enduement of power from on high,” as the immutable means and condition of our finishing the work which Christ has given us to do?

A recurrence to prophecy furnishes us a definite answer to all such questions: “And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots, and the Spirit of the Lord shall be upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord.” Isa. xi. 1–3. Here we are positively taught that the divine manifestations which shone through Christ were the result of the power of the Spirit which rested upon him.

The same truth is taught in Isa. xlii. 1: “Behold my servant, whom I uphold! mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.” In Isa. lxi. 1, Christ thus speaks of himself in the first person: “The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek, he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captvies, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.” The fact that Christ was thus baptized of the Spirit implies that he needed that baptism, and that without it, in the relations in which he then was, he could not have “finished the work which the Father had given him to do.” In seeking, and obtaining, and acting under that baptism, Christ is our exemplar in respect to the spiritual and divine life which is required of us.

We find the same truth set forth with equal clearness in the New Testament. In John iii. 34, we are told, for example, that the reason why Christ spake as he did, and what he did, was owing to the measureless effusion and power of the Spirit which was vouchsafed to him: "For He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." God, we repeat, does not bestow gifts nor influences where and when they are not needed. Christ received this measureless effusion of the Spirit at the beginning and during the progress of his mission, because they were a necessity to him—just as similar baptisms are a necessity to us in our life mission.

We here have, no doubt, one reason for the fact, that our Saviour spent so much time alone with God and in prayer to Him. Christ teaches us that God gives the Holy Spirit to those who seek, and ask, and knock at the door of mercy for this anointing. In this respect, also, God has made Christ our exemplar, giving the Spirit to him when he consciously needed his special divine influence and sought for it, just as he gives us the Spirit as we consciously need and seek his anointing.

Not to be misled here, we must carefully distinguish between the state of Christ when, as the eternal Word, he dwelt with the Father, and when, as the same Word, he "was made flesh and dwelt among us." In the former state, he had infinite all-sufficiency in himself; in the latter, he "was in all respects made like unto his brethren," and had the same need of the baptism of the Spirit that we have, and obtained "power from on high" on the same conditions on which the same blessing is promised to us.

RELATIONS OF HIS PUBLIC MINISTRY TO THE SPIRIT

We now turn to the recorded facts of the public life of our Saviour—facts which bear upon our present inquiries. At the time of his baptism by John, the Spirit, we read, descended upon him in answer to special prayer on his part: "Jesus also being baptized, and praying the heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him.” This was his first special baptism.

At the close of the temptation in the wilderness, after Satan had fled discomfited from his presence, and angels had descended and ministered unto him, the final and great baptism appears to have been given, and “Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee.” The power which attended his preaching under this special divine influence is thus presented by the sacred historian: “And there went out a fame of him through all the region round about. And he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.” But the effect of this baptism is still more manifest in the account, which follows, of his visit to Nazareth. We give the account in full:

“And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up; and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book, and gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him. And he began to say unto them, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears. And all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth.”

Our Saviour was here among the people, who had known him from childhood up, and he took no part in their worship but what he had long been accustomed to do. Nor does it seem that his prior reading or discourses had been marked by peculiarities which excited very special observation, much less the envy of any. But now there was a mysterious something about even his reading, which fixed the eyes of all present upon him. But their surprise and wonder reached their consummation when they listened to “the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth.”

In his intellectual, moral, and spiritual manifestations he stood before them as completely transformed as he was physically to the eyes of the disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration.
Now this wonderful transformation Christ attributes, in fact and form, to the baptism of the Spirit which he had just before received. One of the main objects of reading that passage unquestionably was, to explain to that people the cause of that transformation — a transformation so great as to excite their envy. We are in no danger of being misunderstood here.
The life and character of our Saviour, prior to that event, were as absolutely pure as now. He was no less then, than now, “God manifest in the flesh.” Yet he had, through that baptism of love, knowledge, and power, ascended from forms of perfect human and perfect divine manifestations, to others far higher and more impressive.

The great truth which we would impress upon all minds through this revealed fact is this: If Christ, the pure and spotless One, Christ the Eternal Word, was thus transformed, through “the baptism of the Holy Ghost,” what must be the transformation in believers, when they shall, for their life work, “be endued with power from on high.” This is the transformation which Christ is ready to induce in all his people.
“He shall baptize you,” says John Baptist, “with the Holy Ghost.” On another occasion, when John saw Jesus coming unto him, he gave utterance to these memorable words: “Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world! This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me; for he was before me. And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water. And John bear record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him, and I knew him not; but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me: Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God."

We, then, are to look to Christ for the gift of the Spirit, just as he looked to the Father for the same baptism of power. As Christ spent forty days and forty nights in fasting and prayer, preparatory to the reception of a full and final baptism, we should not think it strange if a considerable time should pass before such preparation in us is consummated.

Let this truth, however, be omnipresent in our minds. The power of the Spirit was a necessity, even to Christ, for the full accomplishment of his life mission. How much more so to us, if we would accomplish our life work. Christ would not enter upon his mission, until he could "go forth in the power of the Spirit." What infinite presumption in us, to enter upon ours, without tarrying before God, "until we be endued with power from on high."

WHAT CHRIST SAID AND TAUGHT ON THIS SUBJECT.

We have now arrived to the main object of the present discourse, to wit: what Christ himself said and taught in regard to the Holy Spirit and his mission. On this department of our subject we would present the following facts and considerations:

1. He taught expressly, that all believers may seek and obtain this unspeakable gift, and upon the same conditions on which, as we have seen, he obtained it. In Luke xi. 4-13, we have specific instructions on this subject. Read the whole passage: “And I say unto you, ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened. If a son ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent? or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him!"

All, then, are without excuse who go forth to the mission of life without doing so under “the power of the Spirit,” as Christ went out from the wilderness. The heart of God, only in greater strength, is towards us in respect to this gift as the parental heart is toward the child in respect to needed food: “How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him!"

2. The Holy Spirit, when given and not subsequently grieved nor quenched, remains with us, not as a mere divine influence, but as an abiding personal presence. Everywhere, our Saviour speaks of the Spirit, not as an influence, but as a person. As a person, he is sent, comes, speaks, teaches, shows things to the mind, and abides with believers, as Christ: “dwelt among us.” He requires the ordinance of baptism to be administered in “the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.” No such language is applicable to mere influence in any form.

The Spirit, also, when he comes to us, comes to abide with us as a permanent personal presence. Christ “came forth from the Father,” came into the world, and “dwelt among us” for a little season. Then he “left the world, and returned to the Father.” The Spirit comes to the believer to “abide with him for ever.” As a consequence, “all our work should be wrought in God,” and all our activities should be under his immediate control. “I will pray the Father for you, and the shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever.” “Ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.”

3. Another truth of infinite moment—a truth taught by our Saviour on this subject, is this: The benefits which we may all receive through the Spirit dwelling in us are far greater than his disciples did derive, or could have derived, from Christ’s personal presence, teachings, and influence, when he was upon earth, and himself under “the power of the Spirit.” This we could hardly believe but upon the express testimony of our Saviour himself. Until after “Christ was glorified,” the Holy Ghost could not be given, even to believers. Hence the highest good of his disciples demanded that he should return to the Father, that the abiding presence of the Spirit might be vouchsafed to them: “Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.” Christ did not undervalue the light and privileges enjoyed by his disciples under his ministrations. On this subject he thus speaks: “And he turned him unto his disciples, and said privately, Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see; for I tell you that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.” But what they thus saw and heard was only preparatory for the higher light and glory and blessedness, which they were to receive and enjoy, after Christ was glorified and the Holy Ghost was given unto them. Of the present privileges of all believers in common, our Saviour thus speaks: "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." "But this," the apostle adds, "he spake of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

None, we are taught here, could have had this blessedness consummated in their experience before "Jesus was glorified." All believers may possess it now, because "the Holy Ghost has been given." No prophet, or king, or disciple ever did enjoy, or could have enjoyed, the light, privileges, and blessedness, prior to the time when the Holy Ghost was given, which all believers may now enjoy under the power of the Spirit.

Such are the express teachings of our Saviour upon this subject. According to the equally express teachings of prophecy also, "he that is feeble among you at that day shall be as David, while the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before him." Those things, also, after which "the prophets inquired and searched diligently," were not the sayings or works of our Saviour, prior to his crucifixion, but "the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow," — follow "after the Holy Ghost was given." The most important utterances of our Saviour were like enigmas, even to the disciples, until after "the Spirit took of the things of Christ, and showed them unto them."

4. The special mission of the Spirit, as revealed by our Saviour himself, next claims our attention. His mission is set forth in such words as the following: "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you;" "He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you;" "He will guide you into all truth;" "He shall testify of me;" "I by the Spirit will show you plainly of the Father;" "He will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment;" "He shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come;”

"And they shall all be taught of God."

The mission of the Spirit, then, is to put the mind in full possession of that “eternal life,” which consists in \textit{knowing} the only living and true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent” — in possession of all truth in all its forms, — all truth “necessary to life and godliness.” It is one thing to study the word of God, with all human helps — and this is a great privilege, of which every believer should desire to avail himself; it is quite another thing to have, in addition to all this, the Spirit of God, first to strengthen “in the inner man,” and then to open upon our vision God’s truth, especially “the image of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.” The Church, under the power of the Spirit, is “the light of the world.” While the Church is laboring for the salvation of the race, the Spirit is in the world to convict of sin, and lead men to Christ. After they have repented and believed in Christ, he then sends the Comforter, to enlighten, teach, help, guide, and dwell with them forever.

Prior to conversion, the Spirit comes to men without being sought, and convinces them of sin, even against their will. After repentance and faith in Christ, believers receive “power from on high,” “the power of the Spirit,” by asking, seeking, knocking, and waiting for his coming upon them, as the disciples did at the Pentecost, and as Christ did in the wilderness and in mountain solitudes. Christ atones for sin, makes full provision for the full salvation of all believers, and teaches the truth of God and the way of life.

The Spirit in Christ, in the prophets and apostles, gives us the whole circle and volume of revealed truth. The Spirit in the world acts as a convicting and persuading power to lead men to Christ. The Spirit in the Church abides in the hearts of all believers who seek and obtain his transforming power, as an indwelling, all-illuminating and personal presence, through which we apprehend, as in the light of God, the things of Christ, and all truth requisite "to life and godliness," through which, as stated by the apostle, "we behold with open face the glory of God," are "changed into the same image from glory to glory," and "are filled with all the fulness of God." Such is the mission of the Spirit, as set forth by our Saviour himself.

5. What has Christ authorized us to expect, through the abiding presence and power of the Spirit? This is the question which should next engage our attention. We have already spoken of the forms of divine illumination promised by our Saviour, and which are to be received through the Spirit.

Let us now contemplate other forms of blessedness, which are pledged to us, and which are to descend to us under his ministration: "And in that day ye shall ask me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name: ask and receive, that your joy may be full." "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved by my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. Judas, not Iscariot, saith to him, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself to us, and not to the world? Jesus answered and said to him, If a man loveth me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come to him, and make our abode with him."

All this is spoken with direct reference to the results which were to attend the mission of the Spirit. After speaking of the illumination which believers are to receive under the teachings of the Spirit, our Saviour thus speaks of their blessedness through the Spirit's indwelling presence: "Peace I leave with you, my peace [the peace which I myself enjoy] I give unto you." In his intercessory prayer, he thus speaks upon the same subject: "And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves." Again he adds, "And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one. I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

The power of the gospel on the Church, when her membership go forth "under the power of the Spirit," our Saviour thus represents: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do: because I go unto my Father." The Saviour is not here speaking of his miraculous deeds, but of the power of the gospel under his immediate ministration, as compared with the glory which was to follow his sufferings, and follow through the agency of believers when under "the power of the Spirit."

Of two individuals aiming at the same general results, one may move in a far wider sphere, and may touch a far greater number of minds, and, in this sense, exert a far greater influence than the other; while the influence of the latter within his narrow sphere may be in itself more efficient than that of the former. This is the great truth set before us in this memorable utterance of Christ. Each believer, the least as well as the greatest, has received from Christ a life mission and work, the same in kind as Christ received from the Father, and has, under the power of the Spirit, an influence in itself more efficient than Christ wielded during his public ministry. The following, then, are some of the forms of blessedness which Christ has absolutely promised to us, provided we receive the Holy Ghost after we believe:

1. Not only a perfect union with him, and with the Father in him, “the Father in him, and he in us, and we in him;” but we are to know that this union between us and the adorable Trinity does exist.

2. Not only is the Spirit to “abide with us forever,” but Christ and the Father will “come to us and make their abode with us;” “our fellowship,” in the language of the apostle John, “being with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.”

3. We are to enjoy the same free access to the throne of grace, and have the same power in prayer, in our life mission and work, that Christ possessed while prosecuting his mission and work — we “asking in his name,” and asking and receiving until “our joy,” as his was, “is full.”

4. Under the power of the Spirit we are to “bring forth much fruit” to the glory of God, and to the honor of Him that “loved us, and gave himself for us,” and thus to share in full measure the glory which the Father has given to Christ.

5. In the prosecution of our life mission and work, we, abiding and walking in the Spirit, are to be possessed of a full fruition of that peace in God, and fulness of joy, which Christ himself possessed, while “finishing the work which the Father had given him to do.” We should not dare to utter such thoughts, did not the express words of Christ to that effect, and far more, lie out in distinct visibility before our minds.

THE PLAN OF CHRIST IN REGARD TO THE AGENCY OF THE CHURCH.

We notice, in the next place, the plan of our Saviour, as far as the agency of the Church is concerned in the work, for the saving of lost men, and bringing the world back to God. This plan may be thus stated:

1. To organize the entire membership into one divinely anointed sacramental host, all of whom, in their individual and social relations, are to labor with supreme devotion for this great end.

2. To impart to each and every one, through the Spirit, such a full and special baptism of power, as will perfectly qualify for, and adapt him to, the peculiar and special mission and work appointed him. Each individual is to be so “endued with power from on high,” and so “filled with all the fulness of God,” that there shall not be “a sickly or feeble one in all that host;” “the feeble among them being as David, and the house of David” (the leaders under the Great Captain of our salvation), “as the Lord, as the angel of the Lord before him.”

3. Through the abiding presence of the Spirit, and through him of Christ and the Father in each heart, there shall obtain such a visible unity of spirit, purpose, and mutual love among all the sanctified family, that the world shall believe in the divinity of our Saviour’s mission.

4. To secure in all, in common, such peace, quietude, assurance, and fulness of joy, that “the Gentiles shall come to the light of the Church, and kings to the brightness of her rising.”

WHAT CHRIST HAS DONE TO CONSUMMATE THIS PLAN.

Such is the plan, as no one will deny. What did Christ do and teach to render this plan real in the experience of the Church? In his relations as our atoning God and Saviour, he has made full provision for the complete sanctification, adequacy for every good word and work, and fulness of joy, of every believer. He has purchased for all, in common,
“the promise of the Spirit,” through whom God can do for us all “exceeding abundantly, above all that we can ask or think.”

He has, by his own example, shown us how we may obtain the “sealing and earnest of the Spirit,” and how we must live and act, when we go forth to our life-work under his power. He has said everything that could have been said to induce in us, first of all, supreme consecration to our life work, and then a waiting upon God, as Christ waited before the Father, for that “enduement of power from on high,” which is the immutable condition of our accomplishing our divinely appointed mission. Among his earliest instructions we are absolutely assured of God’s willingness and desire to bestow upon us this anointing when we seek and pray for it as required. Then we are assured that when this baptism shall come upon us, “the days of our mourning shall be ended,” that “out of our belly shall flow rivers of living water.”

Then, as the time of his departure approached, his last discourse and prayer with his disciples seems to have but one leading end and aim, to wit: to prepare their hearts for the reception of the Comforter, and to fix their desires and expectations upon “the glory which was to follow his sufferings.”

On his first meeting with them after his resurrection, his first act, after his peace salutation, was to breath upon them, saying, “Receive ye the Holy Ghost.” After being seen of them forty days, and speaking to them of the things pertaining to the “kingdom of God,” after admonishing them not to “depart from Jerusalem, but wait the promise of the Father,” and assuring them that they should “be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence,” he finally led them out of the city as far as Bethany. There having delivered to them their final commission, “Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature,” and this last command, “But tarry ye in Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high," he "lifted up his hands and blessed them," and then ascended upward, and took his place at "the right hand of God," "leading captivity captive, and giving gifts unto men."

Now reader, from beneath those sacred hands, uplifted to bless us as well as them, those never-to-be-forgotten words, "Go," but "Tarry," come directly and personally to you and to me. Eternity is lost to us, if we go not as bidden; and barrenness and spiritual blight will rest upon us, if we tarry not as required. But the light of God shall attend us, and glory infinite shall encircle us at last, if we do go forth as bidden on the one hand, and tarry as required on the other.

ONE WORD OF CAUTION AND ADMONITION.

Reader, if you are now far from God, and cold and dead in your religious affections, heed not the counsels of those who advise you to go forth at once, and engage in the work of saving souls, and thus "warm yourself into spiritual life." The warmth thus generated will be from fire of your own kindling. As the result, you will, after a few heartless efforts, "lie down in sorrow." Repent, on the other hand, of your sin, and especially of your broken vows, and tarry in deep humiliation and fervent prayer before God, until he shall "restore to you the joy of his salvation, and uphold you by his free Spirit." Then, under the "power of the Spirit," go forth to your life work, and your "labor will not be in vain in the Lord." You will now "teach transgressors God's ways, and sinners shall be converted unto him." What has a dead backslider to do, to "declare God's counsels"?
DISCOURSE III.

DOCTRINE OF THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST EXPLAINED AND ELUCIDATED.

Acts xix. 1: "He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

The views presented in the two preceding chapters have prepared the way for a full exposition and elucidation of the Doctrine of the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, as set forth in the New Testament.

In accomplishing this object, we will first of all present and explain the various passages of Scripture in which this doctrine is clearly set forth, and will then give the various results of the expositions.

THE SPIRIT, WHEN GIVEN, AND ON WHAT CONDITIONS.

The first passage to which we refer is Acts xix. 1–6: "And it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul, having passed through the upper coasts, came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on Him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." This passage teaches several truths of fundamental importance in respect to this subject.

We learn, 1. That the gift of the Spirit was not expected in, but after conversion: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" The same fact is referred to and affirmed, Eph. i. 13: "In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of our salvation; in whom also, after that ye believed ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise."

2. We are here taught also, that, in the judgment of inspired men, believers are not fully qualified for their sphere of Christian activity until this baptism is received.

The men whom Paul met he distinctly recognized as Christians, but as yet in total want of the proper qualifications for Christian activity, unless they had been "endued with power from on high," through this divine baptism.

The same, we elsewhere learn, was the common sentiment of all the Apostles. We have an exhibition of the existence and strength of this sentiment in Acts viii. 14-17: "Now when the Apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the Word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: for as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." As soon as individuals believed, the great concern was, that they should then be "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise."

3. We learn from this passage also, as well as from others, that when believers do receive this divine baptism, they do enter at once upon forms of activity and usefulness otherwise impossible to them. It was so with the twelve individuals referred to, and with the Apostles and their associates at the Pentecost, with Apollos after he was instructed by Priscilla and Aquilla, and in all other cases.

4. We learn also, that where the Holy Ghost is received, such a change is wrought in the subject that he himself will become distinctly conscious of the change, and of the cause of the same — a change observable also to others around. The question put by the Apostle implies that it is a question that all are able to answer. The same change becomes also, with equal distinctness, visible to all observers. The transformation effected in believers in Samaria was manifest even to Simon the Sorcerer.

The change induced in the Apostles and their associates at the Pentecost became manifest at once not only to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, but to the multitudes assembled there from all surrounding nations. The new forms of life and activity induced among believers assembled at the house of Cornelius, became at once manifest to Peter and his associates from Joppa. Acts x. 44-47: "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost, for they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?"

The great fact, that the change wrought by the gift of the Spirit shall become visible to others, to the world as well as to believers, is foreshadowed in prophecy: "The Lord shall rise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee."
5. The gift of the Spirit does not ordinarily come to believers unsought or unexpectedly, but where and when they are seeking it and waiting for it. We have but one case recorded in the New Testament in which this blessing came when not definitely sought. That is the case presented above — the case in which the Gentiles first received this "unspeakable gift." Here it was thus given for reasons that at once disappeared. To us, the great fact stands plainly revealed, that "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit" will not be given to us, but upon the condition that we seek it and wait for it, as the Apostles and primitive Christians sought and waited for it.

SEALING OF THE SPIRIT.

Let us now turn our thoughts to a passage already cited, Eph. i. 13: "In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom, also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." Here we have the order of facts as developed in actual experience — as the hearing, then the believing, then finally, after believing, "the sealing with that Holy Spirit of promise." All is plain here but the meaning of the term sealed. Reference is had, in the use of this term, to the final act of parties rendering permanently valid and mutually obligatory written covenants, in putting their hand and seal to the document.

When the creature believes in Christ, "he sets to his seal," we are told, "that God is true." When God gives his Spirit, that is his seal to the fact that the believer has been "accepted in the beloved," and is in covenant relations with "the Father of lights." Until this gift is received, we have no token from God that our sins are blotted out, and we his sons and daughters. It would evince infinite presumption in us to hope in God, and not receive from him, as we may do, absolute assurance of the validity of our hope.

THE EARNEST OF THE SPIRIT.

We now turn to another very peculiar and special statement in regard to this gift of God. In 2 Cor. i. 22, we read that God both “seals us, and gives the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.” In Eph. i. 14, we read that in the gift of the Spirit we received not only a seal of our title to sonship with God, but “the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession.”

The term earnest implies, in our language as well as in the original, two ideas — a part of the inheritance given in hand, and that as a pledge of an ultimate possession of the whole. The part received being the same in kind as the remainder, puts the recipient in possession of the same blessedness in kind which he is afterwards to receive in its fulness. This, then, is true of all who receive the “sealing and earnest of the Spirit in their hearts.” With them, glory is begun below. Heaven itself has dawned in their inner life. Of this more hereafter.

FELLOWSHIP OF THE SPIRIT, AND THE RESULTS.

We now invite very special attention to Eph. iii. 14-21. The passage is lengthy. It will repay a careful perusal, however, as it throws great light on our present inquiries. “For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God. Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto Him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

The reader will notice the various steps or stages of Christian experience here presented, and that each is preparatory to that which follows next in order, until the whole culminates in the soul's being "filled with all the fulness of God." It will also be observed that all this fulness results primarily from one originating cause — the indwelling of the Spirit in our hearts. Let us now contemplate these great central facts of the spiritual life, and that in the order here presented.

1. When we "receive the Holy Ghost, after we have believed," the first result is a vast expansion and accumulation of intellectual, moral, and spiritual power. Our powers of apprehension and comprehension are greatly enlarged. In other words, we are "strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man." We become "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." We are able to think, to apprehend and comprehend, to do and to endure, as would otherwise be impossible to us.

2. When our bodies thus become "the temples of the Holy Ghost," and we are "builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit," Christ then "dwell in our hearts by faith," and is "in us, the hope of glory." He and the Father "come to us and make their abode with us," and then "truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." We thus enjoy "the fellowship of the Spirit," and in this divine fellowship we come to know and believe the love that God hath to us," and by this means our "love is made perfect," our characters take form after the divine image, and we become "confirmed, settled, and strengthened;" that is, we become "rooted and grounded in love."

3. When thus "walking in the light as God is in the light," " beholding with open face the glory of the Lord," and having "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ," we at length attain to "a comprehension of the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge." We then know by experience what our Saviour meant when he said, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

4. As a further result, all our powers, susceptibilities, and activities come to be pervaded and filled with "the light of God." Our dwelling-place is now in the centre of an infinite fulness, where every want is met, where the "effect of righteousness is peace, and the fruit of righteousness is quietness and assurance forever," and where "God is our everlasting light, and the days of our mourning are ended." In other words, we are "filled with all the fulness of God."

5. The inspired caution which follows must not be overlooked in this connection. When our thoughts, desires, and prayers turn towards God, we must never, even in thought, "limit the Holy One." We must never suppose that the fulness of God's grace, and love, and bounty, which he shall give, will be measured by what we "ask or think."

We are to bear in mind, on the other hand, that the measure of our real necessities, not as seen by ourselves, but as they lie out under the eye of God, is the fulness with which God is able to fill us, and which he will confer when we "put our trust in him." "According to the power" — that is, by means of the power of the Spirit — "that worketh in us," God is "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." This is "the way of holiness," along which all are advancing who "receive the Holy Ghost after they have believed," and who do not "grieve" nor "quench the Spirit," but "walk in the Spirit."

POWER OF THE SPIRIT.

There are various passages, in addition to the above, which speak of the power of the Spirit—passages which demand special notice and elucidation. The Spirit, as imparted to Christ is called "the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and might, the Spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord." Jesus commanded his disciples to "tarry in Jerusalem, until they were endued with power from on high." Again, "Ye shall receive power, after the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

"Through the power of the Holy Ghost" we are "filled with all joy and peace in believing," and "abound in hope." Through the power of the Spirit, the truth of God has an all-transforming influence over our whole moral and spiritual being and character. "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

The Spirit also has absolute control of all the elements of moral and spiritual strength, might, and power. He can purify and sanctify our emotions and affections, quicken into immortal life and vigor our intellectual and executive activities, transform character and consolidate virtue, and thus render us "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might,"—strong to think, to do, and to endure. More of this in another discourse.

THE WATERS OF LIFE.

Let us now turn our attention to the memorable utterance of our Saviour found in John vii. 38, 39: "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

The following important truths, undeniably revealed in this passage, deserve special notice:

1. The Spirit, with all that shall follow his reception, is here promised absolutely to every believer to the end of time.

"If any man thirst," says Christ, in the verse preceding, "let him come unto me, and drink." "He that believeth on me" — that is, every individual that shall believe — "as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." No promise can be more universal.

2. The Spirit, as here promised, was given to no believer until after Jesus was glorified, and never at that time in conversion, but only and exclusively after he had believed to the saving of his soul. What, then, must we think of a dogma which affirms that now the order is reversed; that "the sealing of the Holy Spirit of promise" is always received in conversion, and never after we have believed.

3. Let us now think of the moral and spiritual state; "the everlasting consolations," the assurances of hope, the immortal fellowships, and fulness of joy, represented by such language as this: "Rivers of living water." "Whosoever," says our Saviour, again, "drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life." All that such language imports becomes real in the experience of every believer who does "receive the Holy Ghost" after he has believed.

On no other condition, on the other hand, can such a form of life and blessedness become real in the experience of any individual. "But this he spake of the Spirit." You may possess all this, reader, because you may "be filled with the Spirit," and may "walk in the Spirit." You must possess all this, or your Christian life will, in fundamental particulars, be a melancholy failure.

DIVERSITY OF SPIRITUAL GIFTS, WHY CONFERRED.

The object for which the Spirit is given is also specified in the New Testament. 1 Cor. xii. 7: "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal;" that is, to render him efficiently useful as a member of the sanctified family. "To one," we are told, 1 Cor. xii. 8-11, "is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another, the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another, faith by the same Spirit; to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another, the working of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, divers kinds of tongues; to another, the interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

All who receive this baptism, we are taught, verse 13, "by one Spirit are baptized into one body," and "made to drink into one Spirit." All have not imparted to them the same gifts; but each receives, in connection with what is common to all, special gifts and influences, which adapt him to his special place as "a member of the body of Christ." The special object of the entire chapter before us is to elucidate this one truth.

THE GIFT OF PROPHETIC IN THE NEW TESTAMENT CHURCH.

The spirit of prophecy which attends this baptism requires special attention. Acts ii. 18: "And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will in those days pour out of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy." Acts xxii. 9. "And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy." The special meaning of the term, prophesy, in the New Testament, is not to foretell future events, but, as we are informed, 1 Cor. xiv. 3, 4, to utter divine truth under the illumination of the Spirit, so as to edify those that hear — the Church especially:

"But he that prophesieth, speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue, edifieth himself. But he that prophesieth, edifieth the Church."

The effect upon worldly minds of the spirit of prophecy in the Church is set forth in verses 23, 24 of the same chapter:

"If, therefore, the whole Church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all: he is judged of all: so and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth."

This prophetic power, the power of utterance for the edification of the Church and the conversion of sinners, is in all such passages, and in other scriptures, represented as the common privilege of all believers. Let any worldly person enter a circle whose hearts are full of the Holy Ghost, and he will at once recognize himself as encircled with the light of God, and will be impressed with the fact, that the kingdom of God has come nigh unto him. When any one speaks, there will be an unction about his utterance, an unction which all will recognize as divine.

THE PENTECOSTAL BAPTISM.

Another portion of the New Testament, the portion which has a fundamental bearing upon our present inquiries, is the first baptism of the Spirit after "Jesus was glorified;" that which occurred at the Pentecost. A full account of this event is given in the first and second chapters of Acts. The following facts in this account deserve special attention:

I. The Preparation.

The Apostles and their associates, knowing well that the promised blessing was about to be conferred, made every possible arrangement to receive it; such as the completing the required number of special witnesses, the putting of all things in order, and the full preparation of their hearts for the approaching manifestation.

Having done all this, they all, in a state of complete self-dedication, met together with a perfect unity of aims and expectation to receive "the promise of the Father:" "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Here is a revelation to us of the spiritual state in which we may expect this divine baptism, to wit: when in a state of total consecration to Christ we are waiting and praying for it with all our hearts.

2. We notice, also, the signs which preceded, as distinguished from the baptism itself. First of all, the place was shaken as by a mighty rushing wind; then appeared the cloven tongues; and lastly, the internal manifestation, when all in common "were filled with the Holy Ghost." We have, we believe, but three instances in which the bestowment of this blessing was preceded by external manifestations—the anointing of Christ, the case before us, and the rebaptism after the release of Peter and John, recorded in Acts iv. 31: "And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness." In all other instances the manifestation was wholly internal.

3. We notice, again, the special and the common effects of this baptism—the speaking with tongues, and prophesying, or the utterance of divine truth under divine influence. The former was a miraculous power granted to the few; the latter, a special gift granted to all in common. Few spake with tongues; all uttered "the wonderful works of God," and "spoke the word of God with boldness."

The universality of the prophetic gift is presented in nearly or quite all the varied cases of this baptism. Some spoke with tongues; all prophesied, that is, "magnified God." This accorded with prophecy and inspired teaching. Acts ii. 18: "And on my servants, and on my handmaidens, I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy." When in the verse preceding it is said, "I will pour of my Spirit upon all flesh," the words "all flesh" represent the entire membership of the Church. So they are generally understood.

4. We notice, finally, in this connection, the absolute universality of "the promise of the Spirit." This is shown in the passages cited above. It is also manifested in the condition on which this gift of God was promised to those addressed by Peter on this occasion. Acts ii. 38: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Here we are absolutely taught that all in common who do repent and believe in Christ, and openly confess him, become, for this reason, absolutely entitled to this promise. So the apostle positively affirms in the next verse, "For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.” Here we have universality in its strictest and most absolute form.

THE HOLY SPIRIT A PERMANENT PERSONAL PRESENCE.

One and only one other aspect of this great theme demands our attention in this connection: we refer to the doctrine of the Spirit as an abiding presence in the Church, and in all the membership of the same. On this subject the teachings of our Saviour are perfectly specific. John xiv. 16: “And I will pray the Father, and he will give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever.”

The visible presence of Christ with his disciples was temporary; that of the Spirit was to be perpetual, and the blessings received through the presence of the Spirit were to be much greater than those received through the personal presence of Christ. John xvi. 7: “Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.”

Such is the doctrine of the Spirit, as presented in the Scriptures of truth. Let us now attend to certain general suggestions tending to elucidate still further this great subject.

We will consider —

I. THE NATURE OF THE PROMISE OF THE SPIRIT.

1. The Spirit, as the crowning glory and promise of the New Dispensation, is not, although supernatural, any form of miraculous power. As a miracle-working power, he had been in the Church ever since the fall, and had been imparted as such to the disciples prior to the death of Christ; yet as promised by our Saviour, and foretold by the prophets, he was not given until after “Christ was glorified.” The baptism at the Pentecost was the beginning of the fulfilment of this promise.

2. The Spirit sustains one relation to the world, and quite another to the Church. To the former, he is a convicting and converting power; to the latter, he is an all-illuminating, all-sanctifying, and all-strengthening presence, through whom we are continuously transformed into the divine image "from glory to glory," brought into "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ," have a continuous earnest of eternal fruition, and are "filled with all the fulness of God."

3. The promise of the Spirit does not pertain merely to the Apostles, the primitive Church, or a favored few in subsequent ages. It is, on the other hand, the common gift to all who believe in Christ, the least as well as the greatest, and that to the end of time. Nothing can be more specific than the teachings of the Scriptures on this subject: "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children;" "The promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God shall call;" "He that believeth on me (as the Scriptures have said), out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this he spake of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive."

4. While all who believe become thereby entitled to this promise, its fulfilment is to be sought by faith, after we have believed; just as pardon is to be sought in conversion. The promise is just as absolute in one case as in the other. There is nothing which God so desires to bestow upon sinners as pardon, and with it eternal life. There is no gift he is more willing to bestow upon believers than this divine baptism. Here all who ask, receive, and all who seek, find. Nothing but unbelief can prevent pardon; and nothing but a want of faith in the promise of God can prevent an “enduement of power from on high.”

II. Some of the Consequences of this Baptism.

In reference to the consequences of this baptism, we would remark in general, that permanence and power are the leading characteristics. Without this, feebleness characterizes the strongest among us; with it, “he that is feeble among us is as David, and the house of David, as the Lord, as the angel of the Lord before him.” In the former state, “Our souls can neither fly nor go;” in the latter, “We mount up on wings as eagles, we run and are not weary, and walk and are not faint.” In the former state, “we walk in darkness;” in the latter, “God is our everlasting light, and the days of our mourning are ended.” In the former state we are weary, “tossed with tempests, and not comforted;” in the latter,
“our peace is as a river, and our righteousness as the waves of the sea.” In the former state, doubts and fears prevail; in the latter, we walk in the cloudless sunlight of “the full assurance of hope.” In the one state we groan and sigh, and “weep for sorrow of heart;” in the other, “we sing for joy of heart,” returning and coming “to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon our heads.”

To be more particular, we remark — 1. In this state all our natural powers are quickened and developed into unwonted activity and energy. When in the presence of great minds, great thoughts, deep emotions, and vast energies of action, all our mental powers take on forms of activity otherwise impossible to us. What, then, must be the effect upon our mental activities, when they are all brought consciously under the influence of the infinite and eternal mind, and energize and act under the power of God’s thoughts, emotions, and activities.
Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

These statements are all verified by universal observation and experience. Whenever any one receives this baptism we observe immediately a radical change in the forms which all his activities assume. Thought is expanded, emotion deepened, and activity energized as never before.

2. Especially is there a vast accumulation of moral and spiritual power — power to endure, and power to accomplish. Without this enduement, the mind is in continuous servitude to the propensities, faints under chastisements, is overcome when tempted, and rendered despondent through broken resolutions. Under this baptism, we have a sovereign control over our own spirit or propensities, endure when tried, overcome when tempted, and when weak in ourselves find everlasting strength in God.

Power with God and power with men are the invariable results of this anointing. After Luther received it, his enemies were accustomed to say, that he could obtain anything from God for which he asked. After Knox received it, Mary Queen of Scots, was accustomed to say, that she feared the prayers of that one man more than she did the fleets and armies of Elizabeth. And who among men could "resist the wisdom and the spirit with which such men spake"? The same is true of the weakest in our churches who are thus quickened.

3. Soul-transforming apprehensions of truth is another marked result of this baptism. "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." Void of this anointing, the Bible seems to be a sealed book, and the whole circle of even revealed truth a dead letter. With it, every truth has an all-vitalizing power — power to quicken and enlarge thought, deepen spiritual emotion, energize the moral activities, and transform the whole moral and spiritual being and character.

Under this baptism, we ever walk in the light of God, and every truth thus apprehended has this all-quickening, all-vitalizing, and all-transforming power.

4. Absolute assurance of hope is another equally marked result of this baptism — assurance represented by such forms of expression as these: "We know that we are of God," "we know that we have passed from death unto life," "we know in whom we have believed," and "truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." After the believer has received the witness of the Spirit, he can no more doubt his adoption than he can doubt his own being. There is nothing of which he does or can enjoy a more absolute assurance.

5. Another result of this baptism is conscious "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." Before the believer has received the Holy Ghost, after he has believed, Christ is to his apprehension far off in heaven, and God is at an infinite remove, retired afar off into his own infinity.

After this baptism, the whole Deity comes to the soul, and makes his abode with it. God then "walks in us and dwells in us," the Father and the Son "come to us, and make their abode with us," and we are thus "filled with all the fulness of God." In prayer, we speak to him as a personal presence, and inwardly "see his face." God "shines in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." We know then, and only then, what Christ means when he says, "I will come to you," "I will manifest myself to him," and "I will come unto him, and sup with him, and he with me."

6. We mention as another result, deep and permanent spiritual blessedness, forms of blessedness represented by such divine utterances as, "joy in God," "joy in tribulation," "pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake," "everlasting consolations and good hope through grace," "joy unspeakable, and full of glory," "the peace of God, which passeth understanding, keeping our minds and hearts through Christ Jesus," "peace as a river, and righteousness as the waves of the sea," and the "Lord shall be their everlasting light, and the days of their mourning shall be ended." In short, when we have received the Holy Ghost, after we have believed, our interior life will fully correspond with Christian experience, as foreseen by the ancient prophets, and as portrayed in the New Testament.

7. "Walking in the light, as God is in the light," as another result of infinite moment, will follow this baptism. We shall "have fellowship" not only "with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," but also "one with another;" and the prayer of our Saviour in the behalf of his people will be fully answered: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me;" "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

When this "unity of the Spirit" shall obtain among believers — and it always does obtain under this baptism — then the world's redemption is near. It is vain to expect brotherly love to continue on any other condition.

III. CONDITIONS ON WHICH THIS BAPTISM MAY BE OBTAINED.

In the expositions above given, the conditions on which we may obtain this divine baptism have been rendered so plain, that only a few particulars need to be specified under this division of our subject. It may be stated as a general principle of the divine administration, and especially in connection with the gift of the Spirit, that no such blessing is conferred until its value is appreciated, until there is faith in the provisions and promises of grace in respect to it, and until it is specifically sought as a supreme good. What, then, are the conditions on which we may become participants of this all-crowning gift of divine grace? They are, among others, the following:

1. It must be clearly separated in thought from all miraculous endowments, and from that form of divine influence which issues in conversion and justification. What if the disciples, when told to "tarry in Jerusalem, until they were endued with power from on high," had replied, "Lord, we have the Spirit already, we have his miraculous gifts, and his converting influence has never left us." Would they have obtained the Pentecostal baptism? Assuredly not. Having such a state of mind, would any of the individuals subsequently addressed by the Apostles upon this subject have been filled with the Spirit?

So with us at the present time. God has so clearly distinguished and separated this from all other gifts of grace and forms of divine manifestation, that until we have distinctly recognized and credited what he has revealed upon the subject, we are not prepared to receive the blessing, and have no reason to expect it.

2. We must distinctly recognize ourselves, on account of our having exercised "repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ," as formally entitled to plead "the promise of the Spirit," with the absolute certainty of receiving it. This is the distinctly revealed birthright of every believer. So we must regard the subject.

3. In a state of supreme consecration to Christ, we must plead this promise before God, and watch for it, pray for it, and wait for it, as the disciples did at Jerusalem, until the baptism of power rests upon us. Here, all reap who faint not. Reader, "the highway of holiness" is now open before you. Will you walk in it? Will you tarry before God, until you, for your life mission and work, are "endued with power from on high"?

DISCOURSE IV.

BAPTISMS OF THE SPIRIT UNDER THE OLD AND NEW DISPENSATIONS COMPARED.

John vii. 39:—"But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

At various periods of the Old Dispensation, we have accounts of baptisms of the Spirit analogous to those which occurred after "Christ was glorified." Yet we are told that until after this event "the Holy Ghost was not yet given." There must be something very peculiar and special about this last enduement. To show what this specialty and peculiarity is, is the special object of this discourse. This we shall be able to do when we shall have considered

THE HISTORIC FACTS OF THE CASE.

Of Enoch we read, that for three hundred years he "walked with God." He must then have enjoyed certain forms and degrees of "the communion and fellowship of the Spirit." When Abraham (Gen. xv. 7) was made distinctly conscious that God was "his shield, and exceeding great reward," the patriarch must have entered into a new form of being and of life in God. This was to him a special baptism of the Spirit, and he had others equally memorable during the progress of his natural life.

Jacob, during the visitations of Bethel, had a similar baptism — a baptism which gave an entirely new direction to his inward experience and visible activities. It was through that baptism that afterwards, "as a Prince, he had power with God and with man, and prevailed." One of the most memorable instances of this baptism is recorded of Moses, Ex. xxxiii., xxxiv. After informing us that "The Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend," we have the following remarkable statements, which we present in their entireties:

"And Moses said to the Lord, See, thou sayest to me, Bring up this people: and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight. Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight: and consider that this nation is thy people. And he said, My presence shall attend thee, and I will give thee rest. And he said to him, If thy presence shall not attend me, conduct us not hence. For wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? So shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth. And the Lord said to Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken; for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name. And he said, I beseech thee, show me thy glory. And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee; and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy. And he said, Thou canst not see my face: for there shall no man see me, and live. And the Lord said: There is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock. And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand, while I pass by. And I will take away my hand, and thou shalt see my back parts; but my face shall not be seen!"

Let us now contemplate the baptism itself—the baptism in which the divine promise to Moses was fulfilled: "And the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the Lord." "And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, to the third and to the fourth generation. And Moses made haste, and bowed his head towards the earth, and worshipped."

From that moment onward, Moses was a new man. He felt, spoke, and acted as it was impossible for him to have done before. Prior to this he had known God as the Creator and universal Law-giver, and had received from him the power of working miracles, together with the Spirit of revelation. Yet he had never, in the true and proper sense, "known God" or "understood his way;" and more especially was he ignorant of what constituted the essential glory of the divine character. From that moment the glory of God was the everlasting light of his soul.

Permit us to drop an important remark here—a remark in respect to the manner in which this baptism is commonly given. It is in connection with some special manifestation of the glory of God, or of the love of Christ, or of the fulness of grace, to the mind. In meditation or prayer, all at once the veil is lifted, and open visions of God and Christ, in some form, are presented; or, while reading the Word of God the same vision is presented through some particular passage.
From that moment a glory gilds the sacred page everywhere, such as was never conceived of before.

We would now direct attention to Num. xi. 25–30, where we have an account of the baptism given to the seventy elders who were selected to aid Moses in ruling and teaching the people. The prophetic spirit here vouchsafed was not that of foretelling future events, but of speaking divine truth under special divine influences. Let us attend to the passage: "And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the Lord, and gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle. And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease. But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the Spirit rested upon them; and they were of them that were written, but went not out unto the tabernacle: and they prophesied in the camp. And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp. And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered and said, My lord Moses, forbid them. And Moses said unto him, Enviest thou for my sake? would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them! And Moses gat him into the camp, he and the elders of Israel."

We learn from this passage, that none do or can prophesy who have not this baptism, and that all who do receive it are so filled with the burning truth that they must speak forth "the wondrous works of God," and "magnify the Lord." Truth apprehended through the illumination of the Spirit is "as a fire shut up in the bones." All such must speak of their visions of God, and of the love of Christ, and of the glories of redemption.

The next case to which we would invite attention is the baptism given to Saul after Samuel had anointed him king.

1 Sam. x. 9–13: "And it was so, that, when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, God gave him another heart: and all those signs came to pass that day. And when they came thither to the hill, behold! a company of prophets met him; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he prophesied among them. And it came to pass, when all that knew him beforetime saw that, behold! he prophesied among the prophets, then the people said one to another, What is this that has come unto the son of Kish? Is Saul also among the prophets? And one of the same place answered and said, But who is their father? Therefore it became a proverb, Is Saul also among the prophets? And when he had made an end of prophesying, he came unto the high place."

The new heart given to Saul was not, we suppose, a holy but kingly state of mind — a state by which he was fully qualified for his new office. The prophetic Spirit, of which he became at the time possessed, was the common result of a temporary or permanent baptism of the Spirit. One great truth is presented in this passage in regard to the divine anointing. It always imparts special qualifications for speccific spheres of usefulness. In 1 Sam. xix. 18–23, we have a striking instance in which temporary baptisms come upon wicked men: "So David fled, and escaped, and came to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him.
And he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth. And it was told Saul, saying, behold! David is at Naioth in Ramah. And Saul sent messengers to take David; and when they saw the company of the prophets prophesying, and Samuel standing as appointed over them, the Spirit of God was upon the messengers of Saul, and they also prophesied. And when it was told Saul, he sent other messengers, and they prophesied likewise. And Saul sent messengers again the third time, and they prophesied also. Then went he also to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu; and he asked and said, Where are Samuel and David? And one said, Behold! they be at Naioth in Ramah. And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah; and the Spirit of God was upon him also, and he went on, and prophesied, until he came to Naioth in Ramah.”

A similar spirit, we are told, came upon Balaam—a spirit under which he uttered, for the time, just such truths as God dictated. Through the baptisms which came upon David, Asaph, and other sweet singers of Israel, we have the psalms and hymns and spiritual songs and prophetic utterances which constitute the glory of the Old Testament.

In 2 Kings ii. 9–15, we have an account of the special baptism which Elisha received, and by which he was prepared for the prophetic office: “And it came to pass, when they were gone over, that Elijah said to Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And Elisha said, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me. And he said, Thou hast asked a hard thing: nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so. And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven. And Elisha saw it, and cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof! And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces. He took up also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back and stood by the bank of Jordan; and he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and smote the waters, and said, Where is the Lord God of Elijah? And when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither, and Elisha went over. And when the sons of the Prophets which were to view at Jericho saw him, they said, The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha. And they came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him."

From the moment the spirit of Elijah fell upon Elisha, the prophetic life of the latter commenced. Under the baptism then received, and afterward perpetuated, he was rendered the wonderful man that he then became, "The chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof."

The preceding account is of immense interest, as indicating the state of mind in which this baptism is obtained. Elisha was fully impressed with the conviction that he was to succeed Elijah as the prophet of the Lord. Hence his immutable determination not to be separated from his predecessor until through him the requisite "enduement of power from on high" had been received. So when we regard ourselves as "called of God to be saints," and as such as also called to fill some sphere of usefulness and duty in "God's kingdom," and under the deep impression that "we are not sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves, but that our sufficiency is of God," we then immutably fix our hearts, as Elisha did, upon "the promise of the Spirit" — the baptism is near.

In the New Testament we have instances of special baptisms prior to the time when Christ was glorified. In Luke i. 67-79, after the circumcision of John, we have the following account of the baptism received by his father Zacharias:

"And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began: that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us, that we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life. And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God, whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."

The following (Luke i. 39–55) is the account of the baptism and the results of the same — the baptism which came upon Elisabeth and Mary when they met in the house of the former:

"And Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill country with haste, into a city of Juda; and entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth. And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost: and she spake out with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb. And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me? For, lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy. And blessed is she that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord."
"And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour. For he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. For he that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is his name. And his mercy is on them that fear him from generation to generation. He hath showed strength with his arm: he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree. He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away. He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy; as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever."

How analogous are the results portrayed in all the above cases to those which followed the gift of the Holy Spirit after "Christ was glorified"! "They heard them speak with tongues and magnify God." "And they spake with tongues, and prophesied." "And the disciples were filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost." "Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters." The leading idea, also represented by the term prophesy, as that term is employed in both Testaments, is rendered manifest in all the passages above cited. It is not uttering future events, though this often attended this baptism. It is, on the other hand, uttering inspired truths under the immediate influence of the Holy Spirit, and consequently speaking unto men to "edification, and exhortation, and comfort." Equally manifest is the fact, that what is essential in this gift is no miraculous endowment, though this often, also, attended such enduements. It is, on the other hand, that divine illumination and manifestation in which "God becomes our everlasting light, and the days of our mourning is ended."
"THE BAPTISMS OF THE SPIRIT" UNDER THE TWO DISPENSA-TIONS COMPARED AND CONTRASTED.

But while "the baptisms of the Spirit" under the two dispensations were thus analogous, we are still informed that the Holy Ghost was not given until after Christ was glorified. If we will also notice what is said upon the subject in the New Testament, we shall perceive that there is an essential difference between the two forms of baptism. The following is Peter's statement: "Of which salvation the Prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the Gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into."

Paul informs us that God has reserved better things for us than the ancient saints enjoyed, and that it was only by anticipating and believing in what we have received, that they were rendered perfect: "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

John, in the passage above alluded to, tells us that the Holy Ghost, as promised under the New, was not given under the Old Dispensation. We are now prepared to state definitely the difference between these two forms of baptism, and to show in what sense and form the Holy Ghost was not given until after Christ was glorified. As preparatory to answering these inquiries, let us fix our attention upon the special prophecy of the fulfilment of which the baptism at the Pentecost was the commencement.

Acts ii. 14-18: "But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words: for these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel: And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy."

These two forms of baptism differ fundamentally from each other in the following particulars:

1. In the extent and universality of the gift and promise of the Spirit. Under the Old Dispensation such special anointings were granted only to a few individuals. Under the New, what Moses desired might be universal then, becomes universal now. "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would pour his Spirit upon them." "The promise of the Spirit" now hangs over "all flesh." All God's people in common are privileged and required to become "the Lord's prophets," and being all in common "filled with the Spirit," to "speak unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." In this fundamental form, the Holy Ghost had never before been promised or given.

2. There is another distinction equally fundamental and important. We refer to the element of permanency. Under the Old Dispensation, the prophetic baptisms were "like angels' visits, few and far between." For long periods, we are informed, the Church had no prophets, and "no teaching priests.” Under the New Dispensation, the Spirit is to be in the Church as a perpetually abiding presence to the end of time: “I will pray to the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever.”

The fundamental design of God, in this dispensation, is that the prophetic office, in its special signification, shall never cease, and that it shall be just as extensive as the real membership of the Church. What a fundamental difference we have here between these two dispensations!

3. But the fundamental peculiarity which distinguishes these two dispensations, the one from the other, is the relative power of the Spirit's manifestations in each. The Spirit “speaks not of himself.” For sanctification, for edification, and for consolation, he can only show to the mind those forms of divine knowledge already communicated.

Under the Old Dispensation, the glory of God was very obscurely revealed. Hence the power which the Spirit could wield for the ends referred to, was comparatively feeble. Under the present Dispensation, through the revelation of “the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ,” all of God that can be revealed to creatures in our circumstances has been made manifest: “Life and immortality have been brought to light through the gospel;” “No man hath seen God at any time;”
“The only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.”

When, therefore, “the Spirit takes of the things of Christ and shows them unto us,” so that we “behold, with open face, the glory of the Lord;” when he brings us into “fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ,” and God and Christ, through the Spirit, “come to us, and make their abode with us;”
when he unveils to our vision “the New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven;” when he enables us to comprehend the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to "know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge," and thus "fills us with all the fulness of God," — "the communion and fellowship," "the sealing and earnest," and all "the manifestations of the Spirit," are so new, so removed from, and so infinitely superior to anything known in the Church before, that it may truly and properly be said, that until after Christ was glorified, "the Holy Ghost had not yet been given." After this event we have a new Dispensation, and as a consequence a new mission of the Spirit.

WHY MANY CHRISTIANS MAGNIFY THE PRIVILEGES OF OLD TESTAMENT SAINTS, AND OF THE APOSTLES PRIOR TO CHRIST'S CRUCIFIXION.

We now clearly see why it is that many Christians magnify the privileges of Old Testament saints, and especially those of the Apostles prior to the death of Christ, and speak of these as even more highly privileged than we now are. The former were witnesses of wondrous miracles, listened to the prophets, and sometimes even to angels; while the latter heard Christ himself, and were eye-witnesses of his mighty works. No wonder that they were "holy men of God."

No Christian who "has received the Holy Ghost since he believed" ever entertained such a thought as that. The means of sanctification, consolation, and "fulness of joy" within the sphere of our vision and faith, were wholly unknown to them; nor had the chiefest apostle, after Christ was glorified, any advantage in these respects over and above the least of all the saints now. Sanctification, "everlasting consolations, and good hope through grace," and "fulness of joy," are not through "mighty signs and wonders," talking with prophets, or through "angels' visits," but "by the power of the Holy Ghost;" and this all-sanctifying power God is ready to pour out upon us, with all the fulness that he did upon Paul. "If
DEGREE OF SPIRITUAL POWER AND SANCTIFIED CHARACTER EXPECTED UNDER THE TWO DISPENSATIONS.

We are now prepared to judge correctly of the degree of spiritual power and sanctification which was expected under the Old, and is expected under the New Dispensation.
The lowest now is, in all these respects, to equal the highest then; while the highest now is to be like the sons of God before the throne. "He that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David, and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before him."

What, then, is the main cause of the present feebleness of our churches? It is because the great doctrine of the baptism of the Holy Ghost has gone into a deep and dark eclipse among us. What meaning do most Christians now attach to the question: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Almost as little as if they "had never heard whether there be any Holy Ghost."

THE PRIMITIVE AND THE MODERN CHURCH.

We notice, also, the difference between the experience of the primitive and the modern Church, and the cause of that diffERENCE. The leading theme of the former was the doctrine which we are now considering. Hence the disciples were then "filled with joy and the Holy Ghost." Now this doctrine, as we have said, has gone into a deep and dark eclipse. As a consequence, many believers "walk in darkness, and have no light," sigh after their first love, weep in sorrowful widowhood under the bondage of sin, and know almost nothing of the hidden life, but "an aching void" in the soul.

When the primitive Church was scattered abroad, all its members "went everywhere preaching the Word;" now, when our members emigrate, many of them leave not only their religion, but their profession, behind them — very many of them carrying not the love of Christ, but of gold, in their hearts. This state of things will continue until the doctrine of the Spirit is everywhere understood, preached, and realized in the Church.

THE STATE TOWARDS WHICH THE CHURCH IS ADVANCING.

With the deepest interest and heart-felt satisfaction, we next turn attention to the state towards which the Church is advancing, and to which she will attain, as the millennium draws on. "Conceive," says Mr. Barnes, "of the brightest form of experience known to the best Christian in his best hours now. Conceive of this state as increased to the full extent of the soul's capacities, and then conceive of this as the common and perpetual experience of all the Church, and then you may have some feeble conception of the coming millennium." We will only add, "Even so come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen."

THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT NOW AND IN APOSTOLIC TIMES.

We add but one thought more. We refer to "the power of the Spirit," for sanctification, consolation, and fulness of joy, now, and in apostolic times. That power, instead of being less, is much greater now than it was then. All that they had, we have, together with all of "our God and his Christ" that has been made manifest through the word and providence of God since that time. The power of the Spirit, as represented in prophecy, is a perpetually accumulating power. This great central truth of the present dispensation is specifically set forth in the 47th chapter of Ezekiel — and set forth by means of the emblem of "a pure river of the water of life," a river issuing from the threshold of the House of God; a river flowing eastward, with perpetual accumulations, filled with life and food for man, fertilizing the whole country through which it flows, and healing even the waters of the Dead Sea. We cite a few verses from this wonderful chapter:

"Afterward he brought me again unto the door of the house; and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar. Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the outer gate by the way that looketh eastward; and behold, there ran out waters on the right side. And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the waters were to the ankles. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through: the waters were to the loins. Afterward he measured a thousand, and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over." "The golden age" of the Church is not in the past, but in the future. There should be no sickly nor imbecile believers now. "He that is feeble among us should be," not "as David," but as Paul and the holy Apostles.
DISCOURSE V.

BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT UNDER THE NEW DISPENSATION.

Hab. xi. 40—"God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

In the last discourse, some light, we may hope, was thrown upon the forms of the baptism of the Spirit both under the Old and under the New Dispensation. The Spirit was given under the former, but in forms so new in the latter, as to render proper the statement of the Apostle, that "the Holy Ghost was not given until after Jesus was glorified." The superiority of the latter over the former is a leading theme of all the prophets.

This baptism, with its results in the Church and upon the world, is "the glory which was to follow the sufferings of Christ." These are "the better things God hath reserved for us"—"the better things," inquiring after which, and searching into and believing in which, rendered even the prophets perfect. "What sort of persons ought we to be," upon whom, and to whom, this glory has descended? That far more is expected and justly required of us than was possible to them, we argue from the following considerations:

MORE NOW EXPECTED AND REQUIRED OF US THAN WAS POSSIBLE UNDER THE FORMER DISPENSATION.

1. This is a dispensation of far greater light and knowledge than the other. They had the Old Testament only. We have that, with the New. The former differs from the latter, as the first glimmer of dawn differs from the light of cloudless noon. They knew nothing of Christ, but what was obscurely hinted through types and shadows, and prophetic revelations, which the prophets themselves did not fully comprehend. "We behold, with open face, the glory of the Lord." The way of holiness was to them very obscure and intricate. We walk in the King's highway, in which "a wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err." With them, noonday light was but a feeble twilight. With us, even "at evening time there is light." Our moon far outshines their sun. "Life and immortality are brought to light through the Gospel."

2. The law of duty is revealed to us in far clearer, and more attractive and impressive forms, than it was to them. To them it was revealed almost exclusively in the preceptive form, "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little." That same law comes to us, not merely in the form of command and prohibition, but also as exemplified in all its applications, through the pure and spotless example of Christ. They were taught what to do. We are taught not only what to do, but how to do it.

3. The forms of truth hidden from them and revealed to us have a quickening and transforming power, not possessed by the same forms as revealed under the Old Dispensation. The truths then known, through the new light now thrown upon them, have far greater power than any other forms of truth ever did or can possess.

The Apostle John, in comparing the present with the former dispensation, tells us that "the darkness has passed, and the true light now shineth." Peter tells us that the prophets, who stood amidst the clearest light then vouchsafed, "inquired and searched diligently, searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified before times of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory which should follow. Unto whom it was revealed that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the Gospel unto you, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into."

How impressive is the contrast which Paul draws between these dispensations! "For ye are not come unto the Mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words." "But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh; for if they escaped not that refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from Him that speaketh from heaven."

The Scriptures everywhere represent the Gospel as not only shedding new light upon questions pertaining to God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, duty, sin, holiness, redemption and immortality, but as revealing forms of truth which have power before unknown, for conversion, sanctification, consolation, and fulness of joy.

One prophet speaks of these new revelations as "a fountain opened to the House of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness." Others speak of the Gospel as "a new covenant," in the fulfilment of which God is to cleanse his people "from all their filthiness, and from all their idols;" and so completely to sanctify them, that when "their iniquity shall be sought for, there shall be none," and "their sins, and they shall not be found." In the New Testament, Christ is affirmed to be "the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth," and that "the weapons of our warfare are mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strongholds."

Now the special mission of the Spirit is to take truth in all its forms — truth as revealed in both Testaments, and to render it most effective for our sanctification, consolation, fulness of joy, and through us for the sanctification and edification of the Church, and the salvation of men. The Spirit knows absolutely what we need for all these high ends, and what forms of truth to present for the realization of all these ends, and how to present them for the most perfect accomplishment of all these benign results. Surely we ought to rise as far above Old Testament saints as the New Testament towers above the Old. Of this fact we shall be still more deeply impressed when we have considered —

SOME OF THE HISTORIC RESULTS OF THIS BAPTISM UNDER THIS DISPENSATION.

The case of the Apostles.

If we take the Apostles as examples, and contrast their intellectual, moral, and spiritual states prior and subsequent to the Pentecost, we shall be constrained to acknowledge that such transformations of character had never occurred in the history of the world before. All along up to the crucifixion, how dull were their apprehensions; how limited and obscure their vision of truth; how weak their faith; what cowards they were; how worldly their affections; how weak their mutual love; and how like ropes of sand were their most sacred fixed resolutions!
BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

How opposite in all respects to all this were they after they "were all filled with the Holy Ghost." "In a moment," as it were, "in the twinkling of an eye," "they were crucified to the world, and the world to them;" and their characters took on forms of glorious beauty and perfection, which rendered them "a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men." Their vision of truth seemed to be as cloudless as the kingdom of light. Their speech and their preaching brought the world on its knees before God. Peter, in faith, courage, and strength, became a rock. James and John vindicated their right to be called "sons of thunder." "They were all conquerors, and more than conquerors, through Him that loved them."

Power was one of the most striking characteristics of this baptism. All who received it "were endued with power from on high." Before these men passed off the stage of life, the Gospel was firmly planted among all nations. Literally had "their sound gone into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world."

Unity of spirit, and mutual fellowship and love, was another equally marked characteristic of this baptism. Before its descent, ambition, jealousy, and disputation among themselves, about who should be the greatest, and even anger towards one another, often divided their hearts. Now they were all "one in Christ Jesus," and nothing could interrupt their mutual love, fellowship, and co-operation.

Their boldness and courage were a mystery of mysteries to their enemies. No power in heaven or earth could induce them to "deny the Lord that bought them." Their peace in God, their "assurance of hope," their "everlasting consolations," their triumphs of faith, and "fulness of joy," nothing could interrupt or diminish. "They walked in the light, as God is in the light."
THE IMMEDIATE SUCCESSORS OF THE APOSTLES.

If we turn from the Apostles and their immediate associates and converts to the primitive Church, we shall find, among countless thousands of its membership, examples equally conspicuous of the results and power of this baptism.

For the first four or five centuries of the Christian era, the doctrine of the gift of the Spirit, after conversion and believing in Christ, was a great leading theme of thought and teaching. Hence there was a very general experience of this baptism during all this period.

This was the martyr age of the Church, the era, also, of her power, of her glory, and of her "victory through the blood of the Lamb and the word of His testimony." Such persecutions and fiery trials, and such patience and endurance, such brotherly love, such charity to the poor, and good-will to men, such faith in Christ, such meek submission to the Divine will, such "assurance of hope," such deathless zeal, such courage, such peace in God, such "everlasting consolations" and "fulness of joy," the world never witnessed until after "Jesus was glorified," and "the Holy Ghost was given." "The light of the Church had come," and "the glory of the Lord had risen upon her." As a consequence, "the Gentiles came to her light, and kings to the brightness of her rising." "Her righteousness went forth as brightness, and her salvation as a lamp that burneth." No amount of suffering and torture, threatened or inflicted, could induce a denial of the faith, or draw from the sufferers any sentiments but those of good-will towards even their judges and tormentors. "The holy martyrs of Christ," says Cyprian, "evidently show us, that during this sad hour of suffering they were strangers to their own bodies; or rather, that our Lord himself stood by them, and familiarly conversed with them; and that, being made partakers of his grace, they made light of these temporal torments, and by one short hour delivered themselves from eternal miseries."

Take a single fact illustrative of the Spirit and manner in which believers then "endured even unto the end." At Sebastia, in Armenia, in a cold and frosty night in the depth of winter, forty martyrs, stripped of all their clothing, were placed together in a lake. As death came on, they thus conversed together: "Is the weather sharp? but Paradise is comfortable and delightful. Is the frost cold and bitter? the rest that remains is sweet and pleasant. Let us but hold out a little, and Abraham's bosom will refresh us; we shall exchange this one night for an eternal age of happiness. It is but the flesh that suffers; let us not spare it. Since we must die, let us die that we may live!"

"By reason of our strange and wonderful courage and strength," says Lactantius, "new additions are made to us; for when people see men torn to pieces with infinite variety of torments, and yet maintain a patience unconquerable, and able to tire out their tormentors, they begin to think (what the truth is) that the consent of so many, and the perseverance of dying persons, cannot be in vain; nor that patience itself, were it not from God, could hold out under such racks and tortures. Thieves and men of robust bodies are not able to bear such tearing to pieces; they groan and cry out, and are overcome with pain, because not endued with divine patience; but our very children and women (to say nothing of men) do with silence conquer their tormentors; nor can the hottest fire force the least groan from them." So manifest did the fact become, that the places where the Christians were tortured were the holy places where the greatest numbers of converts were made, that the Roman Emperors at length prohibited all public executions of the saints of God.
Had this Divine baptism continued in the Church, long before the first thousand years of the Christian era had passed away would "the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ."

BAPTISMS OF THE SPIRIT DURING THE DARK AGES.

If we leave this era of light and power and traverse the dark ages which followed — the dark ages in which this and all other vital truths of the gospel went into a deep and dark eclipse — we shall find that even here God did not leave himself without witnesses. "Burning and shining lights" arose among all Christian nations, men and women who were "full of faith and the Holy Ghost." These attained to the full "liberty of the sons of God," "walked in the light of God," and had "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

Such individuals as Thomas a Kempis, Catharine Adorna, and many others, were not only Christians, but believers who had a knowledge of all the mysteries of the higher life, and who, through all coming time, will shine as stars of the first magnitude in the firmament of the Church. In their inward experiences, holy walk, and "power with God and with men," they had few if any superiors in any preceding era of Church history. "The unction of the Spirit" was as manifest in them as in the Apostles and primitive believers. They, also, made their attainments in the Christian life under distinct apprehensions of the doctrine of the Spirit, as set forth in these discourses.

BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT SINCE THE REFORMATION.

We now turn our attention to the state of the Church since the Reformation. Among Catholics, there have been a few, and among Protestants many, who have fully known this baptism. It is a singular fact, that while the fundamental doctrine of Protestantism was "Justification by faith," the equally essential doctrine of "Sanctification by faith" was first, in modern times, distinctly announced and taught within the circle of the Catholic Church—announced and taught by such individuals as Madame Guyon an Archbishop Fenelon. It is equally true, that in all the Churches of every name, the men and women who have been most distinguished for "power with God and with men," are the individuals who did receive the "sealing and earnest of the Spirit" after they believed. Luther, for example, Knox and his associates, "the Scotch worthies," who, with him, brought Scotland out from under the power of "the man of sin," and rendered it, for a long period, the crowning glory of Christendom, received this Divine baptism in this form, and "here was the hiding of their power."

The case of Luther.

Let us first consider the case of Luther. After his conversion he had many and hard struggles after the "Higher Life." While studying the Epistle to the Romans, these words, "The just shall live by faith," sent new light through his soul. On a subsequent occasion, when clouds and darkness hung over his mind in regard to the subject of personal holiness, the words, "The just shall live by faith," came again to him with new force, and filled him with the light of heaven. "The Pentecost," with him, however, was not yet fully come. He had heard that all who, upon their knees, would climb Pilate's staircase, at Rome, would thereby attain to full salvation. While painfully creeping up, from stone to stone, that ascent, he suddenly heard, in the depth of his soul, a voice as of thunder, "The just shall live by faith." In a moment he leaped up, the freeman of the Lord. "Then," he says, "I felt myself born again as a new man, and I entered by an open door into the very Paradise of God. From that hour I saw the precious and holy Scriptures with new eyes. I went through the whole Bible. I collected a multitude of passages, which taught me what the work of God was. Truly, this text of St. Paul was to me the very gate of heaven.” Here we have the secret of Luther’s subsequent courage and power. Here, too, we have one special form in which “the baptism of the Spirit” is commonly received—the opening, in new and divine forms, of some special truth of God upon the mind, and that in connection with some particular passage of the Divine Word.

“The Scotch Worthies.”

“The Memoirs of the Scotch Worthies” disclose three central facts in their spiritual history—their conversion, followed by the common forms of Christian experience; a subsequent heart-searching, breaking up of the fountains of the great deep of the soul, and a renewal, in which they were filled with “the light of God;” and, finally, forms of the divine life so new, and so far transcending anything before experienced, that they were utterly at loss in regard to the nature and character of their first conversion.

It was after this renewal that they became the mighty men of God, who revolutionized that kingdom. It was no uncommon event then, for one, two, and sometimes as many as five hundred souls, to be converted under single discourses delivered by these men—souls who evinced, by their subsequent lives, that they belonged to “the people of whom God is not ashamed to be called their God.” It was the eclipse of this glory which left the Scotch Church the comparatively “dead letter” which it now is.
Mr. Wesley and his associates.

Who is not aware that no one ever led a more laborious, and comparatively fruitless life, than did Mr. Wesley, during the interval between his conversion and divine baptism, and that very few ever led a more laborious and fruitful life than he did after he was "endued with power from on high." The era of his barrenness terminated, and of his amazing fruitfulness commenced, at the same moment. The same is true of his associates. The experience of these men of God should be a solemn admonition to all believers, never to go forth to their life mission and work but under "the power of the Spirit."

The Tenants.

The Tenants, William especially, were the wonder of the age in which they lived. The secret of the savor of God which everywhere encircled them, and of their wonderful power as "ministers of the Word," was the fact that "after they believed they were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise."

On one occasion, during the interval of worship on the Sabbath, Mr. William Tenant retired to a grove near by, for private meditation and prayer. When the congregation re-assembled, and their pastor did not appear, several individuals went to the grove to find him. They found him lying helpless upon the ground, under the power of the visions of God which had there opened upon his mind. In their arms they carried him to the pulpit, where he lifted up a prayer that God would veil his power and love a little, so that he might tell the people of the "glory manifested to him." The prayer was answered, and "no man" not thus illumined "ever spake as did this man" on that occasion. Such manifestations were of common occurrence in the experience of
of these men, and they ever spoke and acted under their influence.

President Edwards.

President Edwards thus describes the baptism which rendered his subsequent life so divine: "One day, when walking for divine contemplation and prayer, I had a view, that for me was extraordinary, of the glory of the Son of God, as Mediator between God and man, and his wonderful, great, full, pure, and sweet grace and love, and meek and gentle condescension. This grace, that appeared so calm and sweet, appeared also great above the heavens; the person of Christ appeared also ineffably excellent, with an excellency great enough to swallow up all thought and conception, which continued, as near as I can judge, about an hour, which kept me the greater part of the time in a flood of tears, weeping aloud. I had an ardency of soul to be, what I know not otherwise how to express, emptied and annihilated, to lie in the dust and to be filled with Christ alone, to love him with a holy and pure love, to trust in him, to live upon him, and to be perfectly sanctified, and made pure with a divine and heavenly purity."

Mrs. Edwards.

Of the lady who afterwards became his wife, and who, during her married life, often had visions of the divine glory and love, under the power of which she would lie helpless for hours, President Edwards thus writes:

"They say there is a young lady in — who is beloved of that great Being who moves and rules the world, and that there are certain seasons in which this great Being, in some way or other invisible, comes to her, and fills her mind with exceeding sweet delights, and that she hardly ever cares for anything, except to meditate on Him; that she expects, after a while, to be received up where He is, to be raised up out of this world and caught up into heaven, being assured that He loves her too well to let her remain at a distance from Him always. There she is to dwell with Him, and to be ravished with His love and delight forever. Therefore, if you present all the world before her, with the richest of its treasures, she disregards it, and cares not for it, and is unmindful of any pain or affliction. She has a strange sweetness in her mind, and singular purity in her affections; is most just and conscientious in all her conduct, and you could not persuade her to do anything wrong or sinful if you would give her all the world, lest she should offend this great Being. She is of a wonderful sweetness, calmness, and benevolence of mind. She will sometimes go about from place to place, singing devoutly, and seems to be always full of joy and pleasure, and no one knows for what. She loves to be alone, walking in the fields and groves, and seems to have some one invisible always conversing with her."

Merle D'Aubigné.

All are aware that the savor of the writings of Merle D'Aubigné has been, throughout Christendom, "as ointment poured forth." What was the cause of this savor? Several years after his conversion, when at Kiel, in company with Rev. F. Monod of Paris, Rev. C. Riell of Jutland, and Klenker, Biblical Professor of the University there, in the course of their conversation upon the Scriptures, the aged Professor refused to enter into any detailed solution of difficulties presented, saying that the first step was to be "firmly settled in the grace of Christ," and that "the light which proceeds from Him will disperse all darkness." "We were studying," says D'Aubigné, "the Epistle to the Ephesians, and had got to the end of the third chapter. When we read the last two verses, 'Now unto Him that can do exceeding abundantly, above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us,' etc., this expression fell upon my soul as a revelation from God. He can do, by his power, I said to myself, above all that we ask, above all, even, that we think, nay, EXCEEDING ABUNDANTLY above all. A full trust in Christ for the work to be done in my poor heart now filled my soul.

They then all knelt together in prayer. "When I arose," he adds, "I felt as if my wings had been `renewed, as the wings of eagles.' All my doubts were removed, my anguish was quelled, and the Lord extended peace to me as a river. Then I could 'comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and depth, and length, and height, and know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge.' Then was I able to say, 'Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee.'"

Mr. Carpenter.

About thirty or forty years ago, there died, in the city of Newark, N. J., a man of God, named Carpenter. At his funeral in the First Presbyterian Church in that city, it was publicly stated by one of the ministers present, that from the most careful estimate it was fully believed that the deceased had been directly instrumental in the conversion of more than ten thousand souls. This man was a layman of a very limited common-school education, and was very simple and ungrammatical in his conversation and public addresses. Prior to the time of his divine anointing, he had a mere "name to live" in the Church. As soon as he received that anointing, "as a prince, he had power with God and with men."

At one time, for example, he, with another Christian associate, entered the stage to pass from Newark to New York. They found seven other individuals, all impenitent, with them in the vehicle. While on the way, or very soon after, all those seven individuals were hopefully converted, and that through the influence exerted during the ride. Such was the influence everywhere exerted by this "holy man of God." To a very intimate friend he made these statements, a little time before his death, that, for the prior ten years, he had walked continuously under the cloudless light of the sun of righteousness; that the doctrine of Entire Sanctification was true; that he had been in that state during the period referred to; and that this doctrine would, ere long, be a leading theme in the churches.

President Finney.

We would here state the important fact, that the special power which attended the preaching of President Finney, during the early years of his ministry, was chiefly owing to a special baptism of the Spirit, a personal manifestation of Christ to his mind, a baptism which he received not long after his conversion. Hence it was, that when, through him, "the violated law spake out its thunders," it did seem as if we had in truth "come unto the Mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, and unto blackness and darkness and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words." But when he spoke of Christ, then indeed did his "doctrine drop as the rain, and his speech distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the mown grass." The reason, also, why he is bringing forth such wondrous "fruit in his old age," is, that while his whole ministry has been under "the power of the Spirit," his former baptisms have been renewed with increasing power and frequency during a few years past.

In drawing this discourse to a close, we would refer to some of the special peculiarities which distinguish, and have dis-tonguished, all individuals who have received "the baptism of the Holy Ghost." Among these we would designate the following:

SOME OF THE SPECIAL PECULIARITIES WHICH PECULIARIZE ALL WHO RECEIVE THIS BAPTISM.

1. One of these is a peculiar and special savor about their lives and utterances—a savor which all in common recognize as unearthy and divine. When the light comes, the glory will be seen by the Church and the world. The prophet had made but a few calls at a certain house, before all the inmates knew him as "a holy man of God." A very bigoted Irish Catholic had occasion to board for a time in the family of a friend of ours, whose wife had for years "walked in the light of God.” This man had from childhood been taught, and had believed, that "out of the Mother Church salvation is impossible.” His attention, however, was soon arrested by the peculiar spirit and sanctified conversation of that woman. He would frequently stop after meals, and continue conversation with her upon Christ, purity, and heaven. At the close of such a conversation one day, he said: "Madam, you will get to heaven before you die.” That man was as profane and wicked as he was bigoted; yet such a character as hers could not lift its benign form before his mind without his recognizing it as unearthy and divine, and as advancing heavenward.

Here is a divine something which must be possessed in order to be represented. A preacher, for example, a preacher who is a stranger to this anointing, may be very able, exciting, and even instructive, in his discourses. But the peculiar savor of God which attends the unction of the Spirit, no utterances can possess, but the teachings of those who “have received the Holy Ghost since they believed,” and those who have received this anointing, “cannot be hid.”
2. All such individuals, also, have an omnipresent peace, quietude, assurance, and fulness of joy in God, which not only lifts them above all worldly vicissitudes, but remains with them alike in all vicissitudes. "Their sun does not go down, neither does their moon withdraw itself. The Lord is their everlasting light, and the days of their mourning are ended." In the storm and the tempest, when "they go up by the mountains," they are consciously going nearer and nearer to heaven, and when "they go down by the valleys," they are as consciously going down deeper and deeper into the bosom of God. "They have learned, in whatsoever state they are, therewith to be content." "They can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth them."

Madame Guyon, for proclaiming the doctrine of sanctification by faith, spent some fourteen years, as a culprit, in the prisons of France, a large portion of these in the Bastile, with "the Man in the Iron Mask" passing daily the door of her cell. But prison walls could not shut out from her heart the light or the peace of God. In such words as the following she shadows forth the peace of God in her heart:

"A little bird I am,
Shut out from fields of air,
And in my cage I sit and sing
To Him who placed me there;
Well pleased a prisoner to be,
Because, my God, it pleaseth Thee.

"Nought have I else to do:
I sing the whole day long;
And He whom most I love to please Doth listen to my song;
He caught and bound my wandering wing,
But still He bends to hear me sing.

"Oh! it is good to soar,
These bolts and bars above,
To Him whose purpose I adore,
Whose providence I love:
And in Thy mighty will to find
The joy, the freedom of the mind."
When will believers get so near to God, that "the sun shall be no more their light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto them: but the Lord shall be unto them an everlasting light, and their God their glory"?

3. A peculiar and special form of self-control, and balance of soul, a control over their own spirits, their temper, their appetites, and worldly propensities, is another very marked characteristic of all who receive this baptism. We refer to that self-mastery, and divine equanimity of temper represented in such statements and forms of expression as the following: "Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we endure it; and being defamed, we entreat;" "none of these things move me;" "I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong;" and "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." As the infant Jesus lay in his mother's arms, with similar quietude, self-composure, self-control, and hopeful trust, does the soul, when filled with the Spirit, lie in the centre of the sweet will of God.

"President Mahan," said a clerical friend to us, years ago, "I wish you could see my mother. To give you some idea of what a monument of grace she is, I would state, that in early life she was spoiled by training. She had one of the worst and most ungovernable tempers I ever knew. For years past, she has been wholly confined to her bed from nervous prostration. During the early part of this period, it did seem that nobody could take care of her, or endure her continued manifestations of irritability, impatience, fretfulness, and furious anger. Right there, she became fully convinced that through grace and the baptism of the Spirit she could have perfect rest, quietude, and self-control. She set her whole heart upon attaining that state. Such was her fervency of spirit, and earnestness in prayer, that her friends thought she would become deranged, and urged her to cease seeking and prayer. ‘I die in the effort,’ was her reply, ‘or I obtain what I know to be in reserve for me.’ At length the baptism of power came gently upon her. From that hour there has not been the slightest indication of even the remains of that temper. Her quietude and assurance have been absolute, and her sweetness of spirit ‘as ointment poured forth.’ It is no trouble to any one now, but a privilege to all, to care for her. Many come, even from long distances, to listen to her divine discourse.

Years passed on, and again we met. “What of your mother?” we asked. “Does her faith hold out?” “She is gone,” was the reply. “But from the hour of that baptism to that of her death, that quietude and assurance remained, and that ineffable sweetness of temper was never for a moment interrupted. I witnessed the closing scene. She died of cholera, and in the greatest conceivable agony. Yet such patience, such serenity of hope, and such quiet waiting for the coming of the Lord, I hardly before deemed possible. ‘My son,’ she would say, ‘nature has a hard struggle; but it will be soon over, and I shall “enter into the rest that remains for the people of God.”’

“This,” reader, “is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.” The feeblest among us may be “more than conquerors, through Him that hath loved us.” Even “at evening time there shall be light” to all who “walk in the light of God.” By the grace of Christ and “the power of the Spirit,” we can “rule our own spirits.” “We can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth us.”

4. A peculiar and special degree of moral and spiritual power, “power with God and with men,” is the only other characteristic which we would present, as distinguishing and peculiarizing those who receive this baptism. The form of power possessed by each is in certain respects unlike that possessed by any others. Yet in all it has this one common tendency—an almost resistless influence to draw others toward God, purity, and heaven. Some are "sons of thunder;" others are "sons of consolation." Some have special wisdom as teachers of truth; others are endued with the special power of exhortation. Some have peculiar forms of courage and faith, by which they have special power to "strengthen weak hands, and confirm feeble knees;" others have equally special forms of power in ministering to the necessities of the sick and afflicted. Others still have special power in exciting in believers the spirit of hunger and thirst for the bread and waters of life. "What do you think of Mr.—?" said one Christian to another? "I have not heard him." The clergyman referred to was a man "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." "Well," replied the other, "if you will hear this man a few times, and not feel such a hungering and thirsting after righteousness as you never felt before, your experience will differ from mine." Others have special power in drawing sinners to repentance.

Power to prophesy—that is, to "speak unto men for consolation, for exhortation, and edification"—this is universal among all who receive this anointing. When one or more individuals in a given church have this baptism, there will be a constant divine influence there, drawing the whole body and people heavenward. When the Church generally shall be endued with this power, "Gentiles will come to her light, and kings to the brightness of her rising." If, then, we would "serve God and our generation" according to the will of our God and Redeemer, we must, one and all of us, tarry in the place of prayer, and struggle there with "strong crying and tears," until we are "endued with power from on high."
DISCOURSE VI.

MENTAL STATES IN WHICH THIS BAPTISM IS RECEIVED.

Luke xi. 13 — "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?"

When our Saviour came to his disciples and breathed upon them, saying, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," he did so, not because there was any virtue in that breath, or in the mere words spoken, nor because the "gift of the Spirit" was then to be conferred. Indeed, a considerable period, forty days at least, intervened between the time of the events here recorded, and that of the Pentecostal baptism. These events occurred — John xx. 22 — at the first meeting of Christ with his disciples after his resurrection; whereas the baptism of the Pentecost was quite forty days afterwards. What, then, was the object of our Saviour in what he then did and said? It was evidently this, to induce in their hearts that state of waiting expectation and inward preparation, which are the necessary prerequisites to the reception of this all-crowning gift of God. The same object our Saviour had in view in his last promise and admonition to his disciples: "And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." "And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them." What was said and done here, and on the occasion previously referred to, did induce the prerequisite expectation, and heart preparation, represented by the words, "they were all with one accord in one place." To secure the same mental and spiritual preparation for the gift to be received, was the exclusive object of the Apostles in the "laying of hands" upon those who sought this blessing.

Had the ceremony not secured this preparatory state in the recipient, the ordinance itself would have been a dead letter. The same baptism, in its original or renewed form, was then expected, and commonly received, in connection with the ordinances of baptism, the Lord's Supper, and special prayer. For such reasons, the Church, in her departures from the living God, attributed a saving efficacy to these and kindred ordinances, and that irrespective of the mental state of the administrator or subject. Hence the origin of formalism. When the primitive faith returns to the Church, we have no doubt but that the same speciality of divine influence will attend the ordinances, as did attend them at the first. Where God has appointed ordinances, and promises to meet his people with special divine influence, when they approach the same with prayer and inward preparedness, they should be to us holy places, where we always expect to meet God. If our trust, however, is in the ordinances, and not in the grace of Christ, a blight will come over our spirits in the very place where we should expect to be "filled with the Holy Ghost." The ordinances, however, are not our present theme, but that peculiar and special mental and spiritual state which is the immutable prerequisite to the reception of this baptism.

PREREQUISITE STATE.

If we will carefully note the cases in which this anointing has been given, we shall not fail to recognize this important fact, that prior to the bestowment of the gift, the recipient was brought into a state of fervent desire, earnest seeking, importunate prayer, and waiting expectancy. The mind is brought to realize a deep inward want, "an aching void within"—a soul necessity, which must be met. At the same time, it is rendered assured of an available fulness in Christ to meet that all overshadowing necessity. As a consequence, there arises intense desire, fervent seeking, importunity in prayer, and an immutable purpose to seek, and pray, and wait, until the promised blessing is vouchsafed. Our Methodist brethren formerly denominated this state "being convicted for sanctification." O! that all the membership of all the churches were thus convicted! Then would our Zion "arise and shine, her light being come, and the glory of the Lord being risen upon her." In all cases in which this baptism was received without being specifically expected, this prerequisite state was always induced. Cornelius, for example, after his conversion, became possessed, and oppressed, with the deep consciousness of inward necessities which God only could meet. He had, also, the inward persuasion, that through faith in God and prayer to him, his necessities would be met through the divine fulness. Hence his continuous fasting and prayer. The angel of God now appeared, and gave to the suppliant these directions: "And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter; he lodgeth with one Simon, a tanner, whose house is by the sea side; he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." How adapted this message was to induce the intensest desire, inward preparation, and waiting expectation for the approaching blessing! All the interval was consequently spent in heart and outward preparation for the coming of the Lord. When Peter arrived, this preparedness is thus announced: "Now, therefore, are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God." It is no matter of wonder that the discourse of Peter was so soon interrupted by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the listeners, there being such an absolute inward preparedness in all for the reception of the gift conferred. Let us now consider some facts illustrative of the subject before us.

THE CASE OF MOSES.

We have already alluded to the special baptism which Moses received after Israel had sinned in the matter of the golden calf. We allude to that scene now, for the purpose of disclosing the preparatory state of mind in which the new baptism of power was received. Having secured for the people deliverance from judgments impending over them, on account of their great sin; having obtained the promise that God would continue with the people as their God; having received a special communication that he was to be their divine leader, ruler, and revelator; and being deeply impressed with the consciousness of his own inadequacy for such responsibilities — his whole being became fixed and centred in one supreme desire to obtain from God a baptism of knowledge, wisdom, and power, to the full measure of his necessities. We can now read with understanding and profit the following memorable statements: "And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. And he turned again into the camp: but his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle. And Moses said unto the Lord, See, Thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people; and thou hast not let me know whom Thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight. Now, therefore, I pray Thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me now thy way, that I may know Thee, that I may find grace in thy sight, and consider that this nation is thy people. And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."
And he said unto him, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence. For wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight. Is it not in that thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth. And the Lord said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken: for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name. And he said, I beseech Thee, show me thy glory.” One addition to this intense desire and earnest prayer was needed—a state of waiting expectation and full preparation, such as our Saviour secured in his disciples prior to the scene of the Pentecost. This state was induced by the promise and direction which followed. The promise, among other things, contained these words, “I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee.” Moses was then directed to hew out two tables of stone, like unto the first, “and when these were finished, to come up in the morning, unto Mount Sinai, to present himself there to God in the top of the Mount.” How all this tended to intensify desire, to bring the mind into a state of waiting expectation and interest, and to insure all inward and even outward preparation for the promised divine manifestation! When that preparation was perfected, the power of the Spirit came upon him. Here we have the real meaning of the divine declaration, “Ye shall seek Me and find Me when ye shall search for Me with all your heart.” Those who do not value “the gift of the Spirit” enough thus to seek for it, will never receive, and those who know their privileges, and do not avail themselves of them, may well fear a final rejection as “reprobate silver.”
THE CASE OF A LITTLE CHILD.

We are here reminded of the case of a little child, in the era of the great revivals in the days of President Edwards and the Tenants, a child so young, that none expected that she would be converted. Two facts in her appearance and conduct attracted at length the attention of her mother — the fact that she spent most of her time alone in her bedroom, and the deep sadness upon her countenance whenever she came from that place. "What is it, my daughter," the mother inquired, "that makes you appear so sad?" "Why, mother," the child replied, "God won't come to me. I call to Him, and He won't come to me." A little time after, the precious one came from her room, and with unspeakable joy upon her countenance exclaimed: "Mother, God has come. He comes to me now when I pray to Him." From that moment onward, that child was "the wonder of many." In prayer especially, she had a freedom and power of utterance which old disciples could hardly equal. Nor did this distinct consciousness of the presence and light of God ever leave her, nor did the consequent savor of God cease to encircle her, until death, which occurred when she was upwards of sixty years of age, removed her within the veil. Reader, if God is not thus consciously present to you when you call upon him, it is because you have not called to him as that child did.

THE CASE OF ELISHA.

The case of Elisha presents a very striking illustration of the subject before us. Ever after the mantle of Elijah was thrown over him, he had been aware of the fact, that on the removal of his great predecessor he was to be called to occupy the place of the leading prophet of Israel. Of one fact he was most deeply impressed — that without a full measure of the power of the Spirit that rested upon Elijah, he would be wholly disqualified for his sacred mission. As a consequence, the reception of this baptism became to him the object of constantly increasing intensity of desire. He was also impressed with the conviction that this anointing, if received, must be secured while his great teacher and predecessor was with him. Hence the fixed determination of the former not to be separated from the latter until this blessing was secured.

As the time "when the Lord would take up Elijah to heaven by a whirlwind" drew on, the faith, and desire, and purpose of Elisha were put to the severest possible test. In three successive instances, Elijah says to Elisha, "Tarry here, I pray thee; for the Lord hath sent me" to such a place. To each entreaty the same answer was returned, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee." Then they came to Jordan, where the last miracle of Elijah occurred. As they passed over, or rather through, the divided river, the following memorable scene occurred: "And it came to pass, when they were gone over, that Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And Elisha said, I pray thee let a double portion [a full measure] of thy spirit be upon me. And he said, Thou hast asked a hard thing; nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so." This last condition secured the intensity of desire, the waiting expectation, and heart preparedness which were necessary prerequisites for the baptism of power which awaited the seeker. Had his faith wavered, had his purpose faltered, had the intensity of desire slackened, or had the required waiting expectation and watchfulness relaxed at all, "the spirit of Elijah would not have rested on Elisha." Are you thus waiting, reader, for "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit?” In due time, “you will reap, if you faint not.” But if you draw back, God will “have no pleasure in you.”

AN AGED MINISTER.

Several years since, we would say in illustration of the great truth before us, we met a very aged and venerable clergyman, who asked, on our first introduction, if we did not recognize him. On receiving a negative answer, he replied that years before, while we were at Oberlin, he, being then a ruling elder in a Presbyterian Church, heard of the work of God among us there. After reading for a time the Oberlin Evangelist, he determined to visit us, and know for himself what was the character of the work of which he heard so much. After conversing with Brother Finney, myself, and others, he became fully convinced that God was with us of a truth, and that the baptism which we had received was in reserve for him. He accordingly set his whole being upon the attainment of that divine anointing, with the immutable determination never to cease seeking, and praying, until he was really and truly “endued with power from on high.” After searching his heart, consecrating himself to Christ, and waiting in earnest prayer, and “strong crying and tears,” for the promised blessing, he entered his closet one day, under the full assurance that then and there he might “receive the Holy Ghost.” He accordingly determined never to leave that place until he should receive the gift of God, after which he was seeking. He had been in the place but a little time, when he seemed to himself to be sinking down into infinite depths, into the bosom of God. Here the waters of life began to rise and overflow in his heart, and to the full extent of his capabilities he knew himself to be “filled with all the fulness of God.” The glory, the love of Christ, and the infinite riches of his grace now occupied his whole being. He began to tell others of the good hand of God that was upon him, "of the riches of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in believers, the hope of glory;" and such power everywhere attended his testimony, that he was urged to take out a license to preach. As he could not do so in his own church, he obtained one among the Wesleyans who were laboring in his vicinity. As the results of a few years labor, more than one thousand souls were gathered into the fold of Christ. So the Lord continued to bless his labors, until his voice and strength failed. As a consequence, he was then quietly waiting the time when his divine Master should call him to the kingdom of light. The baptism which he had at first received was often renewed, and never had been diminished, as a life-imparting power. The same anointing, reader, is for you. If you would obtain it, however, you must appreciate its value, and "seek it with all your heart, and with all your soul," and never rest, and give God no rest, until the Spirit of glory and of God rests upon you.

THE CASE OF PAUL.

The circumstances in which Paul received, if not his first, yet a very special and abiding baptism of the Spirit, is given by himself, 2 Cor. xii. 7-12. After he had commenced his ministry, he found himself greatly embarrassed in his work by some visible natural infirmity, which operated as a hindrance, and a reproach from his enemies. That such a hindrance might be removed, he sought unto God in prayer, thrice "be-seeching the Lord that it might depart from him." In each instance he received the same specific answer: "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness." As this declaration was repeated, the truth thundered in the depths of his soul, as did the passage, "the just shall live by faith," in the soul of Luther, that what he needed was not the removal of natural infirmities, but the grace and strength of Christ to rest upon him. From that moment the fulness and infinitude of that grace and strength became the central light of his soul, and natural infirmities and external obstacles became objects of joy and triumph to him; for whenever these were to be encountered, then and there would the grace and power of God be vouchsafed to him in superabundant measure. “Most gladly, therefore,” he exclaims, “will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ’s sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong.” From that moment onward, not only did the inward experience of Paul take a new and more triumphant direction, but his ministry took on forms of power which it never possessed before. In all his tribulations he not only himself received “everlasting consolation and good hope through grace,” but was able to impart similar refreshings to all believers in all “the fiery trials” which came upon them. “Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort; who comforteth us in all our tribulations, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.”

It was under the influence of the baptism under consideration that he learned the wondrous lesson, to which he refers in Phil. iv. 11–13: “Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound; everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.”
Two important lessons we should learn from the experience of Paul, as it now lies out before us.

1. The baptism of the Spirit is often given—most often, perhaps—in this manner: the presentation of some great and essential truth of the Gospel to the mind, and that in such a form and vividness, that that truth ever after becomes an omnipresent and all-vitalizing principle in the soul, a great central light, which renders all other forms of revealed truth equally luminous and life-imparting.

Luther tells us, for example, that from the hour when the truth embodied in the words, "The just shall live by faith," came home with such vitalizing power to his mind, he "saw the precious and holy Scriptures with new eyes."

2. We should also learn from this experience of Paul, to carry all difficulties which we meet with in the divine life directly to Christ. In that case, they will be taken from us, or we will receive such a revelation of the fulness of the superabounding grace and strength of Christ, that with Paul we shall "most gladly glory in our infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon us."

CASE OF MR. CARPENTER.

We have before referred to Mr. Carpenter, the individual who exerted such wonderful power for the sanctification of believers and the conversion of sinners. We refer to his case again, for the purpose of disclosing the state of mind in which he received such a baptism of power. He had become deeply impressed with the consciousness of moral and spiritual impotency, and of the absence of any assured hope, or settled confidence, or trust in God. He, consequently, set his whole heart upon attaining, through grace and the power of the Spirit, a permanent and settled faith, and assurance of hope, such as Abraham possessed. This became the fixed and continued theme of thought, reading, desire, and importunate prayer. For a considerable time he gave himself and God "no rest, day nor night." At length he was drawn out into a distinct and conscious dedication of himself and family, and all his interests, to Christ. Then the baptism of power came upon him, the reason being that the prerequisite preparation was perfected. From that time onward his faith never wavered for a moment, the light of God encircled him, and "he had power with God and with men."

THE CASE OF J. B. TAYLOR.

The memory of J. B. Taylor, to all who knew him, and his memoir, to all who have read it, have been "as a sweet savor from God." No memoir published during the progress of the present century has been more extensively read, or has made a deeper impression upon the Church, than his. His early Christian experience had the same characteristics as those of most converts—sinning and repenting, resolving and re-resolving, and making little or no progress. Arriving at length to the full conviction that "God has reserved some better things for us," he set his whole heart upon attaining to the "full liberty of the sons of God." The struggle, and the victory which ensued, he thus describes in a letter to a friend: "For some days I have been desirous to visit some friends who are distinguished for fervor of piety, and remarkable for the happiness which they enjoy in religion. It was my hope, that, by associating with them, and through the help of their prayers, I might find the Lord more graciously near to my poor soul.

"My desire was that the Lord would visit me, and 'baptize me with the Holy Spirit;' my cry to him was, 'Seal my soul forever thine!' I lifted up my heart in prayer that the blessing might descend. I felt I needed something which I did not possess. There was a void within which must be filled, or I could not be happy. My earnest desire then was, as it has been ever since—I professed religion six years before—that all love of the world might be destroyed, all selfishness should be extirpated; pride banished, unbelief removed, all idols dethroned—everything hostile to holiness and opposed to the Divine will crucified: that holiness to the Lord might be engraven in my heart, and forevermore characterize my conversation.

"My mind was led to reflect on what would be my future situation. It occurred to me, I am to be hereafter a minister of the Gospel. But how shall I be able to preach in my present state of mind? I cannot—never, no, never shall I be able to do it with profit, without great overturnings in my soul. I felt that I needed that for which I was then, and for a long time had been, hungering and thirsting. I desired it not for my benefit only, but for that of the Church and the world."

Such was his ardency of desire for the baptism of the Spirit, and for consequent perfect moral and spiritual purification.

In another letter to an aged Christian sister, who enjoyed all the light and privileges of the higher life, he thus writes about this time: "Oh, my friend! I feel tired of living by the halves. God says, 'Son, give me thine heart.' I respond, 'Oh for an entire surrender!' Of late my soul has panted more for complete deliverance from remaining corruption than ever before. Oh for perfect love! Oh for complete sanctification in soul, body, and spirit! I beg your earnest prayers. I believe it attainable, and my soul thirsts for it; and until I possess these qualifications, I feel I shall not be fit to be a minister of Jesus Christ." Such was his mental state of intense desire, earnest seeking, and fervent prayer.

Let us hear the result as detailed in the letter from which the first extract was taken. "At this juncture," he says, "I was most delightfully conscious of giving up all to God. I was enabled to say, Here, Lord, take me — take my whole soul, and seal me thine — thine now, and thine forever! 'If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.' Then there ensued such emotions as I never before experienced; all was calm and tranquil, and a solemn heaven of love possessed my whole soul. I had a witness of God's love to me, and of mine to him. Shortly after, I was dissolved in tears of love and gratitude to our blessed Lord. The name of Jesus was precious to me. 'Twas music to my ear.' 'He came as king, and took full possession of my heart,' and I was enabled to say, 'I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ within me.'"

On a subsequent occasion he thus speaks of this new form of being and of life which resulted from this baptism: "People may call this blessing what they please — faith of assurance, holiness, perfect love, sanctification; it makes no difference to me whether they give it a name or no name, it continues a blessed reality, and thanks to my heavenly Father, it is my privilege to enjoy it. It is yours also, and the privilege of all." It is something better felt than described; "the white stone," "the new name," we remark again, "which no man knoweth but he who receiveth it."

How true are the words of the prophet, "Then shall ye seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart"!

MY OWN CASE.

When "the hands of the Presbytery" had been laid upon me, and I found myself under a charge to "feed the flock of God," I soon felt myself pressed down under the consciousness of fundamental deficiencies, especially in respect to the sacred function of "building up believers in the most holy faith."

Under my ministry, many, very many sinners were convicted, converted, and "led quite to Christ," in the matter of justification. But how after this to induce in the convert that form of the divine life which I knew to be portrayed in the New Testament, and foretold in the Old—here I felt myself "weighed in the balance and found wanting." The reason I knew to be, the want of that life perfected in my own experience. Hence the subject of personal holiness became with me the great central object of thought, inquiry, reading, and prayer.

When alone with God, one day, in a deep forest, for example, I said distinctly and definitely to my heavenly Father, that there was one thing that I desired above all else—the consciousness that my heart was pure in his sight; that if he would grant me this one blessing, I would accept of any providences that might attend me. This I said "with strong crying and tears."

In this state I came to Oberlin, as the President of that College. I had been there but a short time, when a general inquiry arose in the Church after the divine secret of holy living, and a direct appeal was made to Brother Finney and myself for specific instruction upon the subject, which induced in me an intensity of desire, indescribable, after that secret. Just as my whole being became centred in that one desire, the cloud lifted, and I stood in the clear sunlight of the face of God. The secret was all plain to me now, and I knew, also, how to lead inquirers into the King's highway.

Since that good hour, "my sun has not gone down, neither has my moon withdrawn itself." Christ, reader, will never "write upon his own new name," and give you "that new white stone, which no man knoweth but him that receiveth it," until you come to value above all price the possession of his moral image and likeness, and until you seek that image and likeness with immutable fixedness of desire and purpose. "Then shall ye seek me and find me, when you shall search for me with all your heart."

THE CASES OF MR. WESLEY, MADAME GUYON, AND OTHERS.

The memoirs of the Wesleys, Madame Guyon, and indeed all recorded cases of the baptism of the Spirit, present most impressive illustrations of the necessity of full heart-preparation before this unspeakable gift is vouchsafed. How intense were "the hungerings and thirstings of the Wesleys after righteousness," how diligent and untiring their inquiries after "the way of holiness," how fervent their prayers for divine illumination, and how teachable their spirit, before "the Lord rose upon them, and his glory was seen upon them," and how did their righteousness and salvation shine forth after "the brightness of their rising"!

For a considerable period prior to her baptism, Madame Guyon was deeply impressed with the conviction that God intended for her some specific and special mission. With continuous fasting and prayer, reading and meditation, she sought to know what that mission was, and to receive "power from on high" for its fulfilment. At length the nature of that mission opened upon her mind with such distinctness and vividness, that she uttered the words aloud, "Sanctification by faith."

From that moment not a doubt rested upon her mind that to elucidate, exemplify, and proclaim that doctrine was her heaven-descended mission. That revelation, also, was attended with the bestowment of such "power from on high," that but a few years passed on before Europe, from centre to circumference, felt the influence of her example, vocal utterances, and writings; an influence, also, which the world will yet feel.

"THE ELECT SISTES."

We must recur here to a case which came under our observation years ago, "among the annals of the poor." A woman in poor health, poor in this world's goods, pressed down with the care of a large family, with the merest "name to live" in the Church, and when moving about amid her domestic cares, had these specific reflections one day pass with wonderful impressiveness through her mind: "I shall die soon, and stand in the presence of God. I do not desire to meet my God there on a short or slight acquaintance. I desire to know him fully before that time. From this moment it shall be my supreme object 'to know God, understand his way, and find grace in his sight.'"

Without relaxation of fidelity in family duty, she set her whole heart upon knowing and walking with God. When about her daily cares, she would have her Bible open upon a shelf, so that as she passed around she could stop a moment and read a passage, and then make it the subject of meditation and prayer. With the same diligence she read the most spiritual works that she could obtain, the Oberlin Evangelist especially. In prayer her importunity would admit of no denial.

In a short time the baptism came, and visions of God filled her whole being. She beheld "with open face the glory of the Lord," and truly her "fellowship was with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." As a consequence, her character became mildly and gloriously radiant through that whole community. Even infidels, and there were numbers of them in the place, confessed that there was Christian character in its genuineness and perfection of beauty.

In the revival of religion which followed, none had such power with the people as she. The sisters of the church came together, and did up her fall and winter sewing, that she might visit from house to house. All the cavils of infidels, Universalists, and worldlings were silenced under the power of her appeals and the divine radiance of her character.

Her pastor, who was a man of superior education, talents, and piety, said to us, that whenever he came into the presence of that woman, he felt that he, and not she, was the learner. At the same time he never saw an individual more humble and teachable than she was. In everything which pertains to "the life of God in the soul of man," he was conscious that her vision and experience far transcended his.

Our object in giving the above facts and illustrations.

Our object in giving the above facts and illustrations has been one and the same, to wit: to impress this conviction, that all who receive this divine baptism — and without it none can fulfil their life-mission, or be duly prepared for the kingdom of light — all who receive this baptism, we say, do so in consequence of a previous compliance with the conditions on which God has promised the blessing.

Speaking of this very gift, God says that "he will yet for this be inquired of by believers, to do it for them." If we do not thus inquire, and "search for God with all the heart and with all the soul," we shall never find him, or receive from him "the gift of the Holy Ghost." "If the vision tarry," and we do not "wait for it," it will never come to us.

If Christ with the Father comes to us, manifests himself to us, and makes his abode with us, it will be because we keep his word, prepare his way before him in our hearts, and wait and watch for his coming as "those who watch for the morning." If our "bodies become the temples of the Holy Ghost, if God shall "dwell in us and walk in us," and care for and bless us as his "sons and daughters," it will be because his indwelling presence has with us a priceless value, and is sought as the soul's supreme portion.

Some are strangers to this baptism, because they never seek it at all. Others seek, but not "with all the heart and with all the soul." Others begin right, run well for a time, and then relinquish the pursuit. Others, still, dedicate themselves fully to Christ, as they suppose, pray for the Spirit, and then wait to experience the effect. "If the vision then tarries," they become impatient, unbelieving, despondent, and give over further seeking and effort.

This is a very common and fatal error. We are to wait in earnest seeking and prayer, until the promised baptism descends upon us. Look not backwards, but forward, until you "behold with open face the glory of the Lord." "In due time you will reap, if you faint not."
DISCOURSE VII.

MISCELLANEOUS SUGGESTIONS IN REGARD TO THIS DOCTRINE.

Eph. iv. 28—"And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

We now draw our discussion of this vital doctrine of Scripture to a close. There are certain topics of a general nature which will occupy attention in the present discourse.

RECAPITULATION OF THE ARGUMENT.

No careful reader of the Scriptures at the present time confounds the gift or promise of the Spirit with any miraculous endowments. It is undeniable that these endowments had for ages been in the world, while the "Holy Ghost was not given" until after "Jesus was glorified." We are also positively taught, as we have seen, that "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit" were never accompanied, except in a few instances, by any form of miraculous gifts. "The promise of the Spirit" is to all believers in common. Miraculous gifts may, or may not, be imparted to any, and never were imparted but to a few.

The only question in respect to which a difference of opinion does now obtain, pertains to the inquiry whether "the promise of the Spirit" is fulfilled after or in the act of conversion. How any person who has examined the argument, as presented, can doubt upon the subject, is a mystery to us.
Permit us to direct attention to a few considerations which will set the subject in a concise but distinct form before the mind.

1. The positive testimony of the Bible. How distinctly, for example, is conversion and the baptism of the Spirit distinguished in Tit. iii. 5: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." The gift of the Spirit does not imply conversion, but it does imply a renewal after conversion. In conversion we become new men and women. In the baptism of the Spirit we become new Christians. So all believers who receive this baptism are regarded by the Church and the world.

In John vii. 39, we are undeniably taught, that "the Holy Ghost was not given" until after "Jesus was glorified." Had no person ever been converted until after that event? Were none of the Apostles Christians or converted men prior to the Pentecost? What, then, is the meaning of such declarations of our Saviour as the following? — "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you;" "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world;" "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word;" "And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given them." These were undeniably converted men; yet none of them had at that time "received the Holy Ghost." "The Comforter had not come unto them."

Were none of "the more than five hundred brethren" who saw Christ after his resurrection, and none of "the one hundred and twenty disciples," "who continued with one accord in prayer and supplication with the women, and Mary, the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren" — were none of these Christians or converted persons until after the Pentecost? What must we think of a dogma that cannot be true unless none of these individuals were real disciples? If anything is or can be evident from the Bible, all these, with no known exceptions, were men and women of God.

Then we have the positive testimony of the Bible, that the gift of the Holy Ghost is not in, but after, conversion. What can be more specific than is Eph. i. 13, on this subject? "In whom ye also trusted, after ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise."

What is the meaning of the question, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" if all are sealed in, and not after, conversion? What was the meaning of the Apostles in praying for, and laying their hands upon acknowledged converts, that they might "receive the Holy Ghost," if that gift had already been conferred when they were converted? The sacred historian affirms absolutely that many individuals in Samaria were converted through the preaching of Philip, and that "upon none of these had the Holy Ghost fallen" until Peter and John subsequently visited them.

2. The doctrine here maintained, permit us to say, in the next place, is much more reasonable in itself than that to which it now stands opposed. In conversion, the attention of the sinner is directed almost exclusively to his sins, to the penalty incurred by sin, and to Christ, as a Saviour from sin. He knows nothing of the Christian life and calling, and his own special mission as a believer in Jesus.

With the former it is well that his attention should be mainly occupied for a season. Soon, however, he begins to be oppressed with a conscious want of "likeness to the divine image," and with utter insufficiency for the responsibilities of his new and divine mission. How wise in the great Head of the Church to hold in reserve, and to present to his faith by promise, a baptism which shall be conscious to him, a divine testimony of having received the mind that was in Christ, an earnest of his future inheritance, and an "enduement of power from on high" for his life mission.

Were this baptism given in conversion, and not "after we have believed," its nature and purpose could not be comprehended, and its most essential benefits would be lost. "As high as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are God's ways higher than our ways, and his thoughts than our thoughts."

3. The tendency of these two views, as realized in actual experience, presents us with another test by which we may very clearly discern which accords with "the law and the testimony." To the following statements we are quite sure there are no exceptions:

Those believers who regard "the promise of the Spirit" as realized in conversion, and consequently do not seek and obtain the "sealing and earnest of the Spirit" "after they have believed," invariably find their religious life portrayed in the seventh chapter of Romans; while all who do seek and obtain "the gift of the Spirit" after their conversion, read their inward life in "the glorious liberty of the sons of God," portrayed in the eighth chapter of the same epistle, and in other parts of the Bible. We never in our life met or read of an exception to these statements.

Remember, reader, that when Christ uttered these words: "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water,"—that "this he spake of the Spirit, which they that believe [had not, but] should receive, because the Holy Ghost was not yet given." You can never have that promise fulfilled in your experience until you have first believed, and have afterwards been "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise."

This doctrine of the fulfilment of the promise of the Spirit in conversion, and not "after we have believed," should be regarded by us as a most dangerous and hurtful error. It is an impenetrable cloud drawn between the Church and "the glory which was to follow the sufferings of Christ." The disciples, when in a deep sleep, might as readily have beheld Christ transfigured on the Mount, as can an individual, standing behind this error, "behold with open face the glory of the Lord, and be changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

CAUTIONS TO THOSE WHO HAVE NOT YET RECEIVED, BUT ARE SEEKING THIS BAPTISM.

Individuals who set their hearts upon obtaining this anointing not unfrequently find themselves perplexed with certain difficulties and temptations, which beset their inquiries and prayers—perplexities arising from their inward experiences, and from doubts brought to their minds from without. Permit us to drop certain cautions to individuals who are in this state.

1. Avoid, let us say in the first place, all attempts to form conceptions of the manner in which this baptism will come upon you, or of your special experiences under its power. Christ told his disciples that they should "receive power when "the Holy Ghost should come upon them," and to "tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high." Of the manner in which the Spirit should be given, of the special forms of their inward experiences and outward lives after they should be "filled with the Holy Ghost," he left them in blank ignorance.

Had they, instead of spending their time in preparing their hearts, dedicating their lives, and waiting in prayer and supplication for the impending promise, perplexed their minds with the inquiries, how will the Spirit be given, and what will be the effects; we doubt whether the promise would ever have been realized in their experience. Let no such thoughts have place in your minds; but seek, and search, and watch, and pray, until “the Comforter is sent unto you.” Then, as you “read the precious scriptures with new eyes,” when you “behold with open face the glory of the Lord,” when faith in Christ fills you “with joy unspeakable, and full of glory,” and when “your fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ,” then, and not till then, will or can you have this knowledge.

2. Our second caution and admonition is this: Do not be perplexed or alarmed at your own inward experiences, your emotive states especially, while seeking this baptism. Individuals are often startled and perplexed by the disclosure to their consciousness of forms of internal corruption, “secret faults,” and evil tendencies and habits, the existence of which they had hardly suspected. At times, also, they may be appalled at their emotive insensibility, while clouds and thick darkness cover their entire spiritual horizon.

No such internal experiences should induce doubt or alarm. God is preparing his own way in the soul, and the glory of his manifestation will be proportioned to the thoroughness with which “the fountains of the great deep” of the soul have been previously broken up. The inward experience of the soul during the preparatory process is often like the appearance of a house at the time of the annual or semi-annual cleansing. All is confusion and disorder, and everything covered with dust and dirt. The prudent housewife is not alarmed or perplexed at the visibilities around her. She foresees universal order and purity as the final result, and knows that all things are tending to that desired consummation.

For the same reason, none of the experiences to which we have referred should move the soul who is seeking “the renewal of the Holy Ghost.” Only let your heart be fixed. Put away sin as it appears, dedicate all to Christ, and seek, and watch, and pray, until God shall come and make “your bodies temples of the Holy Ghost.”

3. Our last caution is this: Do not be alarmed at the time occupied in this preparatory process. The apostles and their associates waited more than forty days for “the promise of the Father.” Do not wonder if you have to wait through even a longer period. God is purifying you, preparing you, and trying you, to see whether you will or will not “seek him with all your heart, and with all your soul,” and that with all “patience and perseverance.” He will fulfil his promise in you, if you do not “become weary and faint in your minds” while seeking him.

POSITIVE COUNSELS AND ADMONITIONS TO ALL WHO ARE SEEKING THIS DIVINE ANOINTING.

We are now fully prepared to consider certain positive counsels and admonitions to all who are seeking this blessing. Among these, we would direct special attention to the following:

1. Settle fully, definitely, and finally, in your own minds, “whether there be any Holy Ghost,” any special baptism, “sealing and earnest of the Spirit,” any special “enduement of power from on high,” any “renewing of the Holy Ghost,” to be expected and sought by believers, and assured to them by divine promise, after “they have believed in Christ.” If God has given no such promise, it is presumption and vain in us to plead it at the throne of grace.

If God has given such a promise, and we are not fully assured of the fact, we shall seek for the blessing in a hesitating, doubting, and double-minded state, which will prevent our “receiving anything of the Lord.” First of all, then, “be fully persuaded in your own minds” whether God has, in fact and form, given such a promise. When you find that he has done so, and you will thus find, if you carefully and prayerfully “search the Scriptures whether these things are so,” then place yourselves before the promise, as an immutable truth of God.

2. While you, in fixed purpose of heart, separate yourselves from all sin, and unreservedly dedicate yourselves to Christ, never, for a moment, after that entertain a doubt of your acceptance with God, or of your title to all the privileges of the sons of God, until you are conscious of taking that consecration back. Our faith in the promise, and of our interest in it, will be weak and unsteady, while we doubt of our sonship. God affirms absolutely, that when we thus give up sin, and accept of Christ, we are, and shall be, “accepted in the beloved.”

When you are conscious of thus giving up your sins, and dedicating yourselves to Christ, hold yourselves immutably as children of God, and as having a direct and personal interest in all the promises. Never suffer your mind to doubt or waver on this question.

3. From that moment, contemplate your title to “the promise of the Spirit” as absolute, and that by virtue of your faith in Christ and sonship with God. “The promise is to you.” Hold it up before your own heart, and before the throne of grace, as such. Never permit your assurance here to waver for a moment; you are in covenant relations with Christ, and Christ is bound to you, by covenant, to “send to you the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost.”

4. Finally, while you thus place yourselves, as sinners “saved by grace,” within the circle of “the everlasting covenant,” continue to search and enquire, and wait and pray, and pray and wait, until “the Holy Ghost shall fall upon you.”
Continuing thus "in prayer and supplication," "God will do exceeding abundantly, above all that you ask or think." You "will be filled with the Spirit," and God will become "the everlasting light of your souls." Only be steadfast in faith, enduring in patience, and persevering and instant in prayer, and ere long "your light will go forth as brightness, and your salvation as a lamp that burneth."

THE DISCIPLINE OF THE SPIRIT.

Individuals who receive "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit" sometimes find their inward experience not to accord in certain important respects, with their prior anticipations. They fail to keep in mind, that God is "leading them in a way which they know not," and that the Spirit cannot do for them all that they need, unless he leads them through many and diverse forms of external and internal experience. The present is preparatory to an endless future. That this preparation may be fully consummated, the Christian virtues, in all their endlessly diversified forms, must be fully developed and perfected.

Each virtue takes form only under specially adapted circumstances and influences. That character may be "perfect and entire, wanting nothing," "patience must have her perfect work." Patience is the outgrowth of endurance under the pressure of heavy responsibilities, "fiery trials," and "great tribulations." It would not be wisdom or love on the part of the Spirit to free us from those "trials of faith" requisite to our perfection in the highest forms of Christian virtue.

"Everlasting consolations and good hope through grace can come to the soul but when it is burdened with some great sorrow. The Spirit will not spare us the latter, when we must be led through it to reach the former. Victory, "through the blood of the Lamb and the word of his testimony," implieprior conflict with temptation. To prepare us for "a crown of glory which fadeth not away," that to eternity we may stand revealed as having been "more than conquerors through Him that loved us," he will constrain us to "fight the good fight of faith," and to "stand in the evil day." In short, we are to expect, under the teachings and discipline of the Spirit, just those forms of external and internal trial requisite to the development and perfecting in us of all forms of Christian virtue.

The believer, also, is not only being fitted for immortality, under the leadings of the Spirit, but is to be employed in this world for special missions for the edification of the Church and the good of mankind, and is constantly being fitted for the exigencies of his divine calling. No individual can be prepared for such a work without being led through many and diverse forms of experience, both joyful and afflictive.

Paul had great perplexity and trouble through "the thorn in the flesh." That trouble, however, resulted not only in immortal benefits to him personally, but in infinite good to the Church and the world. By means of the discipline through which he then passed, he was fitted for a higher sphere of influence and usefulness than was otherwise possible to him. By means of the divine consolation which he received in all his tribulations, he was rendered "able to comfort them who were in any trouble, by means of the comfort wherewith he was comforted of God."

Every trial of faith, successfully endured, not only increases and consolidates virtue, but redoubles power for every good word or work. Now the Spirit is disciplining all who have been "endued with power from on high" for higher and higher and for special forms of influence and usefulness, and will lead them through every phase of experience requisite to these high ends.
We need to keep all these facts in mind. Otherwise we may not only fail to walk in, but may quench, the Spirit, and thus put out the light of our souls. When we open our hearts to receive the Spirit, we give ourselves wholly up to him, to be moulded, guided, and disciplined by him, not according to our ideas, but in absolute accordance with his infallible knowledge of our diverse necessities, and the equally diverse exigencies of our sacred calling.

But while our experiences under the guidance of the Spirit may, and will be, in the respects referred to, endlessly diversified, in certain other respects equally fundamental they will be fixed and permanent. In every "trial of faith," "patience will have her perfect work," because "as our day is so shall our strength be." In every conflict with the world, the flesh, and the powers of darkness, we shall be "more than conquerors." In every furnace of affliction we shall "learn obedience from the things which we suffer." When "troubled on every side," we shall "not be distressed; when "perplexed," we shall "not be in despair;" when "persecuted," we shall "not be forsaken;" when "cast down," we shall "not be destroyed;" when "weak, we shall be strong;" and even when "bearing about in our bodies the dying of the Lord Jesus," "the life also of Jesus will be made manifest in our bodies."

Nor will the light of God ever go out in our hearts. Our peace in Him, our conscious sonship with God, our acquiescence in his will, our deep content under every allotment of providence, our quietness and assurance, our "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," and our "everlasting consolations and good hope through grace," will never be interrupted. We shall "serve God without fear, in righteousness and holiness before him, all the days of our lives."

Nor will our emotive experiences be without their raptures.
In seasons, not few, nor far between, there will be "the shoutings of a king" in the centre of our hearts. "Visions will come and go." This side of the celestial city, "the glory of God will shine" in our hearts, and "the Lamb be the light thereof." "Our joy will be full." Remember, reader, "all things are possible to him that believeth." "Have faith in God," and "you shall be established."

TEMPTATIONS AND ERRORS INCIDENT TO THIS HIGHER LIFE.

Every state of man, the Christian, as well as the worldly life, has its peculiar and special inward temptations, and its peculiar and special liabilities to attack from worldly and satanic influences from without. Every advance in the divine life, from the nature and circumstances of the case, subjects the mind to forms of temptation and trial not incident to the same life in its lower developments. When the mind receives "the sealing and earnest of the Spirit," it has new and higher power than ever before, for every form and exigency of the Christian life and warfare; but is subject, as before, to peculiar and special forms of trial and temptation.

To be prepared to meet such trials and temptations, we need to understand our state and relations when we have received the Holy Ghost. In this state, for example, we are not free from all liability to sin; nor are we released from the necessity of watchfulness and prayer against temptation to sin. We may quench and "grieve the Holy Spirit, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption." All warnings and admonitions of the New Testament indicate the truth of these statements.

Nor are we free from liability to error on subjects not essential to the purity and perfection of the Christian life. Paul and Barnabas were both "good men, full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost." Yet they differed in judgment in respect to Mark, and separated in their mission on account of that difference. Both were honest, and Paul was wrong, and afterwards in his epistles did full justice to Mark. When on his last journey to Jerusalem, he met with disciples who admonished him, "through the Spirit," that "he should not go to Jerusalem." Yet he went, "bound in the Spirit, to Jerusalem." Nor did they, in what they said, nor he, in what he did, grieve or quench the Holy Spirit. On such subjects, the Spirit does not impart infallible guidance. On a very few questions in Moral Philosophy and Theology, Brother Finney and myself have arrived at opposite conclusions. Yet each has the same assurance as before, that the other is "full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost," and never were our mutual love and esteem stronger than now. We differ just where minds under the influence of the purest integrity, and the highest form of divine illumination, are liable to differ.

We may be "full of the Holy Ghost," and pressed beyond measure to utter the truths which are burning within, "as a fire shut up in our bones," and yet have need of circumspection, and be liable to error in regard to the times and seasons when we shall prophesy. To this liability the Apostle refers, when he gives directions how those who are under divine illumination must conduct in the Church assemblies, affirming that "the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets;" that "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace;" and that "all things must be done decently, and in order." Nor does the gift of the Spirit supersede the necessity of education and careful study. Timothy had received this gift. Yet Paul exhorts even him to "give attendance to reading," to "meditate upon these things," and to "study, to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." What, then, are some of the errors and temptations incident to this higher life? They are evidently, among others, the following:

1. Temptation to Spiritual Pride.

Every believer who receives the gift of the Spirit becomes a new Christian, renewed in the essential elements of the inner and outer life, and has a form of life which will attract the attention of the Church and world. "His righteousness will go forth as brightness, and his salvation as a lamp that burneth." Hence the danger of making self the object of thought and conversation, and of thinking and speaking of self in the spirit of self-glorification. It is proper, and a duty, to tell others of what the Lord has done for us, provided the supreme motive is, not to glorify self, but to magnify the grace, and love, and saving power of Christ. When the mind begins to revolve about self as its centre, it ceases, to the same extent, to revolve about Christ; and when it glories in self, it ceases to glory in the cross of Christ, and will soon be the object of divine reprobation.

2. Spiritual Presumption.

When the power of the Spirit comes upon us, we walk forth in "the liberty of the sons of God," and have a sovereign control over all our propensities, and all forms of temptation. In such liberty, we are liable to forget "wherein our great strength lieth," to relax in our watchfulness and prayer, and thus our hearts are exposed to "the fiery darts of the evil one." When in this liberty, we must ever keep in mind that "we stand by faith," and must "not be high-minded, but fear." We must gird ourselves with the whole panoply of God, and "watch unto prayer," if we would "stand in the evil day."

3. Mistaking the true and proper sphere of divine teaching and illumination.

Where the Spirit is given, and we begin to "read the precious Scriptures with new eyes,” we may be tempted to undervalue all other forms of knowledge, and to neglect study, and all proper use and cultivation of our own powers. In the whole process of the spiritual life, we are “laborers together with God.” Divine teaching does not supersede study and research in us, any more than our own proper activity supersedes divine teaching.

We have known individuals who have attained to the highest forms of the Higher Life afterwards “make shipwreck of the faith,” by assuming that they were infallibly taught all forms of revealed truth, and then bitterly denouncing as unspiritual, worldly, sensual, and devilish, all who questioned any of their nudest absurdities. We have known individuals, once deeply spiritual, by imperiously placing themselves above all need of human teaching, under the claim that they were taught of God, manifest the most proud, boastful, fanatical, and hateful spirit and character of which we can conceive.

We have known ministers of bright promise, and who were once “full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost,” to become empty and void in their own hearts, and utterly powerless with the Church and world, and that because they relied upon divine teaching, to the neglect of study, inquiry, watching unto prayer, and the diligent use and cultivation of their own faculties. The best and safest state possible to us is to “receive the Spirit,” and “walk in the Spirit.” The worst and darkest state into which we can fall is to have the light of God kindled in our hearts, and then to quench it.

If you, readers, shall “receive the Spirit,” and “walk in the light, as God is in the light,” you will continuously “behold with open face the glory of the Lord, and be changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord;” you will, as “the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty," "stand perfect and complete in all the will of God;" every virtue, in its purest and divinest developments, will take form in your character — the virtues of faith, love, hope, charity, patience, meekness, gentleness, goodness, truth. "Giving all diligence," you will "add to your faith, virtue; to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity;" and after you have finished your work of fruitfulness, goodness, and duty, "an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." But if at any time you shall lack these things, it will be because you have become "blind, and cannot see afar off, and have forgotten that you were cleansed from your old sins." If you continue thus blind and forgetful, "God will have no pleasure in you," and Christ will "take your part out of the Book of Life."

4. Pride of character — pride which manifests itself in an unwillingness to confess error, or sin when actually committed, is another form of temptation, against which all who attain to this Higher Life should be, in a special form, on their guard. With the Spirit in our hearts, we need not sin, but we may sin. We may even "grieve" and "quench the Holy Spirit of God." Should we sin, there is but one way to escape the consequences, and recover what we have lost — "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Yet the reputation which we possess, and the profession we make, will present a strong temptation to cover, instead of confessing, our sins.

Let the strictest integrity always be manifested right here, and God, if we have sinned, will "restore to us the joy of his salvation, and uphold us by his free Spirit," and never "take the Holy Spirit from us." So, when we err in judgment — and the Spirit does not render us infallible, except in matters essential to “life and godliness”—let our meek humility always manifest itself in a prompt and ingenuous confession of the fact. We shall, in such a case, never fail to “serve God unto all pleasing.”

CONCLUSION.

We here, as far as the discussion and elucidation of doctrine are concerned, draw this treatise to a close. Other topics of fundamental importance connected with the whole subject will be presented hereafter. If the reader has derived as much benefit in the perusal of these discourses thus far, as the author has in their preparation, and from the great truth which they are designed to elucidate, he and yourself, no doubt, will have cause of mutual thanksgiving for an eternity to come. The eclipse of this great doctrine ever has been, and ever will be, to the Church, an eclipse of her faith on the one hand, and of her vision of “the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” on the other.

The unveiling of this doctrine to the vision and faith and heart of the Church will be to her “the brightness of her rising,” to which Gentiles and kings, and the ends of the earth, shall be drawn. If these discourses and other teachings, together with the life experience of the author, have done anything to forward the coming of that light, this will be his eternal joy. The movement of the sacramental host has been, hitherto, with glorious exceptions, very much that of a dead march, a funeral procession. Our favorite hymns have breathed notes of sorrow and sadness, rather than those of gladness and deep joy. We have made a virtue of speaking and singing of our groanings under the heavy yoke of sinful propensities, of “aching voids within”—voids induced by the remembrance of “peaceful hours” once enjoyed, but long since passed away, and sighings after "the blessedness we knew when first we saw the Lord." That dawning blessedness seems to present the highest idea of Christian joy of which the mass of believers have a conception.

For ourself, ever since that good hour when we "beheld with open face the glory of the Lord," we have had no form of experience answering at all to the woe-notes breathed through such hymns. "The days of our mourning are ended." So will yours be, reader, when through the illumination of the Spirit you shall comprehend, as you may, "what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory." Nor is the day distant, when Zion, too, "will cease her mourning." Yes, the time is near when "the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head; they shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away."

We all, reader, shall enter into that blessedness as soon as the way of the Lord is prepared in our hearts. If you "have not received the Holy Ghost since you believed," and have read this treatise without the conviction that such a blessing is yours by promise, then an impenetrable veil hangs between you and all the blessedness of the Higher Life. If the reading of this treatise has induced in your mind the conviction, that you may be "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise," and you go on your way, without making the attainment of this crowning blessing of the Christian life your fixed and immutable purpose, you will, for less than "one morsel of meat," part with your birthright to "the glorious liberty of the sons of God."

If, on the other hand, you have found that "these things are so," and from this moment onward shall watch and wait and pray, until Christ shall "send the promise of the Father upon you," then will you, also, "comprehend the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, and be filled with all the fulness of God."
DISCOURSE VIII.

THE FOUNTAIN OPENED FOR SIN AND FOR UNCLEANNESS, OR THE CLEANSING POWER OF THE SPIRIT.

Zech. xiii. 1—"In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness."

Titus iii. 5—"Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost."

THE FIGURE EXPLAINED.

In Palestine and surrounding countries, the people, in ages past, were in great peril from a want of water—a want occasioned by either of two circumstances—drought, or the besieging of cities, and the cutting off of the usual supply of said element by encircling foes. Hence it was that the greatest pains were then taken by the inhabitants of cities exposed to such evils, to provide against them.

The method quite commonly adopted was to have dug out in the solid rock, beneath the surface on which such cities were built, vast reservoirs, which, in periods of rain, were filled with water and then sealed up, so as to be preserved pure until times of extremity should come. Then they were opened to quench thirst, and for external cleansing.

In searching amid the ruins of such cities, vast rows of such fountains or reservoirs are found. Some of these fountains are from one to three hundred feet deep, and as many in diameter. When a city was well furnished with such sealed fountains, they would be to all the inhabitants a source of great blessedness, because there would be seen in them abundant security against evils which were certain to impend at some time.

When the ordinary supply of this one universal necessity, water, was cut off for either of the reasons assigned, then all hearts would be turned with intense desire to the sealed fountains within the city, and the opening of the same would be the object of one common, all-pervading prayer to the public authorities to whose control said fountains were subject. While the keeping of those fountains closed at such periods would be the subject of general sorrow and regret, the opening of the same would be as the first note of the trump of jubilee to the people. In the event, conscious deliverance from two forms of death would be experienced — thirst within; and uncleanness, breeding pestilence, without.

Sometimes, when the fountains were opened, it would be found, to the amazement and horror of the expectant multitude, that through some fissures in the rocks the waters had escaped, and the fountains were dry within. These were the "broken cisterns," or fountains "that could hold no water." Hence it is that these fountains afford some of the most beautiful and impressive figures found in the Scriptures. When, for example, a person was to an individual a source and cause of great serenity, peace, and consolation, and at the same time the object of most endeared affection, the former would be said to be to the latter "a fountain sealed;" "a fountain sealed is my beloved unto me."

When individuals were subject, from any cause, to very great joy and triumph, or to great deliverances from impending death or crushing calamities, the cause of such joy and deliverance was compared to a fountain opened during the straitsofdrought,orofsiege. "Thouwiltopenuntohimthefountainsoflife."

As,inthe land of oppressiveheat, water, cool and fresh, welling up from the heart of the earth, was a general and over-shadowing want, and as the water thence obtained was, in itself, more refreshing than the rain-water drawn from the hewn rockfountains, invaluableasthe latterwere in times of extremity, when any object was to the mind the source and cause of thegreatest conceivable good, such object was compared to "afountainoflivingwater." On the other hand, when an object had been to the mind the source and cause of the highest hope, and had flagrantly wrecked and disappointed the same, such object was compared to a "broken cistern," a fountain opened in time of pressing extremity, and, to the horror of the expectant multitude, found empty.

When an individual was seen abandoning that which would be to him the source of the highest good, and pursuing with eager haste that which would be to him the cause of certain ruin and death, he was compared to one who "forsakes a fountain of living water, and hews out to himself a broken cistern, that can hold no water;" as if a man should refuse to taste of living water welling up from a perennial spring near him, and was seen laboriously striving to hew out for himself, in a visibly shelly and split rock, acistern, to catch the rain-water that might be made to run into it from the clouds above.

THE FIGURE APPLIED.

The way is now prepared to appreciate and apply the impressive figure in which the redemption of Christ is set before us in the text, together with the attitude of the heart of the Church in respect to that redemption, as the latter-day glory dawns on. The text, you will bear in mind, sets before us, in one and the same figure, the salvation of Christ, in what may be denominated its objective and subjective relations; that is, that salvation as it is in itself, and the state of the heart relatively to it, when Christ becomes "the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation to the believer."

In itself, whether men avail themselves of it or not, that salvation is "perfect and entire, wanting nothing." It contains and reveals provisions, full and complete, for all the moral and spiritual necessities of the soul. These provisions become efficacious to this end, however, when, and only when, the soul, conscious of its spiritual necessities, and supremely desirous to be wholly free from the condemnation and power of sin, sees in Christ a sovereign remedy for this death-plague of which it is death-struck, and comes to Him, and trusts in the provisions of His grace, as the "fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness."

Think of the inhabitants of an Eastern city in a time of extreme drouth, when the living fountains and wells with in and around are completely dried up; or in the straitness of a siege, when all water-courses are stopped up, or turned aside by the encircling foe. In this state, every one is perishing with a burning thirst within, and terror-stricken with the apprehension of the all-pervading presence of the death-plague from uncleanness without.

In the sealed fountains within the city, there, and there only, is a sovereign remedy for both these forms of impending death. One desire now pervades all minds in common and one prayer goes up to the ruling authorities. It is that these fountains may be opened to save the people from death within and death without. When those fountains are opened, what a universal rush is there to them, to obtain those waters of life! and with what eagerness are they applied to quench the burning thirst within, and for external purification!
Such is the state of the heart relatively to the provisions of grace in Christ, when they become efficacious for the pardon of sin, and for moral and spiritual purification. When the mind is divided by the attractions of things seen and temporal, and drawn by "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," away from God, and holiness, and heaven; when self-righteousness or unbelief closes the avenues of the heart to Christ and the Spirit of grace — then these provisions of grace in Christ for the salvation of the soul have no more efficacy for this end than if they had no existence at all. Christ is then to the soul, not as a fountain sealed, or a "fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," but as such a fountain closed.

When preached by inspired wisdom, Christ was "to the Jew a stumbling-block, and to the Greek, foolishness," because the "Jew sought for a sign, and the Greek for wisdom." That is, each held in supreme regard something incompatible with the outgoing of the heart in a supreme desire and choice toward Christ and his salvation. To every one that believeth, on the other hand, He was, and He is, "the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation," because that all such appreciate the infinite value of His grace, and seek it in him with all the heart and with all the soul.

Such is the salvation of Christ in its subjective and objective relations — its relations, we repeat, as it is in itself, and as it stands related to the heart when it really and truly becomes "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." When Christ is formed within the soul, the hope of glory, and when, with perfect quietness and assurance, it reposes in Him relatively to all future necessities, receiving everlasting consolation and good hope through His grace, then He is to such mind a "fountain sealed."

When one all-overshadowing desire possesses the mind, a desire to be wholly free from the condemnation and power of sin, and in a state of perfect purity, to be "filled with all the fulness of God;" and when in Christ it apprehends a present and perfect completeness in respect to all its desires and necessities — then Christ is to the soul "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." Then the soul realizes a present Christ addressed immediately, and fully, and specifically to every susceptibility and want of its immortal nature.

It is to a state of hunger and thirst for righteousness within the soul, to an inward panting and crying out of the whole inner being for God and the light of his countenance, that God's "exceeding great and precious promises" are addressed — the promises by which we become "partakers of the divine nature."

When all the susceptibilities of the soul are filled to the full and preoccupied with worldly attachments — attachments incompatible with the body's becoming the temple of the Holy Ghost; when worldly pride, and the spirit of self-righteousness and unbelief repel the approach of "the doctrine of Christ crucified for our redemption" — then the individual who "reasons upon righteousness, temperance, and a judgment to come," commends to the perishing sinner the cup of salvation, or tells to a cold-hearted professor, or a backslider in heart, of full redemption in Christ, "for sin and for uncleanness;" the speaker appears to the hearer as a mocker.

In our cities are various reservoirs, the contents of which are in reserve in case of fire. What if the authorities should open these, and invite the people to approach and quench their thirst, or for external purification. You would regard your rulers as demented. Your wells and your cisterns are filled with living or pure cloud water. You have no liking for the filthy water in the reservoirs referred to, and you would condemn as an insult an invitation to partake of them.
With almost or quite similar feelings do men regard the provisions of grace for their redemption. They esteem it quite meritorious, if, for once a week, when convenience serves, they attend upon the services of the sanctuary where these provisions are urged upon their acceptance; while the majority of men contemn even so much regard for sacred things as that.

But suppose God should send a drought, in which all moisture should be burnt out of the earth beneath, and the atmosphere above and around you. Your wells and cisterns and rivers are dried up, and your lakes, even, have become stagnant pools of death-poison. One want presses upon the people—water. Even the street water in your reservoirs would then be regarded as of priceless value.

But suppose that the public authorities should now open sealed fountains, filled with the pure liquid which the clouds and dews of heaven had rained down among you. How would you then regard the cry, “Ho! every one that thirsteth! come ye to the waters!” With similar feelings, do men regard the provisions of life in Christ, when they become conscious of their real condition as sinners; and it is, we repeat, to this poverty of spirit, this inward cry for the waters of life in Christ, that the invitations and promises of grace are addressed.

MEANING OF THE WORDS, “IN THAT DAY.”

We now advance to a very important inquiry, to wit: what are we to understand by the declaration, “In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the House of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness”? The text implies, that the time is coming when the Church is to attain to a new form of experience in Christ—a form of experience not common, and by no means general in any preceding age. “In that day there shall be a fountain opened." There is great meaning in these memorable words, "that day."

THE MEANING OF THE PROPHECY.

Let us inquire for the meaning of this prophecy. In Himself, and in the intrinsic fulness, completeness, and efficacy of the provisions of grace in Christ for all the wants of the soul, "Christ is the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." "Ye are complete in Him," will hold equally true of the Church, as far as Christ's power to save is concerned, at any one moment from the beginning to the end of time, as at any other. In consequence of a change of relations of the heart of the Church, however, He may be to her in degree and in fulness a Saviour such as he had never before been.

Such a change did occur in the experience of the disciples and primitive Christians at the Pentecost, and such a change does, in fact, occur in the experience of all believers when they "have received the Holy Ghost, after they have believed." Prior to this consummation, the vision of truth is dim, and the faith of the soul takes but a feeble hold of things unseen and eternal. As a consequence, the evidence of justification is obscure, and but small degrees of virtue proceed from Christ for moral and spiritual purification.

To do, or to endure, the soul has but very little strength; and with feeble, and oft-slipping footsteps, it treads its weary way in the paths of obedience and of life. In such a twilight of divine illumination, there is hope; but doubt oftener predominates than assurance. There are, also, joys and consolations; but not "peace as a river, and righteousness as the waves of the sea." There is rather more of doubt than of hope, of fear than of assurance, and "an aching void within the soul," rather than "joy unspeakable and full of glory."

But when the Holy Ghost falls upon the believer, and his soul is "filled with the Spirit," in that baptism of fire, of love, of light, and joy in God, there is a cloudless apprehension of truth, and every truth apprehended has a transforming power upon the heart and character. The face of God, the love of Christ, "the glory of God and of the Lamb," are unveiled to the open vision of the mind. "We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." Hope dispels doubt, and assurance banishes fear. Weakness gives place to strength, strength in God to do and to endure "all the good pleasure of His goodness, even the work of faith with power."

Instead of an aching void within, there is an infinite fulness—wells of "living water springing up into everlasting life." "The sun is no more our light by day, neither for brightness does the moon give light unto us; but God is unto us an everlasting light, and our God our glory. Our sun does no more go down, neither does our moon withdraw itself; but God is our everlasting light, and the days of our mourning are ended." In other words, there is in that day "a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness."

Now it is to this higher form of experience and attainment, this baptism of fire, of love, of power, and of spiritual purification, this outpouring of the Spirit promised to the Church in these latter days, that special reference is had in the text. You will observe, that it is to "the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem"—that is, for believers within, and not for sinners without, the circle of the Church, that the fountain here referred to is to be opened.

In the context we read, that the time of the fulfilment of this prophecy is to be a period of great moral and spiritual power and might in the Church: "He that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David, and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them." It is also to be a time of total moral and spiritual purification: "In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, Holiness unto the Lord." Prior to that event, the instances of such high attainments would be few and far between. Then, this is to become the common experience of the Church universal.

THIS NEW ERA THE THEME OF ALL THE PROPHETS.

This era of universal and total purification in the Church, this era of mighty power for the subjection of the world to the reign of Christ, is the theme of all the prophets, "when they testify before him of the sufferings of Christ, and of the glory that was to follow." The Revelator denominates its introduction, "the marriage of the Lamb." "Let us be glad, and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted to be clothed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." Referring to this era of divine illumination, God, through the prophet Isaiah, thus addresses the Church: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee, For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

WHAT HAS BEEN, AND IS TO BE.

What a contrast in the state of the Church, as it has been in ages past, as it now is, and as it is to be in that day of light, and glory, and blessedness! Now, whatever of divine glory she possesses, is hardly recognized by the world, so feebly does her light shine. Then, that glory is to become visible and all-impressive to all the world—so visible, and so impressive, that the race shall be drawn from the gross darkness with which they are encircled, to the light which is radiated from the face and the throne of God upon the Church; just as the people were drawn from the darkness of Egypt to the light which illumined the Land of Goshen. And then this era of illumination is never to be eclipsed. "The Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

In that day, according to the word of God through the prophet Jeremiah, God is to make a new covenant with His Church, and this is to be that covenant: "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts;" that is, sanctify them permanently and wholly. "Then," says God through the prophet Ezekiel, "will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you."

Of the degree of sanctification referred to in all these prophecies, we are distinctly informed in Jer. 1. 20: "In those days and at that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found." The prophet Joel refers to the same state of moral purification under the representation of a universal diffusion of the Holy Spirit upon the entire body of believers: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh" [upon the entire company of believers], "and your sons and daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy."

No careful reader of the Scriptures can fail to perceive that the fountain referred to in the text is to be opened within the Church, and to and for believers as such; that they all, having "washed their garments, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," may become, in Christ, "perfect and entire, wanting nothing." When the Church has thus attained, then will she become, in deed and in truth, a power in the world for its redemption. Ignorance and unbelief have hitherto kept the mass of believers straying in the wilderness with the flocks of Christ's foes. There their "follies have filled them with weeping."

In all ages, there have been a few who "have known and have believed the love of God to them," and thus knowing and believing, "their love has been made perfect." To the entire mass of believers, however, Christ is to become "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." In that day and at that time, the love of all in common will be made perfect.

WHEN IS CHRIST SUCH A FOUNTAIN TO BELIEVERS?

The most important inquiry suggested by the text here presents itself, to wit: By what means and under what circumstances will believers find in Christ this opened fountain? In other words, on what conditions does the grace of Christ, and the revelation of His glory and love, act upon the soul as an all-renovating power, emancipating it from "the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God"?

We all know on what conditions and under what circumstances Christ becomes a fountain opened to the sinner for the pardon of sin. Through the power of the Spirit in connection with external and internal influences, the creature is led to think on his ways. In thus thinking, he distinctly apprehends the fact of his sin and of his hopeless ruin in sin. One want now presses upon him, and centres in itself the supreme desire of his soul, to wit: pardon and acceptance with God. In this state he opens the Word of God, and reads of Christ as the sinner's friend, the sinner's hope; or he meets with a Christian friend who points him to "the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."

The Spirit now so presents Christ to the sin-burdened soul, that it apprehends in Him a present, immediate, and all-sufficient fulness for the all-overshadowing want with which it is burdened. Christ is now to that mind a fountain opened for sin; that is, for pardon, full and free. This convert now meets some other sinner, and tells him of Christ as a Saviour from condemnation and the fear of death. That sinner, convinced of his own sin, and ruin in sin, apprehends in Christ the needed redemption. Christ in the former becomes to the latter, as in the first instance, a fountain opened for sin. Whenever the soul apprehends in Christ a present fulness for any pressing necessity, then He is to that mind "a fountain opened" relatively to that want.

Now, when the soul has found in Christ "a fountain opened" for the forgiveness of sin, and when the joy and peace of its first love has passed away, it begins to feel the pressure of another want, more agonizing, if possible, than the first. It experiences an inward hunger and thirst for another blessing, more important even than pardon and the peace which the assurance of reconciliation with God can bring to the mind. It wants deliverance from "the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." It wants to be "pure in heart," that it may "see God." It wants to find in Christ, and in the Gospel of His grace, a power not only for pardon, but for moral and spiritual renovation.

It reads in the Scriptures of an "eye-salve" by which we may see, and of an "anointing" by which we "know the things which are freely given us of God.” It reads still further of Christ in the soul, “the hope of glory,” and of God dwelling in us and walking in us, and thus becoming “our everlasting light,” while the “days of our mourning are ended.” It reads of a baptism of the Spirit—a baptism by which and in which “we all, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory,” and are enabled to “comprehend the breath, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge,” and thus be “filled with all the fulness of God;” and of a baptism of love, in which “our love is made perfect.” In the midst of such revelations, and in the presence of such “exceeding great and precious promises,” one desire possesses the whole being of the soul,—the desire to possess the fulness thus revealed to its faith and hope; and in one inquiry its entire activities unite,—the inquiry, how and where can this fulness be attained?

To obtain an answer to this inquiry, the individual sets about a most diligent and prayerful research. He makes inquiry of the most spiritual believers in the ministry and out of it, and reads the memoirs of such men as Brainard and Payson. But all in vain. The Bible is a sealed book. In it he finds no present Christ addressed to the one present want of his whole being. “With strong crying and tears” he asks this single blessing of his Father in heaven—that he “may know Him, and understand His way, and find grace in His sight;” that he may possess and be filled with the righteousness after which he now so inexpressibly hungers and thirsts, and be “endued with the power from on high” for which he is now waiting with such intense expectancy.

While thus praying, thus waiting, thus searching, thus hoping, and thus trusting, there is, through the Spirit, a direct manifestation of the glory, of the love, grace, and fulness of Christ to his mind. In Christ he apprehends a present available and infinite fulness for every want of his immortal nature. The faith of the soul takes such an immutable hold of the strength and fulness of Christ, as to become, at once, "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," strong to do and strong to endure, strong to think, strong to feel, and strong to act for Christ. "All things have become new." Hope takes on the form of absolute assurance, and faith becomes almost a vision of things unseen and eternal. The veil is taken away from the Word of God. From all of its varied revelations in common there well out "rivers of living water." Every truth apprehended has a quickening, vitalizing, and renovating power upon the mind. In other words, the believer, by a way which he knows not, now finds in Christ, and in the gospel of his grace, "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness."

Now this individual, thus, without learning, teaching, or help from others, led to Christ, begins to speak to others of "the riches of the glory of this mystery," "which is Christ in you, the hope of glory." He speaks of Divine manifestations, of a "witness of the Spirit," of "a shedding abroad of the love of God in the heart," of a divine indwelling in the soul, of a "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," of "everlasting consolations and good hope through grace," and of "joy unspeakable and full of glory," to all of which they are comparative strangers. Yet he speaks in a manner which renders them sensible of the fact, that "what he hath seen and heard, that he testifies." The hearing of such an experience awakens in them a thirst for these waters of life, and Christ, in this one mind, becomes to them "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." God shines into one heart, and thus gives to all around "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."
So, also, when the membership of any one church becomes thus washed and purified, and made white "in the blood of the Lamb," Christ, in that church, becomes to all the churches and the world around "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." Thus streamlet intermingles with streamlet, till the waters of life, issuing from multitudes of sanctified hearts, become, in accordance with Ezekiel's vision, a mighty river that cannot "be passed over," and "the redeemed of the Lord return and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing flee away."

WHEN THIS SALVATION IS NEAR TO THE BELIEVER.

You may now understand clearly, reader, when it is that you may regard yourself as standing upon the very banks of the river of life, where God is about to become the everlasting light of your soul. It is when, and only when, you have such a quenchless thirst for God, for holiness, and for the indwelling of the presence of Christ in your heart, that nothing else will satisfy you, or divert your thoughts or desire from this one infinite good, and when your whole being is centred in the immutable purpose to attain it. When the disciples were "all, with one accord, in one place," the set time had come when they were to be "endued with power from on high." Are you, reader, in a similar state? "Then lift up your head: your redemption draweth nigh!" But if you have no such purpose or desire, remember that you have no lot or part in this matter.

WHEN CHRIST IS IN ONE INDIVIDUAL, THIS "FOUNTAIN OPENED" FOR OTHERS.

You also perceive when and how it is that Christ, in and through one individual, becomes to others "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness.” It is not in the holding or the public advocacy of a form of doctrine or system of faith which accords with the truth that any one occupies this divine relation. It is, on the other hand, the holding and the advocacy of “the truth as it is Jesus,” and an inward experience and an outward life, which accords with that truth. Were we an inquirer after the higher life in Christ, one of the last individuals that we would go to for light upon the subject, would be one who holds and advocates the doctrine of full redemption, and yet knows nothing of that truth as an all-vitalizing and renovating power. The most pestiferous influence that can exist in any church and community, goes out from that individual who zealously advocates that vital truth, and yet connects such advocacy with an unholy and corrupt life. The brightest jewel in Christ’s crown of glory in any church, on the other hand, is the individual who holds and advocates that truth, and who has “received the Holy Ghost since he has believed.” In that individual, God dwells and walks, and Christ abides as an all-purifying, quickening, and life-imparting presence; and through him, Christ and the provisions of his grace are perpetually revealed to the Church and the world around, as “a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness” — the divinest mission ever fulfilled by men or angels.

WHEN ONE CHURCH SUSTAINS TO OTHERS THIS DIVINE RELATION.

We also understand when it is that in any particular Church Christ is revealed to other churches, and the world around, as the fountain opened, of which we are speaking. That revelation is not made in and through the creed, or through the ministrations of the Church, however accordant both may be with the truth of God. There is no more unvitalizing power on earth than resides in a dead orthodoxy. To the sinner pressing the inquiry, "What must I do to be saved?" there is no spot where he is less likely to find the truth he seeks, than in that place where the truth, and nothing but the truth, is held, advocated, and preached, and where that truth is believed and neutralized by a dead faith in the ministry and membership. To the inquirer after the higher life, there is no spot to him more dark than he finds in a church, and under a ministry, where this soul-renovating and heart-vitalizing truth is held, advocated, and preached, but where it exists in no hearts as "a well of water, springing up into everlasting life." The very truth itself then becomes to such a mind a mass of darkness, and nothing else, being presented as having no efficacy for moral and spiritual renovation. To the revelation under consideration, in and through any given church, two conditions must be fulfilled. The truth as it is Jesus, in the first place, must be internally credited and openly advocated. It is "by the foolishness of preaching" that God saves those that believe. "Faith cometh by hearing." In the next place, the power, and renovating efficacy, and peace-giving and joy-imparting influence of the Gospel, must be fully manifested in the inward experience and visible example of that Church. Then, indeed, will that Church be "a light in the world," and "have power with God and with men." Then, in and through such Church, will Christ be to all encircling churches, and to the world around, "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." And when the churches of our God in general shall be similarly illuminated, "washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb," and all her membership are filled with the Spirit, and together "walk in the light of God," then will the Gentiles come to her light, and kings to the "brightness of her rising." In all the world, the spot where one such church is located will be the brightest, and, "to all who look for salvation in Israel," the most attractive, because that there the glory of Christ is revealed in this one divine relation.

WHAT WILL HEREAFTER CONSTITUTE THE GLORY OR THE SHAME OF METHODISM.

We may now clearly apprehend, we remark once more, what will hereafter constitute the glory or the shame of Methodism. The central article of her creed is the great central truth of the Gospel, to wit: full and free redemption in Jesus Christ. In the holding and advocacy of that truth, her ministry and membership glory before the world. In her early founders and favorite memoirs, Christ and the promises of his grace are fully and distinctly revealed to all her membership and to all the world as "a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." Now, if this denomination shall remain true to her heaven-descended mission, by continuing to hold and advocate this great truth, and by a living faith shall exemplify its all-purifying influence, both before the Church and the world, this will be "her wisdom and her understanding," in the judgment of all nations, who shall hear of this great salvation. But if she should renounce faith in this great truth, or cease to advocate it, and, above all, should hold it as a dead faith, instead of an all-vitalizing power, this would be her shame before God and the world. When in all the churches, in the sense explained, "there shall be a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," then is the millennium near, even at the door.
DISCOURSE IX.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE SPIRIT.

Phil. ii. 1 — "If any fellowship of the Spirit."
2 Cor. xiii. 14 — "The communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all."
1 John i. 3 — "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ."

PECULIARITY OF JOHN AS A WRITER.

The Apostle John is the only Old or New Testament writer whose productions have an avowed reference to his own personal observation and experience. Of Christ he speaks so far only as he hath himself "seen, and heard, and handled, of the Word of life." Of no forms of truth does he speak, but of those only which he has personally "known and believed." He speaks of no degree or form of spiritual attainment or experience, but such as have been fully realized in the interior of his own mind: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you."

THE RANGE OF HIS EXPERIENCE.

The range over which the experience of the Apostle conducts us is a very wide one, an experience which commences with that simple form of faith which results from "seeing, hearing, and handling" the visibilities of Christ, as "God manifest in the flesh," and terminating in that divine anointing, that baptism of the Spirit, in which "love is made perfect," "fear is cast out," "joy is full," and "the soul's fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."
OBJECT OF THE APOSTLE IN MAPPING OUT HIS OWN EXPERIENCE.

In mapping out before us his own experience as a believer in Christ, the Apostle had in view a fourfold end of infinite moment — that we may have, and "know that we have, eternal life," that our love, with his, "may be made perfect;" that with him we may "walk in the light, as God is in the light," our "fellowship being with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ;" and that, as a final consequence, "our joy may be full." This fulness of joy all flows out of the state previously named — the state towards which real Christian experience, in all its forms, is tending, and in which it finds its ultimate consummation — "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." In and by sin, man has lost this infinite good. The object of the whole plan of redemption is to recover fallen humanity to this one relation to the infinite and eternal mind; and the work of redemption is fully consummated when, and only when, God thus becomes the everlasting light of the soul. This conducts us to the special object of the present discourse, which is, to elucidate the great truth represented by the words, "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," together with the kindred topics which circle round this truth in the passage before us.

THE IDEA REPRESENTED BY THE TERM "FELLOWSHIP."

What then, we inquire in the first place, is the idea represented by the term "fellowship?" Evidently, a far higher idea is intended than mere companionship, the existence of two or more minds in the same locality, or the interchange of thought between such minds; or partnership, that is, co-operation for the promotion of common ends, and the participation of common interests, or indeed any form of mere external connection. All this, and far more, something infinitely higher, is reprepresented by this term. Two minds may be connected in the most endearing external relations, as husband and wife, for example; they may often interchange thoughts with each other; they may even co-operate together for common ends, and mutually partake of common interests. Yet they may never, in the true and proper sense of the term, have fellowship, the one with the other. While thus related, there may be principles of repellency between them—principles which may render each to the other the object of inward aversion.

Two minds, we will suppose, are brought together in the same locality, are associated in the pursuit of common ends, and become mutual participants of common interests. As they interchange thoughts, the one with the other, each finds in the other a character, spirit, and leading views and sentiments wholly genial to his own. In their intercommunication there is a consequent sympathetic blending of thought with thought, feeling with feeling, sentiment with sentiment, and purpose with purpose; an intercommunion, in which each becomes to the other, as it were, another self, each making the other the beloved depositary of his own mental treasures, and each becoming a full participant of the other’s joys and sorrows. This deep and sympathetic intercommunion, this blending of mind with mind, is represented by the term “fellowship.” In this relation, minds are said to “make their abode” the one with the other, each finding its happy dwelling-place in the heart of the other.

CONDITIONS OF FELLOWSHIP.

The conditions in which any two minds can enter into relationships of real fellowship, now become quite manifest. There must be, in the first place, in connection with a common medium of intercommunication, a unity of knowledge, views, feelings, and sentiments, in respect to some common objects of mutual interest and regard. We meet with an individual, and find that no medium of intercommunication between us exists. However genial to each other our characters and mental states may be, there can be, while this medium is wanting, no intercommunication or fellowship, no blending of mind with mind, between us. Suppose this medium to be established, and that, as we come to know each other, it is found, that we have no objects of common interest and regard, and no common sympathies on any subject. Real fellowship, in such a case, is absolutely impossible. If, on the other hand, the objects which one regards with supreme interest, the other regards with aversion, such minds will naturally repel each other, and no blending of heart with heart can occur. But if, on a mutual acquaintanceship, it is found that there is a union of views and sympathies in regard to leading objects of thought, and where each approves of the other's relations and character, their minds naturally blend in the most loving intercommunion and fellowship; and this is the idea represented by the term under consideration.

EXTENT AND LIMITS OF SUCH FELLOWSHIP.

We are now able to determine clearly the extent and limits within which such fellowship is possible. So far as minds have common thoughts, common sympathies and experiences, so far they can have intercommunion and fellowship, one with another. If the knowledge and experience of one extend into a sphere which the other has not entered or traversed, so far all fellowship is barred, however mutually genial their characters and experiences, in other respects, may be. In such cases, the fellowship of the latter may be constantly taking on new, and more endearing and happenifying forms, as the wider visions and experiences of the former open and expand more and more upon the latter's mind. In "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," the soul will be eternally advancing, deeper and deeper, into "the fulness of God," as God's thoughts, God's emotions, plans and purposes of love, shall expand more and more upon the mental vision.

EFFECTS OF FELLOWSHIP.

There is no form of blessedness, we remark in this connection, so full and complete as that which results from the intercommunion and fellowship of pure and kindred minds, in respect to objects of deep and happifying mutual interest. Such a state is a fundamental demand of our social nature. Such is the strength of this principle, that we can enjoy hardly any form of good, when totally isolated from other minds. Joy departs, and leaves us desolate and sad, when we have no kindred minds to sympathize with, and share our blessedness. Such intercommunion not only intensifies our joys, but has sovereign power to turn our deepest sorrows into the most perfect and abiding forms of gladness. Minds in fellowship become possessed, to the full extent of their capacities, each of all the blessedness that dwells in the heart of the other. "In fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," the finite mind will, to the fullest extent of its ever, — growing capacities, be filled with all the blessedness that dwells in the infinite and eternal Mind.

The most marked peculiarity, perhaps, of such fellowship, is the perpetual assimilation of character which thereby arises between kindred spirits. When two minds are in such endearing intercommunion, the virtues and excellences of each are perpetually taking form and embodiment in the character of the other. A mind of lower, in fellowship with one of a higher, order, is being perpetually raised to the conscious possession of the superior excellences of the latter. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise.” God, by bringing all sanctified spirits into fellowship with himself, will be eternally elevating them to higher and higher resemblances to his own infinite excellences, and to higher and higher fruitions of his own infinite blessedness. If we would, as required, be God-like in our character, we must seek and attain to that state in which “our fellowship shall be with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.”

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD POSSIBLE.

Here the question might arise, Is such intercommunion possible? Can the finite enter into fellowship with the infinite? “As the heavens are higher than the earth, are not God’s ways higher than our ways, and his thoughts than our thoughts?” How, then, can we enter into communion with God’s ways, and God’s thoughts? “With men, this is impossible. With God, all things are possible.” In the text, this very fellowship stands revealed as an accomplished fact: “And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.” With Moses, God “spake face to face, as a man speaketh with his friend.” For “three hundred years, Enoch walked with God.” In Christ, “God was manifest in the flesh,” and “dwelt among us.” God, who knows perfectly the relations between the finite and the infinite, affirms, that he does thus dwell with “the humble and contrite in spirit,” and that he “will dwell and walk” in such. “If a man love me,” says Christ, “he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.”

To consummate this fellowship, the Spirit is in the world, and is promised to all believers. He can and will, that we may possess and enjoy this fellowship, “strengthen us with might in the inner man,” and so reveal and manifest
BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

Christ and the Father unto us, that we shall enter into real and ecstatic communion with God’s thoughts, emotions, purposes, and love. In elevating the creature into this divine fellowship, God does not oppress him with the full weight of his own infinity. “No man can see the face of God, and live.” The Spirit knows how to bring, and he does bring, the soul into fellowship with those forms of divine manifestation which it can comprehend and commune with,—a fellowship which may become real in the experience of every believer, the child as well as the man.

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD. WHAT IT IS.

Let us now turn our attention directly to the wonderful form of speech before us: “And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.” We read of a strange form of love conferred upon believers—a form of love, by which “we are called the sons of God.” We read, also, of a brotherhood with Christ, of a co-heirship with him, and of our being “heirs of God.” Such forms of speech, however, represent merely the common privileges of all the saints, in all stages of their experience. The passage before us refers to a still higher and nearer relation to God—a relation to which the believer attains when, and only when, he has “received the Holy Ghost after he has believed;” when, by means of that divine baptism, he has been “cleansed from all unrighteousness,” has “been made perfect in love,” and “walks in the light, as God is in the light.” Then he comes into that relation of intercommunion with God—the relation properly represented by the term, “fellowship.”

You will observe that it is not said, that “our fellowship is with the Father, with the Son, and with the Holy Ghost, but “with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ.” It is not with the Spirit that the mind has direct intercommunion; but through the Spirit, with the Father and with Christ. The Spirit, when received, does not "speak of himself," but "takes of the things of Christ, and shows them unto us," and "shows us plainly of the Father." "Where the Spirit of the Lord is," "we behold with open face," not the Spirit, but "the glory of the Lord," "the love of Christ," and "the fulness of God." When we have "received the Holy Ghost after we have believed," we comprehend what the Saviour meant when he said, "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent;" what God means when he says, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them;" and what the apostle means when he says, "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." You have read, reader, of "the communion of the Holy Ghost." Here it is: "Christ in you, the hope of glory;" "we will come to him, and make our abode with him;" "walking with God;" "God dwelling in us, and we in him;" and "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

Let us see if we cannot form some apprehension, more or less distinct, of this peculiar state—the privileged state of all believers. It will be our aim to tell all we know about it; all, we mean, that can be told in a few sentences in a single discourse. The mission of the Spirit, as we have said, is to bring the soul into direct and immediate intercommunion and fellowship with God. To believe that God exists, to apprehend his attributes, and to be assured that we are the objects of his love and favor; but to apprehend him as afar off, dwelling alone in his infinity, is one thing. To be directly conscious of him as an immediate personal presence, encircling us with his own infinity and love, "showing us his glory," and opening upon our vision an immediate apprehension of his thoughts, emotions, and purposes of love and grace in respect to us, and of his deep sympathy with all our joys and sorrows, cares and interests; to be conscious, when we pray, that we are “speaking to God face to face, as a man speaketh with his friend,” and that his ear is bent tenderly towards us, in all our confessions, giving of thanks, and petitions; and that all things within and around us, are full of God, and that we have our dwelling-place in the very centre of the divine fulness—this, certainly, is a very different relation between us and God, from that above described; and all this is real in our experience, when “our fellowship is with the Father.” So, also, to know that Christ died for us, and that through him “we have redemption, the forgiveness of our sins;” but to apprehend him as away off, “at the right hand of God” in heaven, and never very nigh to us, and “formed within us, the hope of glory”—this one relation to Christ, the relation in which most believers find themselves, for the greater part of their lives. How different and opposite is that state, in which we are distinctly conscious of a present Christ addressed directly and immediately to every susceptibility and want of our immortal natures; in which we “behold, with open face, his glory, and are changed into the same image from glory to glory;” in which we “comprehend the breadth, and depth, and length, and height, and know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge;” in which Christ “comes to us, and manifests himself unto us,” reigns in us, as the sovereign of all our affections and activities, and communes with us as an elder brother, strengthens us in our weaknesses, succors us in our temptations, confirms our faith, perfects our love, and teaches us the divine lesson of deep content in every allotment of providence. In such a state our fellowship is, also, with his Son Jesus Christ. This is a very different state of thought, feeling, and activity from that realized in the first, and also in the too common developments of the Christian life, and this is having “fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.” This is “walking with God,” and “dwell in God,” and having God “walk in us, and dwell in us.” Here we realize what our Saviour meant, when he said: “I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one;” and “I will come in unto him, and sup with him, and he with me.”

EFFECTS OF THIS FELLOWSHIP.

In this divine intercommunion and fellowship, the mind is not free from temptation. In Christ, however, it realizes “the victory which overcometh the world.” Nor is the believer free from external affliction. But in the fire and in the flood “patience has her perfect work.” This end being consummated, there comes to the mind, at one time, a revelation of Christ, in the exercise of this one virtue, patient endurance and meek submission to the will of the Father. One desire now possesses the whole being — to endure as Christ endured, and with him, if need be, to be “made perfect through suffering.” Again there opens upon the mind a vision of the eternal future: “These light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.” Now the mind “glories in tribulation,” while “the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, who is given unto us.”

Nor, we add again, is the mind in this state wholly, and at all periods, free from real heart-sorrow. At times, if need be, it “may be in heaviness, through manifold temptations,” or “fiery trials.” God, for wise reasons, may now and then sound the depths of the soul with some great sorrow. In such a state, the mind, first of all, adjusts itself, fully and perfectly, to the divine will, losing self in the heart of God, and in sweet and unreserved acquiescence consenting to do, and to endure, and to suffer all that God wills. “Not as I will, but as thou wilt.” “The cup which my Father giveth me, shall I not drink it?” When “patience here has had her perfect work,” the Spirit at one time opens upon the mental and spiritual vision distinct and melting apprehensions of Christ, as a world sufferer, a sufferer in Gethsemane; when climbing Calvary’s mournful mountain, and upon the cross “bearing the sins of many, and making intercession for the transgressors.” Here the mind forgets and loses its own sorrow, in its sympathy and love for Christ, in his infinite sufferings and sorrows. To sorrow now, to “fill out the measure of Christ’s sufferings,” seems a privilege. At another time, in the depth of some great sorrow, there comes to the mind, a deep assurance and sense of God’s presence and love, and of the absolute security of all its interests, under the divine protection; and all this with a distinct and soul-melting consciousness of the deep and present sympathy of every person of the Godhead, with every form and degree of sorrow with which the heart is burdened. “Everlasting consolations and good hope through grace,” now fill and occupy the entire capacities of the soul, and “sorrow and sighing flee away.”

At times, the way in which the mind is being led seems dark and gloomy. Here, the Spirit brings sweetly home to the heart such a thought as this:

“Christ leads me through no darker rooms
Than he went through before.”

Such a thought dawns in with such sweet and mellow light upon the soul, that earth’s most shady places appear now as peaceful and hallowed precincts of heaven itself. How often have you dwelt in thought upon such words as these “Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are,

While on his breast I lean my head
And breathe my life out sweetly there.”
Yes, reader, and Jesus can make a living bed, a bed of thorns, too, feel equally soft and downy. Have you never, when weary with labor and care, when weighed down with the crushing burdens of vast duties, responsibilities, and perplexities, or when overshadowed with some great sorrow — have you never, under such circumstances, had such a form of experience as this? Jesus seemed to approach you, and to drop such words as these down into your heart: Child, you are weary, very weary, and sorrowful. Lean your head upon my bosom, and rest there. As you do lean your head upon the bosom of his love, his rest enters into your heart. This, you say, is the beginning of that "rest that remains for the people of God." If the earnest is so peaceful, what must heaven be — heaven, in which "the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto fountains of living waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

With a mind in fellowship with God, there are periods of triumph, when the fountains of the great deep of the soul are broken up, and when it "rejoices with joy unspeakable and full of glory." At other times, the whole mental being rests in perfect quietude and assurance, "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keeping the heart and mind by Christ Jesus." Then, in a state of "heaviness through manifold temptations," the soul appears "like patience on a monument smiling at grief." Again, under the baptism of "power from on high," it goes forth, "strong in God, and in the power of his might," strong to do and to endure; or upon its knees in prayer, and under the outpouring of "the Spirit of grace and of supplication," "as a prince it has power with God and with men." In every state alike, God is its fixed and changeless centre, God its dwelling-place, and God its everlasting light," while "the days of its mourning are ended." We do not think that we have overdrawn the experience of any soul whose “fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.”

FELLOWSHIP ONE WITH ANOTHER.

In making a due improvement of this subject, we would direct attention, in the first place, to an important declaration found in the context, to wit: “If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another.” Among worldly minds, there is very little real fellowship. Selfishness is incompatible with such relations, especially in their higher and more sympathetic forms. A selfish mind sees very little in its own image, when reflected from the heart of another, to approve or delight in, or in its own mental states with which to have fellowship — states such as pride, ambition, envy, covetousness, devotion to vanity, and the lusts of the flesh, when such states are reproduced in other minds. Hence, among such minds, there is very little that can properly be denominated friendship.

Among Christians, also, who have not “received the Holy Ghost since they believed,” “fellowship one with another” can obtain but in a very limited degree. In all such minds, there is so much intermingling of the bad with the good, and of darkness with the light; such obscure reflections of the divine image and glory, together with the beauties of holiness; and such meagre manifestations of the divine love; and at the same time thoughts of God and of things unseen and eternal have so seldom and unillumined a dwelling-place in the heart, and the mind, as a consequence, has so few deep emotions and experiences — that it is only occasionally, and that within a very limited sphere, that there can be that sympathetic blending of thought with thought, emotion with emotion, and heart with heart, that can properly be called fellowship. This is the exclusive reason why Christian fellowship has such a limited and feeble existence in our churches. There is among them "envying, strife, and divisions," because, for the most part, they "are carnal, and walk as men," in other words, are "mere babes in Christ." There is very little fellowship, because the basis for such intercommunion is wanting.

When a company of believers, however, "have received the Holy Ghost since they believed," and while each, under this all-renovating and all-purifying baptism, "walks in the light, as God is in the light," then, verily, they do "have fellowship one with another." The reason is obvious. While perfect love banishes discord, each manifests a character that all approve and delight in, each reflecting upon all others "the image and glory of Christ." Each, also, has a rich inward experience, into which the hearts of all the others naturally blend in sympathizing and ecstatic intercommunion. Brotherly character manifested, is the exclusive object of brotherly love. Where the former is wanting, the latter, but in forms of general good will, cannot exist.

OUR MORAL AND SPIRITUAL STATE, WHEN WE HAVE NOT DIVINE FELLOWSHIP.

What should we think of ourselves, reader, if "our fellowship is not with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ"? This we reply: Such must be the state of our hearts, that moral purity cannot approach them. "The pure in heart see God," and "with the pure in heart God dwells." If God does not dwell with you, there can be but one reason for this melancholy fact. Internal impurity shuts him out. "God never draws nigh to me when I pray to him," said a professing Christian to us, years ago. "As soon as I kneel in prayer, he seems to remove himself to an unapproachable distance from me." "Friend," we replied, "there must be reasons of infinite weight for such relations between you and your 'Father in heaven.' We exhort you, as you value your soul's eternity, to find out those reasons, and to put them away.” A similar admonition would we present to you, reader, if God is not consciously very nigh to you when you call upon him, if your fellowship is not “with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.”

THE TWO CLASSES OF BELIEVERS ADDRESSED IN THE FIRST EPISTLE OF JOHN.

To understand fully the epistle from which our last text was taken, we must recognize the two classes of believers to whom the Apostle, in fact, though not in form, refers, to wit: those who had, and those who had not, received “the unction of the Spirit;” those who had, and those who had not, been “made perfect in love;” and, consequently, those who did, and those who did not, have “fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.” Of the one class he speaks as having a full knowledge, by means of their anointing, of the fulness of joy to which he refers, and as having “no need” that “any one should teach them” upon the subject. His object in respect to the other class was, to draw them into the light of God in which he was walking: “That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye may have fellowship with us;” “These things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.” This last is our exclusive object relative to you, reader, if you have not yet received “the anointing.”

THE EXTENT AND LIMITS OF PRACTICABLE CHRISTIAN ATTAINMENT IN THIS LIFE.

We may now understand the extent and limits of practicable Christian attainment in this life. They extend from the beginning, the childhood of the Christian life in Christ, to a full fellowship with the Apostle, in the perfect love, freedom from fear and heart-condemnation, and in that fulness of joy, which he possessed, when "walking in the light as God is in the light," and when his "fellowship was with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." Nothing but unbelief in us can prevent our advancing onward and upward into the cloudless sunlight before us. The Apostle has not only revealed to us the goal to which we may attain, but has made us know the way: "We have known and believed the love that God hath to us" — the love of God in "giving his Son to die for us," and also in giving "the anointing" by which we know, too, "the things that are freely given us of God;" "Herein is our love made perfect." To receive, with simple trust and assurance, God's testimony to his own love to us, and to seek, "with all the heart, and with all the soul," "the unction of the Spirit," through whose illuminations and sanctifying power we may "walk in the light, as God is in the light" — this is the way to that Beulah of perfect love and fulness of joy, where "God is our everlasting light, and the days of our mourning are ended." Reader, the way is before us. Let us walk in it.
DISCOURSE X.

THE CONSOLATION OF THE SPIRIT, OR THE USES OF AFFLICTIVE PROVIDENCES.

Isa. xlvi. 19—"I have refined thee, but not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

THE FIGURE EXPLAINED.

This one principle universally obtains in respect to the refinement of metals, that the severity of the process requisite to their purification is proportionate to their preciousness. No metal can be brought to a state of purity but by a trial of fire. Those of the least value can be melted and purified by comparatively small degrees of heat. Those of the highest value can be refined but by being placed in the central fires of the glowing furnace when heated to the greatest intensity. Silver may be placed in the furnace, but the heat of the common crucible is all that is requisite for its highest purification. The meaning of the text, then, is obvious. God says to the sanctified believer, this class being especially here addressed: "I have refined thee, but not with silver." The virtues which I have purposed to develop in you being of all others the most precious, and of all objects of the supremest value in my estimation, I have subjected you to the action of the central fires of the furnace of affliction — the furnace in which the brightest virtues of immortality are developed, purified, and perfected. Because I loved you and saw in you an adaptation to become possessed of the brightest and the best virtues that adorn my kingdom, I placed you, for your purification and perfection, in those central fires; and because you there became the pure, and true, and beauteous thing I desired, I chose you, when you were in that furnace, as my own peculiar treasure, and you shall "be mine in that day when I make up my jewels." There are some virtues which bloom up to maturity in circumstances of almost continued prosperity, and freedom from the pressure of strong temptation. Others, of a nobler birth, are matured and consolidated under the weight of great trusts and responsibilities. But those which take on the brightest possible forms of beauty and perfection are those which are refined and purified amid the glowing and melting heat of the furnace of affliction.

REAL EXCELLENCE THE RESULT OF ENDURANCE.

It is an immutable principle of the divine government, that all forms of real excellence shall be the result of endurance — endurance which severely tests and taxes the human faculties. A mind stands before you, a mind "with Atlanteon shoulders, fit to bear the weight of mightiest monarchies." How did that mind attain to such pre-eminence of power? It early began to think, to think strongly, and by long habituation to the endurance of the weight of great thoughts, it towered up to its present overshadowing greatness. Endurance which brings such visible rewards men subject themselves to from choice. They delight to continue in it, because their nature is adapted to it, on the one hand, and on account of the "great recompense of reward" resulting from it, on the other. The opposite in all respects obtains in regard to afflictive providences. They are objects of fear, and not of desire. They always come unsought, and descend upon the mind suddenly, as crushing avalanches from the heights above us. And what is still more peculiar in respect to them is the fact that they are in themselves grievous burdens, with no visible or apparent benefits attending or issuing from them. Yet no events appear to come so directly and immediately from God as these. They seem to drop down upon us immediately from his hand, crushing our fondly cherished hopes, smiting our persons till all our sensibilities quiver with excruciating agony, smiting also those most dear to us, and causing our hearts to bleed for sufferings we cannot relieve, and then taking from us even "the desire of our eyes with a stroke." These providences also most frequently, perhaps, strike that department of our nature most susceptible to suffering. How often do we hear individuals exclaim, "Anything but this! Why did God smite me in this one spot?" Yet, judging from appearance, God thus smites for no good reasons. What apparent good, for example, is there in that terrible bereavement by which the orphan is left, homeless and penniless, to the charity of this cold world? But, reader, it is amid the central fires of just such furnaces as these that the divinest virtues known in the universe of God are refined and perfected; and those who are "made perfect through suffering" are the individuals who stand nearest the eternal throne in the kingdom of light.

This brings us to the subject of the present discourse, to wit: the divine uses of afflictive providences, acting, as they do, as disciplinary fires for the purification and perfection of the saints of God.

AFFLICTIONS, WHEN BENEFICIAL.

Before we proceed to a direct consideration of this subject, there is one thought to which very special attention is invited. Afflictive providences are in themselves, as above seen, crushing evils coming upon us for no visible reasons, and apparently tending to no good results. To appearance, they are death-strokes falling upon our sensitive natures. Whether they shall issue in life or death to us, depends wholly upon the moral state in which they are received and endured. If, while we are in the crucible or in the furnace, "patience has her perfect work," we then become "perfect and entire, wanting nothing." If, in the same circumstances, the mind loses its spiritual balance, becomes chafed and fretted, restless and despondent; above all, if it loses hope and faith in God, then it loses its reward, and Satan takes its crown. In the history of the prophet Ezekiel we have a conspicuous example of a trial of faith successfully endured. God, through the prophet, desired to foreshadow to the nation the calamities which were impending — calamities so terrible, that even domestic bereavements, under their influence, would become matters of utter indifference; and God took this strange means to secure this result — to take suddenly from the prophet the wife of his youth, requiring him at the same time to move among the people as if no affliction had befallen him:

"Also the word of the Lord came to me, saying, Son of man, behold I take away from thee the desire of thy eyes with a stroke: yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down. Forbear to cry, make no mourning for the dead, bind the tire of thy head upon thee, and put on thy shoes upon thy feet, and cover not thy lips, and eat not the bread of men. So I spoke to the people in the morning: and at evening my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded."

In every afflictive providence that befalls us, we are always distinctly addressed by duty in some specific form — duty in a form more specific than in almost any other circumstances. Now it is when we do the specific thing then and there required of us, that we gain the virtues that ensure to us the crown of life. When racked with torturing pain, or smitten with domestic bereavement, we always hear in the depth of the soul the voice of God saying to us, "I have done this.
Trust my will now, fully and distinctly; consent to suffer and to endure, till I choose to remove the pain, or cease to be-reave;" and we must "do as we are commanded." If loss of temporal good befalls, or temporal perplexities encircle us; if disappointments drop down upon us, or "hope deferred makes the heart sick" — then God again speaks within, saying to us, "Let your spirit now lie down and be still. Let no sentiment of discontent have place in your heart." Here, also, we must "do as we are commanded." When revilings, and falsehoods, and persecutions for righteousness' sake, encircle and descend upon us, the same voice within calls us from strife to prayer, from cursing to blessing, and from wrath to love. When reviled, we must bless; when defamed, we must entreat; and when persecuted, we must endure it, doing and enduring as we are commanded: "Hold fast till I come, and I will give thee a crown of life." Such is the command of the great Captain of our salvation. Holding fast, as required, we ensure the crown of life. Failing in this, we miss that crown.

AFFLICTIONS — THEIR SPECIFIC USES.

We will now suppose that a believer has thus endured.
What will be the divine uses of such providences in his experience? This is the question to which a specific answer will now be attempted.

Afflictions render things unseen and eternal real to the mind.

One of the most important of all these uses is the direct and immediate contact into which the mind is then brought with God, duty, redemption, and immortality. Continued prosperity, abounding wealth, and freedom from pain and afflictive bereavements too often induce, not only a forgetfulness of God and of things unseen and eternal, but a proud denial of our accountability and dependence. When afflictive providences descend, on the other hand, thought is suddenly arrested and fixed upon these objects of infinite concern. Under no other circumstances do they come so near, and give the mind such impressive opportunities and motives to adjust itself fully and rightly in respect to them. Philip of Macedon desired never to forget, in the midst of his superabounding prosperity, the fact of his own mortality. Hence he appointed a herald, whose exclusive mission was to repeat in the hearing of his sovereign, every time the latter left his palace, the words: "Philip, thou art mortal." Now, afflictive providences are divine monitors, speaking to us with voices as from God out of heaven, reminding us of God, duty, death, eternity, redemption, and retribution; and calling upon us to adjust the past, present, and future of our lives to these eternal verities. When the mind has thus adjusted itself, then these truths have a power over the thoughts, feelings, mental and moral activities, such as they could not otherwise acquire. As a consequence, they have corresponding power to refine, purify, and bless the soul, and fully prepare it to receive those "everlasting consolations" and immortal hopes, with which God is ready to fill the utmost capacities of our inner being, whenever the heart is prepared to receive them. How many individuals have occasion to say with the Psalmist, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted: for before I was afflicted I went astray. But now have I learned to keep thy precepts." Thus it is that even in our afflictions "God deal- eth with us as with sons," first teaching us the lesson of obedience, and then drawing us close, very close, to the bosom of his love.
Discipline the human to subjection to the divine will.

We are all aware, also, that the highest purity and blessedness of the soul depend mainly upon the right adjustment of the will of the creature relatively to the will of God. Now, afflicting providences bring the human into a more direct, immediate, and impressive contact with the divine will, than any others. Let the creature learn obedience here; here "let patience have her perfect work," and he "becomes perfect and entire, wanting nothing." He that walks with God amid the consuming heat of the glowing furnace, and there fully consents to endure and to suffer all the will of God; he that finds amid these central fires deep content, as his Spirit lies down in the centre of God's will, and is still there — attains to a disciplined consolidation in Christian virtue, which renders his acquiescence in the divine will, in all other relations, absolute. The soul, now, is permanently at peace with God, and, as a consequence, is fully prepared to be kept as permanently by "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding." Christian brethren, have you never had such a hallowed form of experience as this? A dark and impenetrable cloud came over you, and completely shut you in. You could not penetrate to the brightness which radiated from the upper surface of the cloud — the upper surface where its face is always turned toward the face of God. In the midst of the deep midnight around you, you dropped down into the centre of the divine will. Let me suffer now, your heart exclaims, let me suffer here, and anywhere, till God is fully satisfied. In this stillness of deep acquiescence, the first thought that begins to make melody in the depths of the soul, perhaps, is this: a moving apprehension of the sweet will of God. The sweet will of God, you begin to repeat, the sweet will of God. Let all my allotments be as God will. Then there comes gently over you a sense of infinite security in God. The darkness around you is "but the shadow of his wing," beneath which you feel yourself to be "almost sacred." God is "covering you with his feathers," while beneath his wing you are fixing your trust, and resting there with perfect "quietness and assurance forever." You know now, as you otherwise could not have known, that under the all-overshadowing protection of your God, "no evil can befall you; neither can any plague come nigh your dwelling." Light begins to penetrate through the cloud above you, till the deep midnight around becomes itself "all light, and its essence love." The cloud above has become all luminous. Through it you seem to see the face of God, smiling with love ineffable upon the face of your soul. You know now why God afflicted you; your perfection in virtue, and your consequent entrance into the hallowed precincts of that rest which "remains for the people of God." Such are the unvarying issues of afflictive providences, when, under their pressure, we "do as we are commanded."

They strengthen and confirm christian virtue.

These providences, also, tend very peculiarly to strengthen and confirm the faith and hopeful trust of the soul in God. When our own power and resources visibly fail us, we naturally turn from self to a power out of and above ourselves. When finite confidences fall from under us, we are almost irresistibly impelled to lean upon the infinite. Now, afflictive providences are those divine jostlings of the soul by which it is continually reminded of the power above, where our strength and safety lie concealed. As a consequence, they pre-eminently tend to induce the fixed habit of trust and hope in God. Did days of darkness never come, fulness of bread might induce forgetfulness of the Giver, and of dependence upon Him. Conscious weakness and want, however, centre and fix the faith and hope of the soul in the power and fullness of God, and the frequent exercise of those virtues confirm, settle, and strengthen the mind in the same, till faith and hope in God become immutably habitual in the inward experience. Now mark the result. Leaning upon the Infinite, the soul becomes “strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.” Trusting in the divine fulness, it receives of that fulness to the full measure of its conscious necessities. Hoping in God, hope deferred does not make the heart sick, and that “because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart, by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.” As hope and trust in Christ become the fixed habit of the soul, in all our necessities the angel of his presence strengthens us, as the angel of God strengthened him in the hour of his extremity. Everywhere, and under all circumstances, “the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keeps our hearts and minds by Christ Jesus.”

Impart assurance of hope.

When the mind is put into the furnace of affliction, and learns obedience there, it attains, we remark, not only to a divine purity and acceptance with God, but also, in the next place, to a more distinct assurance of its own gracious state, than it can hardly obtain in any other circumstances. Under no other circumstances, as we have seen, is the will of the creature brought into such direct and distinct contact with the will of God. Nowhere else, as a consequence, can the mind be so distinctly conscious of absolute acquiescence in the divine will, and subjection to it, as here: “Not as I will, but as Thou wilt;” “The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?” The character of such hallowed mental exercises as these cannot be misapprehended. Hence it is, that, in the exercise of the same, the mind has an absolute consciousness of its own gracious state, and of its consequent acceptance with God. Now, this absolute assurance of the genuineness of our faith necessarily issues in corresponding assurance of hope: "And when tribulation has worked patience [confirmation in Christian virtue]; and patience, experience [assurance of our own gracious state]; and experience, hope," God never fails to lift upon the soul "the light of his countenance." "Hope," we repeat, "maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart, by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." That state of meek, mild, and quiet submission, which the patient endurance of suffering induces, fully prepares the mind to receive and appreciate God's manifested sympathy and love. The Holy Spirit now makes the soul distinctly conscious, that "in all our afflictions, God is afflicted, while the angel of his presence saves us," and we know, as we otherwise could not have known, how deeply God sympathizes with us, and loves us. The light of God in which we now live and walk, sanctifies even the furnace through which we have been conducted, into this state of perpetual quietness and assurance, where "the days of our mourning are ended."

There are, also, certain visions of the eternal future, and of other kindred truths — visions which nothing but the patient endurance of afflictive providences can prepare the mind to receive, and which the Holy Spirit never fails to impart when "patience has had her perfect work." Take the following as examples:

"These light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."
“All things work together for good to them that love God.”

“And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain.” “They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto fountains of living waters.” “Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?” “Nay, in all these things, we are more than conquerors, through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord.” It is only as the mind passes through great tribulation, and becomes refined and purified in the midst of the same, that it can fully apprehend and appreciate the truths contained in such revelations as these — revelations which, when received, impart a fulness of joy otherwise impossible to us. Whatever our condition may be, let the Holy Spirit but open upon the mind such visions of the soul’s eternal future, and render them conscious realities to its apprehension, and “the days of its mourning are ended.” It is thus in genuine Christian experience, that our most enduring joys well out from our deepest sorrows, and our most abiding consolations descend to us in the midst of our greatest tribulations, while the brightest hopes that gladden our hearts are “born, like the rainbow, in tears.”

They impart soul-satisfying visions of Christ.

As your heart has been pressed down under the weight of some great sorrow, did the Holy Spirit never open upon you spiritual vision an apprehension of Christ as a world-sufferer, of Christ in Gethsemane, in the judgment-hall, or upon the cross? In the presence of such a revelation, suffering and sorrow lose all power to distract the mind. On the other hand, they become sanctified in the mind's apprehension, and to "fill out the measure of Christ's sufferings" seems a privilege; and when sorrow for Christ's sake becomes a hallowed thing in the mind's regard, how infinite does the joy of the soul in Christ become! Thus, as in our deepest humiliation we find ourselves farthest within the precincts of heaven, so in our greatest sufferings and sorrows do we behold most distinctly the face of God. In the furnace — strange kind of life that! — "we walk in the light of God."

We must not fail here to refer to the character of the divine virtues which are refined and perfected in the furnace of affliction. Nowhere else in the universe of God do we find such things of beauty as they. That meek submission, that subdued quietude of heart, that sweet and prompt turning of the soul to every indication of the divine will, that tender sympathy with suffering in others, and readiness "to heal the broken-hearted," that deep and fixed trust in God, that serenity of hope, that crucifixion to the world, that mild purity of thoughts and life, and above all, that fixed devotion to Christ—all these, blended in unison, render character a thing of beauty and perfection that even God loves to look at. Now, when the mind comes into this state, it is then fully prepared to receive that fulness of joy for which God has been refining and perfecting it. In entering into this state the leading sentiment which pervades its whole inner being is what seems to be a feeling of infinite quietude and assurance. Then thoughts of ineffable consolation begin to drop down into the soul. Soon "visions of glory infinite come and go." At length the sun of righteousness rises upon the soul "with healings in his wings." In the everlasting light of that sun which continuously comes nearer and nearer to the soul, it moves onward, wondering with unutterable wonder that God should thus deign to shine upon a worm of the dust. God comes to dwell in the soul, and to walk in it, and make his abode there.

In such experiences, the soul comes to learn, at length, what sorrow and affliction mean. They even become things of beauty to the mind. "We glory in tribulations, also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us."

Impart power for good to the Christian.

Nor are the divine uses of afflictive providences confined to the subject who suffers. They fit him, as he otherwise could not be, to comfort them who are in any trouble, by the "comfort wherewith he is comforted of God." And never has the religion of Christ such power over worldly minds as when it is seen turning earth-born sorrows into heaven-born joys.

Do you ask us, hearer, when it is that you may regard patience as having had its perfect work in your experience? We answer, when you are deeply conscious that your will is so perfectly identified with the will of God, that you have no wish to possess any more of earthly good than God has appointed you, nor to diminish one jot or tittle of the full amount of affliction which he has allotted you. For ourself, we should regard it as infinitely criminal in us to entertain, for a moment, the wish that one throb of pain, one disappointed hope, a single bereavement, a single external affliction, that God appointed us, should fail to become real in our future of life, or to accomplish its divine mission in our experience.

HOW WE SHOULD REGARD OURSELVES WHEN AFFLICTED.

We now understand the light in which we should regard ourselves when causes of great sorrow fall upon us. First of all, we should carefully inquire whether these providences have come down from God out of heaven, as judgments for wrong-doing, or as mere disciplinary trials of faith, and seek unto God accordingly. In neither case should we lose heart, or hope, or faith in God. We should conclude, at once, on the other hand, whatever the immediate cause or occasion of our sufferings may be, that God sees in us something which he desires to refine and perfect into a thing of beauty and perfection, for his own glory, and ours too; that he sees in us undeveloped capacities for good — capacities which he desires to perfect for the reception of those great and eternally enduring joys, which he has prepared for us. Why should we be afraid of causes of sorrow, when, if we hold fast our integrity and faith in God, they are only the birth-throes of everlasting consolations, and deep and ever-enduring joys otherwise impossible to us.

HOW A TRULY SANCTIFIED MIND COMES TO REGARD AFFLICTION.

We now understand how a truly sanctified mind, one fully disciplined in “the furnace of affliction,” comes at length to regard such providences. To such minds, such providences are “clouds of glory, coming from God who is our home”—clouds of glory, tinged all around their surfaces with light ineffable, and spreading over us the shadow of God’s wing, beneath which, as we have said, we feel ourselves almost sacred. As light breaks through the cloud, and sweet and melting thoughts begin to gladden the heart, and everlasting consolations one after another drop down into the depths of the inner being; as the light of the divine countenance is lifted up, and the sympathizing, loving smile of God becomes the feast of the soul—it exclaims, “Lord, it is good to be here;” and if God should so will, it would build its tabernacle and make its abode in this consecrated spot.

ALL THE ABOVE EXEMPLIFIED IN THE EXPERIENCE OF PAUL.

Perhaps some of our readers may be inclined to the sentiment, that in the present discourse the picture has been overdrawn; that what has been presented never has been, and never can be, realized in actual experience. To test the question, let us go back, for a few moments, some eighteen hundred years, and speak with Paul upon the subject. You see him yonder, as he sits resting for an hour. He sits there in his chain, by the side of the soldier who keeps him. Let us approach him. How pale, and wan, and weary he looks! and yet what a halo of deep and abiding joy beams from his countenance and encircles his brow! Permit us to address him now, in your behalf. Paul, we have heard much of that wonderful life and experience of yours, and have come to converse personally with you upon the subject. Will you impart to us the information we desire? With all my heart. But where shall I begin? Tell us first about your sufferings. Well, “I think that God hath set forth us, the Apostles, last, as it were appointed unto death; for we are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and unto men.”

“Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place.” “We are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.” But among the many who, in common with our divine Lord, have been made “perfect through suffering,” I have been “in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned; thrice I suffered shipwreck; a night and a day have I been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Beside those things which are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not?”

But, Paul, what has been your state of mind in the midst of these sufferings? “As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things.” “I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound; everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.”

But when you see that “the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests,” and in common with your divine Master, you “have not where to lay your head;” when you see other men dwelling in princely mansions, clad in costly array, and faring sumptuously every day — do you not sometimes, to say the least, envy their better lot, and feel dissatisfied with your own? "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel." But when you go abroad with the distinct apprehension "that bonds and afflictions abide you,' does not your sensitive nature sometimes shrink from the vision of the sufferings in prospect? "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God."

Please answer this question also: How do you now regard suffering for Christ's sake? "I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong." How did you attain to this blessed state? By simple faith in God. "We believe, and therefore speak." "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."

Tell us this also, Paul. May we thus attain? Most assuredly. "He is able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by Him." Paul, you appear very weak and exhausted; would to God we could come to you, and let you rest your weary head upon our bosom! I have just had a season of deep repose upon the bosom of Christ. As I sat here a few hours ago, he came to me in Spirit, and said, You are weary, very weary. Lay your head upon my bosom, and rest there. That season of deep intercommunion and fellowship "with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," has left me in a strait betwixt two, and what I shall choose, I wot not, "having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for my brethren. And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with them all for their furtherance and joy of faith.” I am refreshed now, and must attend to the multitude of converts and inquirers whom you see yonder, coming to me for instruction. Farewell. This, reader, is the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. This is what that Gospel did for Paul, what it has done for me, and what it is able to do for you. “If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.”

SUFFERING AND SORROW AS THEY APPEAR IN ETERNITY.

Suffering and sorrow have no place in the kingdom of light. In heaven there is no more pain, sorrow, sighing, sickness, or death; no disappointed hopes, nor any form of heart-sickness from hope deferred. The conception of suffering and sorrow, however, and the remembrance of the same, constitute one of the central elements of the blessedness and glory of that kingdom. All the saints there wear upon their heads, and carry in their hands, crowns and palms of victory — victory through the blood of the Lamb, and in “great fights of affliction.” Separate from that state the remembrance of afflictive providences, and from Christ the idea of a suffering God for human redemption, and you deprive heaven itself of more than one-half its light. The vision of glory which intensifies the rapture of the celestial hosts is that of Christ manifested through the emblem of a “Lamb slain from the foundations of the earth.” We would request the reader to consider carefully the following passage, as an illustration of the truth before us: —

“And I beheld, and lo! in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands, saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth forever and ever.”

ADMONITION.

Hereafter, when days of darkness come, when pain afflicts, when bereavements melt and adversity chastens our hearts, when the floods purify and the furnace refines our spirits, and the weight of great sorrows presses us down upon the bosom of God, let the fixed language of our souls be, “Welcome, cross of Christ! welcome, everlasting life.”
DISCOURSE XI.

THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT.

Eru. iv. 3—"Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

PASSAGE EXPLAINED.

By the phrase, "unity of the Spirit," we are to understand that form of divine oneness which the Holy Spirit induces among those individuals in whose hearts he dwells—that form of oneness to which our Saviour refers in those wonderful words, "I in them, and Thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." This unity is induced when Christ, by the Spirit, is enthroned and reigns supreme in the heart of each individual. The fact that we are required to endeavor to preserve "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" implies two things: that, without our endeavor, this unity in individual minds, and this unity in the bond of peace among associated minds, will not be preserved; and that oneness of spirit may obtain among any number of individuals, and yet that unity in the bonds of peace may not be perpetuated among them. Oneness, that is, sameness, of spirit among any number of minds is one thing; this unity "in the bond of peace is quite another. Many suppose that if the former obtains, the latter will result as a matter of course, if not of necessity. This is by no means true universally. The oneness of heart and character which the Spirit induces tends to induce bonds of peace among the brotherhood; but in some instances it may, for a time at least, fail of that result from differences of opinion on important subjects—differences arising from a limitation of the human faculties, even in sanctified minds. Paul and Barnabas, for example, had both in common, as we have formerly said, "received the Holy Ghost since they had believed," and were by a special revelation from the Spirit separated to the work which, for a long period, they had jointly prosecuted; but a temporary separation, if not alienation, obtained between them, in consequence of a difference of opinion in respect to a question regarded, in common, as involving an essential principle of our holy religion. Paul judged, that if they received Mark a second time to a companionship in the work, they would fellowship one who, by his former conduct, had proved himself untrustworthy. Barnabas judged, that in rejecting him, they would deny fellowship with one who may have had good reason for the act for which Paul accused him, who was called of God to the work of the ministry, who had special qualifications for the work before them, and had been "endued with power from on high" for its prosecution. Here was a conscientious difference of opinion, and we have no reason to suppose that either quenched the Spirit in the separation which occurred between them. In the controversy, Paul was wrong, that is, misjudged, as his subsequent testimony in regard to Mark clearly evinces: "Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable unto me for the ministry." This error in judgment, and the consequent disastrous separation from an eminent servant of Christ, was, no doubt, of great use to Paul during his subsequent life, and was unquestionably the only error of the kind that he ever fell into. To it we may refer the many exhortations to Christian forbearance with which his epistles abound, especially the exhortation in the text, "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." If inspired men, each of whom had received the Holy Ghost after believing, did differ in judgment, and did separate the one from the other, and thereby injure the cause of Christ both in and outside of the Church; and if, as Christ affirms, visible unity in the bonds of peace among the brotherhood is the condition on which the world will believe in him — of what infinite moment is it that all the brotherhood in the Church should endeavor each to be one with and in Christ through the Spirit, and to be at peace among themselves. The object of the present discourse is to elucidate the great doctrine of "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," and to impress upon all believers a conviction of the duty and importance of making it their study and prayerful endeavor to induce and preserve this oneness in this one state. What, then, is the idea represented by the words —

The oneness or unity which the Spirit induces does not imply at all that form of sameness which excludes all peculiarities of individual character. Who would desire to find in our forests and parks, or on our prairies and in our flower-gardens, an absolute likeness, in every tree, plant, and flower, to every other; or a similar sameness among all human forms and countenances? Equally unwise would it be in God to induce a similar unity, a unity which excludes all variety, in the realm of mind. Thought would stagnate, and all mental activity come to a dead standstill, in a universe thus constituted. The Spirit, when he dwells in a diversity of hearts, does induce an absolute unity in fundamental particulars. The unity which he induces, however, will be like that which his creative and plastic energy induces in the external universe — a unity in which each mind differs in glory from every other, just as one star differs from another star in glory. Nor does the unity of the Spirit imply, among individuals in whom he dwells, an absolute sameness of thought, feeling, and judgment, on all subjects mutually deemed important. Paul and Barnabas, as we have seen, had in common received the Holy Spirit since believing, and both in common were filled with the Spirit; yet they came to opposite conclusions on a subject mutually deemed important. Here we have unity of spirit and opposition of views in an important sphere of thought and judgment. What did obtain in this case may obtain in multitudes of other cases, and thus render requisite special endeavors "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace." All who have the Spirit are in fundamental particulars "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." Other departments of thought and activity, however, God has left to the discretion of individuals. In the former relations unity, and in the latter diversity, of thought and judgment, are to be anticipated.

What, then, is this unity of which we are speaking?

In general, let us say, that it implies that form of oneness of thought, feeling, and sentiment, on moral and spiritual subjects, a oneness which induces the highest possible forms of moral and spiritual excellence in the individual and in the social relations of existence. Character adorns itself with the highest possible elements of beauty and perfection, when, amid a great diversity of minds, each exercises, to the fullest extent, the prerogatives of independent thought and action, all in common having a supreme respect for the judgment of God, and regarding it as a small matter to be judged by man's judgment, even that of the brotherhood; and at the same time, on all subjects of fundamental importance, all are perfectly "joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," no diversity or opposition obtaining, but in respect to things non-essential, and this diversity and opposition creating no discord. Now this is the divine unity which the Spirit always induces when his influence obtains the complete ascendancy. To be somewhat particular, the unity which the Spirit induces implies:

1. A common, and readily recognizable, likeness of spirit and character to those of Christ. "We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image." Converse with any number of believers you please, believers who "have received the Holy Ghost since they believed," and however diverse their circumstances, capacities, natural adaptations, and attainments, you will readily notice, in all in common, a fundamental and all-controlling unity in one fundamental respect — a spirit and temper, views and aims, altogether Christ-like. In all in common there will appear the same meekness and gentleness, the same patient endurance of wrong and afflictive providences, the same spirit of condescension and universal philanthropy, the same love to God and love of truth, the same purity of life and uncompromising opposition to sin in all its forms, the same unconditional subjection to the will of God, and the same implicit obedience to the law of duty, that dwelt in Christ, and beautified his life and character. In these respects there will be in all in common a fundamental unity or likeness, because that the character of each takes form from a common pattern — a pattern which is all-powerful to conform every honest mind that apprehends it as it is, to its own likeness. Every real believer has the Spirit of Christ to some extent; every one who "has received the Holy Ghost since he has believed," possesses and reflects that Spirit in such measure and degree as to be readily recognizable as the leading and all-controlling peculiarity of his life and character. Here we have "the unity of the Spirit" in its fundamental characteristics and manifestations, a common oneness with Christ and likeness to Him.
2. Another peculiarity of that divine unity which the Spirit induces in all in whom He dwells, is found in the common relations of supreme affection and regard which all will have for Christ. All will have in Christ one and the same common centre about which their thoughts, affections, and activities, perpetually revolve, and revolve, in common, supreme love and devotion. Through Him all have a common crucifixion to the world, and the world to them. In Him all have common hopes, joys, and consolation — hopes that never "make ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart, by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us;" joys that are in deed and in truth "unspeakable, and full of glory;" and consolations of which nothing higher or lower than this can be said, that they are "everlasting."

3. All who "have received the Holy Ghost since they believed," have in common, really and truly, "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ:” "Christ in you, the hope of glory;" "I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and be their God, and they shall be my people;” "I in them, thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one;" "we will come unto Him, and make our abode with Him." What a divine unity must be induced in kindred minds, all of whom, in common, have such identical inward experiences and fellowship as these?

4. The last element and characteristic of "the unity of the Spirit," to which we would refer, is this: a common and superlative regard for the image and Spirit of Christ, in whom soever it may exist, and from whomsoever it may be reflected. That, in character, which a truly sanctified mind esteems and values above all other elements, is the image and spirit of Christ, the beauty of holiness manifested and reflected in the inward experience and outward life. "Whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.” This was the spirit of Christ, and this is the common spirit and leading sentiment of all in whom the Spirit of Christ dwells. It is this spirit of common regard for moral purity in character that lays the foundation for that divine form of Christian virtue denominated Christian fellowship, or brotherly love. We have dwelt sufficiently upon the doctrine of the unity of the Spirit to show what it is. The next thought which demands attention is that form of oneness represented by the words —

"UNITY OF THE SPIRIT IN THE BOND OF PEACE."

Peace exists where harmony obtains to the exclusion of discord and the bitterness of strife and division. "Bond of peace" implies a form of unity which not only excludes strife and discord, but resists and overcomes the strongest temptations to division and separation. Friendship is strong when neither absence nor the tongue of slander, diversity of opinion nor seeming opposition of interest, can sunder or weaken the ties which unite loving hearts together. Take, for example, the friendship of David and Jonathan. Absence could not cool the ardor of their mutual love; nor could the tongue of envy, nor rivalry of interest, sunder the bonds of peace by which their hearts were united. Christian fellowship, or brotherly love, implies friendship in the strongest form in which kindred minds can, by any possibility, be united. It is love the same in kind as that which blends into one the hearts of the persons of the sacred Trinity: "As Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee; that they may be one in us;" "That they may be one, as we are one." Worldly minds may be at peace one with the other, and may be united by ties of friendship apparently tender and strong. Such bonds, however, will stand but a feeble test. Slight causes of discord will sunder completely and for ever such minds, the one from the other. The same holds true of that form of friendship which has its basis and source in the domestic affections. Fraternal love here will seldom endure even a division of a parental estate. But brotherly love which has its basis and source in the "unity of the Spirit," is a bond of peace that endures to eternity, and which can by no possibility be sundered, but by one of two causes, or both united—a loss of Christian virtue, or an eclipse of Christian character; an eclipse in which, from misunderstanding, or other causes, sanctified minds for a time appear to each other as they are not. "The unity of the Spirit" not only induces peace among the brotherhood, but "bonds of peace." "The unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" is kept when sanctified minds maintain their oneness with Christ, and have "fellowship one with another."

There is one peculiarity which distinguishes this unity from worldly friendship in all its forms. The broken ties of the latter form of love are seldom or never reunited. A friend once cooled repels all attempts at a reunion. Not so with Christian fellowship or brotherly love. Broken ties, rejoined, live when the causes of separation are fully removed, and reunited bonds of peace remain stronger than they ever existed before. The duty enjoined in the text next claims our attention—the duty to make it our constant endeavor,

"TO KEEP THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT IN THE BOND OF PEACE."

Obedience to this principle implies two things—that it be our constant aim and endeavor to preserve in our own hearts, and in all sanctified minds around us, "the unity of the Spirit," or the oneness with Christ before described, unalloyed and untarnished, and to perpetuate among such this unity in the bond of peace; that is, to preserve Christian character wherever it exists untarnished, and to blend and keep all Christian minds in the one accord of Christian fellowship or brotherly love. Conceive of a certain number of associated minds and hearts, each “walking in the light, as God is in the light,” and all “having fellowship one with another”—while it is the steady endeavor of each and all to perpetuate and cement more and more this oneness with Christ on the one hand, and this mutual fellowship on the other, while all are watchfully guarding against all causes of corruption and discord from within and without this sanctified circle. We have here the identical state intended by the Apostle when he penned the words of the text. That each believer should make it his steady and prayerful endeavor to induce and perpetuate among all the members of the household of faith “the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace,” will appear evident from the following considerations:—

1. It is, in itself, the highest, the most perfect, and the most blessed state in which rational beings can exist and act. In this state, such minds not only have fellowship “one with another,” but they all in common “walk with God, their fellowship being with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.” There is no other state conceivable so exalted, so perfect, or so blessed as that. Now if we ought to aim to induce in ourselves, and among the household of faith, the most perfect forms of virtue, and the highest blessedness conceivable or possible, it should be our fixed and prayerful endeavor “to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” among all the believers in common.

2. The importance which Christ attaches to this state should impel every believer to use his constant and his best endeavors to induce and perpetuate it. “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one toward another.” “Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also that shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.” Who, in the presence of such melting revelations, would sow discord in the household of faith? Who can avoid making it his constant endeavor to induce and perpetuate a state, for the existence and perpetuity of which Christ thus intercedes with “his Father and our Father, and with his God and our God?” especially when, in the judgment of Christ, the destiny of the world is suspended upon the existence and continuance of such relations among believers.

3. The revealed example of God himself should be to us an all-constraining motive to induce in us the most earnest, constant, and prayerful endeavor to “keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.” “Be ye, therefore, followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God, for a sweet-smelling savor.” “Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.” “Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.” When a duty lies before us, upon the object of which the interests of the world are suspended, and obedience to which is urged upon us by such motives and by such an example, we surely should be prompt and tireless in its performance.

4. We urge as another reason for the duty before us, the fact that, without our watchful endeavor, “the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" will not be kept among the brotherhood of the household of faith. Unless believers "watch unto prayer," "the serpent who beguiled Eve will corrupt their minds from the simplicity of Christ." So, without their prayerful endeavor "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," "that old serpent, the devil," will induce misunderstandings, and strife, and discord in the family of Christ. A purposeless life never was and never will be a loving or a peaceful one. Let it, then, be our fixed and prayerful endeavor "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

"Blest be the tie that binds

and palsied be the tongue or the hand that shall sow discord and strife among the children of God.

5. We should endeavor, we remark finally, "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," because that when we cease to walk in the light, so as to have fellowship one with another, we lose all proper evidence of Christian character. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." "If any man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?" "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." "He that hateth his brother is a murderer, and we know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Here, then, we have a fundamental test of Christian character. "Love is of God, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." In the conscious exercise of brotherly love, we have the witness of the Spirit, that "we are the children of God." In the absence of such love, we lose all proper evidence that we are of God. In the opposite state, we have absolute proof that we have not eternal life abiding in us. How important, then, that we endeavor "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

THE DUTY BEFORE US WIDE IN ITS APPLICATIONS.

We perceive clearly, in the light of our subject, that the duty imposed in the text has a far wider application than is commonly supposed. The words, "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," imply "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," in the first case, and "fellowship one with another," in the next. Universal unity in both these respects is, according to the text, to be the object of our constant endeavor. Brotherly love merely is commonly understood as referred to in this passage. The key-note of Christian fellowship or unity is a common oneness, with and in Christ: "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one."

HOW DISCORD IN THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH SHOULD BE REGARDED.

We see, also, how discord in the household of faith should be regarded. It is, in itself, the root and consummation of all evil, and should be so regarded, and that for two reasons. It tends to break up fellowship with God in the first case, and in the next, eclipses the glory of the Gospel of Christ before the world.

TRUE AND PROPER CONDITIONS OF CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

We are now prepared to state definitely the true and proper conditions of Christian fellowship. It is not a mere profession of Christian character, but the presentation of valid evidence of the possession of genuine Christian virtue, or oneness with God. Sin is to be tolerated nowhere, and especially not within the Church of Christ. If an individual professes Christianity, and yet "walks disorderly," we are absolutely commanded to disfellowship him. If, on the other hand, an individual gives valid evidence that he has "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," we must receive him into cordial fellowship, whatever his peculiarities in other respects may be; or we are in peril of parting company with God.

PROPER CONDITIONS OF DENOMINATIONAL FELLOWSHIP.

We understand, also, what must be the conditions of denominational fellowship, provided any given Christian denomination would truly and properly represent Christianity as it is in itself. Its conditions must be absolutely identical with those which God has prescribed for Christian fellowship. So far forth as any denomination departs from this one principle, it places itself out of the pale of the Christian family, and stands chargeable with "making a schism in the body of Christ." In all such cases, "man puts asunder what God joined together."
DISCOURSE XII

WITNESS, DEMONSTRATION, AND POWER OF THE SPIRIT.

1 John v. 6—"And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth."
Rom. viii. 16—"The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."
1 Cor. ii. 4—"And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

LANGUAGE EMPLOYED BY THE SACRED WRITERS TO REPRESENT THE RELATIONS OF THE MIND TO THE TRUTH, WHEN THE MIND IS UNDER THE ILLUMINATION OF THE SPIRIT.

There are certain very peculiar and special forms of speech employed by the sacred writers to represent the relations of the mind to the truth of God, when the creature is under the illumination of the Spirit. The word know is most commonly employed for such purposes. We give the following passages as examples: "We know that we are of God;" "And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him;" "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God;" "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you."

Assurance is another form of utterance by which the same relations are expressed: "And shall assure our hearts before him." So also the sacred writers speak of "the full assurance of hope," "the full assurance of faith," and of the "full assurance of understanding."
In our last text, the Apostle speaks of "the demonstration of the Spirit." Demonstration induces a form of conviction which absolutely excludes doubt. Such is the term employed by inspiration to represent the form and kind of conviction induced under the illumination of the Spirit.

Those who are thus divinely taught, are denominated spiritual: "He that is spiritual judgeth all things: yet he himself is judged of no man." This peculiar and divinely imparted form of knowledge has in it what no other form has — the eternally enduring elements of life everlasting: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Let us endeavor to attain to an apprehension of the forms of knowledge under consideration.

DIVERSE FORMS AND DEGREES OF CONVICTION.

There are, as all are aware, diverse forms and degrees of conviction which the mind may have in regard to a given truth. At one time a proposition may appear as possibly, and at another as probably, true. Here conviction takes on the form of belief, or opinion. In other cases conviction takes on forms still higher and more positive; those of certainty, which excludes doubt. We here find ourselves within the circle of knowledge proper, and begin to affirm that we know that this and that proposition is true or false. Knowledge, in its absolute forms, is intuitive or demonstrative. Of the former kind is that in which we have a direct and immediate perception or knowledge of a given object, such as the consciousness which we have of our own existence and mental states, and of objects of direct and immediate perception in the world around us. Knowledge is demonstrative, when we perceive that a given proposition not only is, but must be, true.

Here we attain to an apprehension of the character of all convictions induced by the illuminations of the Spirit. In all such cases there is a direct and inward beholding of divine truth—forms of absolute knowledge inducing convictions which arise even above ordinary demonstration. In such beholdings, doubt has no place. Nothing remains but absolute certainty. We "know the things which are freely given us of God." "Now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

FACTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS IN RESPECT TO DIVINE ILLUMINATION.

Let us now contemplate a few facts and illustrations of the various forms of divine teaching and illumination. You have, no doubt, reader, been subject to experiences like the following: A given truth of God has, for years, it may be, lain in the outer circle of thought. Doubt, and even disbelief, may at times have had place in your mind in regard to it; nor was it possible to render it the object of impressive apprehension. It lay, as a dead litter, at an infinite remove from the heart. All at once, and in a manner not at all understood, "God knoweth" that truth makes an advance from the circle and sphere of doubt and disbelief into that of open and all-impressive vision, and we know it as an eternal verity. It is a matter of inexpressible wonder now that we ever could, for a moment, have had a solitary doubt in respect to it, or could have regarded it with indifference. Disbelief, doubt, and indifference, on the other hand, appear infinitely absurd and criminal. No other forms of intuitive knowledge and no demonstration, can induce such absolute and impressive conviction.
The wife of a friend of ours was passing away, through the gradual advance of consumption. From childhood, death had been to her mind "the king of terrors." During her sickness, also, she had been fearfully perturbed with the idea of dying. As our friend entered her room one day, she exclaimed, with an unearthly glow upon her countenance, "My dear husband, there is nothing fearful about dying. Death has no terrors. The idea of dying is sweet to me, now." From that moment she adjusted her spirit for the approaching change with all the sweet equanimity with which she had before adorned herself for the bridal hour. Indeed, the embrace of death was to her mind the bridal hour of her immortal spirit. Here we have one illustration of the effects of divine illumination. All truth, as apprehended through the Spirit, passes from those outer spheres of thought and apprehension, where disbelief and gloomy doubts prevail, and where vision is dim and unimpressive, into the inner circle of open and all-impressive, vision, and of absolute knowledge. "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee."

We have special examples and illustrations of the form of illumination in the experience of converted men — that of infidels, Universalists, and moralists, especially — their experience when under the convicting power of the Spirit. When walking in carnal security, amid the deep midnight of unbelief, when impregnably fortified, as they supposed, in their opinions and beliefs, and doubly armed against all the arguments and weapons of "the truth as it is in Jesus," in a moment of deep and solemn thought, such as from time to time comes over all minds in common, the cloud is lifted, and they find themselves in the clear sunlight of truth itself. Their arguments, reasonings, and objections to the Gospel appear lighter than "airy nothing," as nothing but so many absurdities. The evidences in favor of Christianity, on the other hand, stand out before the mind as immovable as the everlasting mountains. Such individuals cannot themselves tell how this sunlight came to them. But when it did come, they found themselves at once within the sphere of absolute knowledge, the circle where doubt forever disappears.

A very intelligent gentleman in Boston, years ago, requested us to visit him. During our interview he made this statement: "For fifty years of my life, up to a few weeks since, I was a confirmed atheist. I had no idea that my belief could be shaken. As I lay upon my bed from a slight indisposition, the following reflections passed through my mind. There are in the Bible a vast number of predictions, which no human foresight could have divined. Every one of these, when the time specified arrived, was fulfilled to the letter. The same book foretells for the soul a future state—a state of eternal retribution. These last predictions will come to pass, just as all the others have done. All this came before my mind with such distinctness and force as to render doubt impossible; and I am here, a believer in Jesus."

A distinguished moralist, who had long and openly gloried in the all-sufficiency of his own self-originated righteousness, determined at one time, in conformity to a suggestion which he had heard from an evangelical pulpit, to take a careful survey of his life, write down his good deeds in one column and his bad ones in another, and then strike the balance between them. He sat down with the most undoubting assurance of finding the result immensely in his own favor. With much self-congratulation he wrote out a long catalogue of meritorious acts. But when he commenced putting down his acts of sin, one and another suggested itself until this last catalogue far outnumbered the first. Still his sins, in appalling succession, came rushing in upon his memory. Their number appeared to be infinite. I must have forgotten many of my good deeds, he said to himself. I will run over the record of these, that others may thereby be suggested. As his eye rested upon the first set down to his own credit, that act, he said again to himself, is sinful. The motive which prompted it was wrong. So of every other of the same class, until his whole life stood out before his mind as "evil, and only evil, continually." Truth, under the searching power of the Spirit, having become "a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart," the man apprehended, not only his general sinfulness, but his absolute totality in sin. At the same time he perceived, with equal distinctness, the infinite criminality of such a life. Now he knew his need of Christ, and was soon found, a trembling, trusting, hoping, and believing penitent, at the foot of the cross. Throughout the whole process there was, instead of former darkness and unbelief, absolute conviction, which totally excluded doubt. Similar results obtain in the experience of all impenitent persons, when under the convicting power of the Spirit. They know, as by direct and absolute intuition, their sin and ill desert, their ruin in sin, and need of the redemption of Christ.

The effects of divine illumination, however, become still more manifest in the experience of the believer when "the Holy Ghost comes upon him." A real Christian may, for example, continue in long and painful doubt, in respect to the genuineness of his conversion, and the question of his acceptance with God. Inquiry, and even prayer, tend but to dim vision and intensify doubt upon the subject. All at once he emerges from all this chilling fog into a bright spot, where more than sunlight shines upon the question about which his mind has so long hung in the agony of doubt and uncertainty. He knows that he "is accepted in the Beloved," and without fear hangs his eternity upon that assurance.
Were he asked the question, how and why he knows this, he might be at a loss for an answer. Of the fact of his adoption, however, he has an assurance as absolute as he has of his own existence. "Behold," he exclaims, "God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid. For the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song. He also, has become my salvation."

The believer reads upon the sacred page such passages as the following: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love. Therefore, with lovingkindness, have I drawn thee;" "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you;" "The hairs of your head are all numbered;" "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Such passages, as every one knows, represent a form of love "which passeth knowledge." Yet to the unillumined mind, that love is not real. God seems to be afar off. He does seem to love Christ, and angels, and glorified spirits. It appears, however, as if he had forgotten and forsaken me. I cannot make it real, that his ear is bent toward me when I pray to him. All at once the veil is lifted from the face of God, and with open vision we behold his glory. Nothing seems so real, now, as God's love to us and his care for us. God is love, and our dwelling-place is in the fulness of that love. All that the sacred writers affirm of "the fellowship of the Spirit," of "God's dwelling in us, and we in him," of "Christ in you, the hope of glory," of his "manifesting himself unto us," and with the Father "making his abode in us," of "the Father in him and he in us," and of the Father loving us even as he loves the Son—all is consciously real to the mind now. We "comprehend the length, and breadth, and depth, and height," and "know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge." We "know and believe the love that God hath to us." The same holds true of divine illumination in all its forms. When the Spirit comes, he "takes of the things of Christ, and shows them unto us," and "shows us plainly of the Father." Christ, with the Father, is to us a real, and manifested personal presence, and "with open face" we "behold his glory." We receive from Christ "eye-salve, that we may see." "We read the precious Scriptures with new eyes," and have a direct, immediate, and open vision of their great revelations. When we speak of these things, "what we have seen and heard," of these we give testimony.

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT TO THE TRUTH.

We are now prepared to apprehend what is meant by the witness of the Spirit to the truth. There are two revealed objects to which his testimony pertains — to the truth as revealed in the sacred Word, and to individuals in regard to the fact of their divine adoption. That first designated is the form of testimony of which we are now to speak. "It is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth," trustworthy, giving testimony only to what is true. There are various forms in which this testimony is given. The Spirit is the author of the Bible. "The holy men of old," who wrote it, "spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." In giving us this revelation, we have his testimony to its truth. Doubting what is written, we "make God a liar." We have similar testimony in the stupendous Spirit-wrought miracles, and in the numberless Spirit-inspired prophecies which encircle the sacred Word, and affirm its divine origin.

In the nature of the production itself, the Spirit has, also, given a form of testimony to the truth, equally absolute and impressive. It would be no more absurd to affirm that man originated the solar system, than is the dogma that the Bible is a mere human production. "The footprints of the Creator” are as manifest here, as in the organization of the universe. Through the work produced, the Spirit has given absolute testimony to the truth.

The form of testimony, of all others the most impressive, however, is that which is constantly being witnessed in the interior of the mind itself, when under the special influence and illumination of the Spirit. We call a physician, who prescribes a certain medicine, and at the same time designates certain specific effects which will follow its administration. In the experience of those identical results, we have proof of that physician’s knowledge and integrity. The Scriptures map out beforehand endlessly diversified forms of experience and character, as resulting from our believing and obeying the Gospel. As these experiences follow our faith and obedience—all in exact accordance with “what is written”—and as these results do, and can, follow under no other influences, we know, and cannot but know, that “the Spirit is truth.” As these results are divine in their nature, we also know that the truth which induces them must, through the Spirit, “come down from the Father of lights.” The “everlasting consolations,” the immortal hopes, the divine fellowships, the moral virtues, and the fulness of joy, all consciously received through a superhuman and divine influence, are so many witnesses within, that we are being led, and taught, and filled by “the Spirit of the living God.” “We have the witness in ourselves.”

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT “WITH OUR SPIRIT THAT WE ARE THE CHILDREN OF GOD.”

“The Spirit,” we are also told, “beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God.” How is this testimony borne? Of this, we are, in one fundamental, particular, informed in the context. “For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.” The Apostle then adds: “The Spirit beareth witness with”—that is, in connection with, or through—“our spirit”—the spirit of adoption which he induces in us—“that we are the children of God.” In the exercise of the Spirit of adoption, we recognize God as our Father, and ourselves as his children. In inducing this spirit within us, the Holy Ghost superadds his testimony to the fact, that we are God’s sons and daughters. If we were not such, the Holy Ghost would not induce the spirit of sonship in our hearts.

The believer, as he advances onward “in the light of God,” and we always walk in that light when we have the Spirit—receives at length an absolute inward assurance of his divine adoption. From that moment “he knows that he is of God,” and can no more doubt it than he can cease to be conscious of his own being. In giving us that assurance, the Spirit gives us, with it, his testimony that “we are the children of God,” and we distinctly recognize his testimony to that fact.

The believer often passes through a form of experience in which “patience has her perfect work,” and in which “tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy host which is given unto us.” When the Spirit thus “sheds abroad” that love, he gives with and by it his absolute testimony to the fact, that “we are the children of God.” In conducting us through such hallowed experiences, he testifies to and with our spirit that God is dealing with us “as with sons,” disciplining us “for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness.”
So when "the Spirit helpeth our infirmities," we, "not knowing what we should pray for as we ought," when "he maketh intercession for us according to the will of God," and when we, thus influenced and directed, "ask and receive," "until our joy is full"—in inducing these filial and parental relations between us and God, the Spirit, in the most absolute form conceivable, "testifies with our spirit, that we are the children of God." During the era of deadly persecution in Scotland, when "the baptism of the Spirit" was the common experience of believers, and the myrmidons of the persecuting power were marauding the whole country, to murder the saints and break up the religious assemblies, a young woman, on her way to such a meeting, was met by a company of cavalry, and required to give her destination. She could not "deny the faith," and would not reveal the place of meeting. At that moment this promise presented itself to her mind: "It shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak." She lifted a secret prayer that God would then give her what she should speak. Instantly these words presented themselves, and she uttered them as presented. "I am going to my Father's house. My elder brother has died. His will is to be read to-day, and I have an interest in it." The commander bid her go on her way. "I hope," he added, "you will find a rich portion left to yourself." Could the Spirit have given that young saint any more absolute testimony that she was a child of God? At that same era, two brethren were helping their loved pastor, who was crippled with rheumatism, on to such a meeting. On their way, they discovered a troop of those murderers approaching. As they could not in time carry their pastor to a place of safety, he entreated them to leave him, and save themselves. They replied that they should stay and die with him. As they would not be persuaded, he lifted a prayer, that God would interpose and conceal them from their persecutors. Instantly a thick cloud came over the top of the mountain, and covered them, so that their murderers passed close by their victims, without seeing them at all. Did those individuals need from the Spirit any other testimony that they were "the children of God"? Every answer we receive to prayer is a testimony of the same kind.

When, we remark once more, the Spirit brings us into conscious "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ;" when he enables us to "know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge," and "fills us with all the fulness of God;" when we "behold with open face the glory of the Lord," and are "changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord;" and when, by his indwelling presence and illumination, "God becomes our everlasting light, and the days of our mourning are ended"—in all this we have the absolute testimony of the Spirit to our adoption. We need, as Mr. Wesley says, no voice without, and no words within, to know that we have this witness. What we do need is, "full assurance of hope," "full assurance of faith," and "full assurance of understanding." These the Spirit gives us, and in these we have his testimony that "we are the children of God."

THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT.

Truth in all its forms, truth when apprehended through the Spirit, has not only an all-illuminating and all-convincing, but equally an all-vitalizing power—a power to quicken into the highest possible activity every faculty and susceptibility of our nature. Every truth of God, and at the same time all that we are capable of being and becoming through divine influence, lie out with perfect distinctness under the eye of the Spirit. At each successive moment, therefore, he is able, we co-working with him, to induce in us those specific apprehensions, desires, and purposes, which will render our activity the most perfect, our blessedness the most full, and our virtues the most divine. Nothing possible to our natures lies beyond his power to induce in us, and to enable us to accomplish. He knows us, as we do not and cannot know ourselves; and not what we know of ourselves, but what he knows us as capable of being, becoming, doing, and enjoying—this is the limit and measure of his power to do in and through us.

As "laborers together with God" for his kingdom and glory, the Spirit knows how to induce in us just those apprehensions of God, Christ, life, death, duty, redemption, eternity, and retribution, just those emotions, desires, purposes, forms of utterance, and modes of action, which will render our agency the most efficient for the purposes of our "high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Yes, reader, God by his Spirit is "able to make all grace abound toward you, that you, always having all-sufficiency in all things, may abound unto every good work."

Girded by the power of the Spirit, the weakest among us may do valiant service "for the great Captain of our salvation." The same almighty power which the Spirit "wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at the right hand of God in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but in that which is to come"—that divine power, we are absolutely assured, is equally mighty to us-ward, in reference to all our spiritual necessities and exigencies; yes, equally mighty to do in and for us "exceeding abundantly, above all that we ask or think."

Nothing can exceed the impressiveness of the language of the Apostle upon this subject:—

"Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all.

The believer with, and without, "The power of the Spirit."

There are two distinct and opposite states and relations in which the believer in Jesus may be contemplated. In the one state, he has repented of sin, "believed to the saving of his soul," entertains sincere purposes of obedience, and is not utterly barren of good works. In the other state, he has all these, with "the power of the Spirit" superadded. As a necessary consequence, a fundamental difference arises in the forms which Christian experience and action take on. In the former state, the leading characteristics of such experience are imbecility, inward emptiness, and want; doing what we would not, and not doing what we would; a perpetual "laying again foundation of repentance, from dead works to serve the living God;" intervals of light, with longer continued periods of darkness and gloom; periods of hope and assurance, but more of doubt and fear; occasional joys, but "much of sorrow, much of woe;” much of crying after God, but very little, if any, “communion of the Spirit;” and many fightings, but very few “victories by the blood of the Lamb and the word of his testimony.” In the latter state, the equally marked characteristics of that experience are, courage and strength; “everlasting consolations, and good hope through grace;” “victories by the blood of the Lamb and the word of his testimony;” “the light of God, and with it, full assurance of faith,” “full assurance of hope,” and “full assurance of understanding;” “all-sufficiency in all things,” and thereby “abounding unto every good work;” immortal fellowships, and “fulness of joy;” and God as our “everlasting light,” while “the days of our mourning are ended.”

THE SECRET OF STRENGTH IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

“The Church of the living God” should ever be in that state in which “he that is feeble among us is as David and the house of David, as God, as the angel of the Lord before him.” On what conditions can we be girded with this everlasting strength? We must, in the first place, fully appreciate our own weaknesses and insufficiency in ourselves, and utterly and forever renounce and repudiate the principle of self-sufficiency and dependence. “We are not sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves.” This truth must be omnipresent in our mind. In the next place, we must as fully appreciate the available strength which exists for us in God. “Our sufficiency is of God,” and in him we have “all-sufficiency for all things.” We “can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us.” In our assurance of available “strength in the Lord, and in the power of his might,” we must never waver. Lastly, our hope and our trust must be, “not in ourselves, but in God.” “If we will not believe, we shall not be established.” If we do believe, our "light will go forth as brightness, and our salvation as a lamp that shineth." At all times, and in every exigency, "the grace of Christ will be sufficient for us." Here lies the grand secret of holy living. "Have faith in God." "We believe, and therefore speak." "If thou canst believe: all things are possible to him that believeth." Self-distrust, and "faith in God." Here is the divine secret, which "none of the wicked," and too few believers, "understand," but which the "wise do understand." May you, reader, know this divine secret!

THE PRINCIPLE OF FEAR, AS AN ELEMENT OF CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

As far as "the full assurance of faith," "the full assurance of hope," "the full assurance of understanding," and that form of fear which is "cast out by perfect love," are concerned, fear should have no place whatever in Christian experience. All in common should "serve God without fear, in righteousness and holiness before him, all the days of their lives." Yet there are certain possibilities and perils attendant on the Christian life, which should induce that sober vigilance, and wakeful circumspection and watchfulness, represented by the words "godly fear" and "fear and trembling." Notwithstanding the availability, the all-sufficiency of divine grace, and "the power of the Spirit," we may "cast away our confidence," "sell our birthright," "quench the Spirit," and be "corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." The immutable condition of final salvation with us is, that we "hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast, even unto the end." For the want of proper diligence in "stirring the gift of God which is in us," the gift of the Spirit, we may fail to glorify God by "bearing much fruit." We must "keep our bodies under, and bring them into subjection," or ourselves be "castaways."
In every department of the Christian life and work, we are "laborers together with God," and encircled with adversaries ever wakeful, watchful, and of mighty power. Such considerations, while they should not dim our hopes, weaken our assurances, or lessen our fulness of joy, should render us "sober-minded" and "watchful unto prayer." "There is no time for trifling here," for anything but sober-minded circumspection. If we will be thus "sober and vigilant," Christ through the Spirit will "make all grace abound toward us," so that we shall "always have all-sufficiency in all things." But "if we will not watch, Christ will come upon us as a thief," and "remove our candlestick out its place."
Tears and Triumphs!

This is the title of a song book by Revs. L. L. Pickett, M. W. Knapp, and Prof. John R. Bryant. Its notable features are: (1) Choice music; (2) More beautiful solos than other books, some of which are "The Life Boat," "The Skeptic's Daughter," "Beautiful Beckoning Hands," "Some Mother's Child," "The Good Mother's Influence," "Evil influence of a Mother and Sister," "The Christian at the Station," "The Sinner at the Station," "Answered Prayer," "There's a Heaven in the Heart," "Safe," "Be Ready," "The Great Judgment Morning," etc. These single pieces in sheet form worth each as much as the book. (3) A fine line of awakening, deeply convictive songs; (4) Some good temperance songs; (5) A fine line of old-time choruses that stir all hearts; (6) Splendid, taking, new songs that everyone will enjoy; (7) The songs that have the Gospel ring—they are proving under God to be a great blessing to many souls; (8) It is in both round and shape notes; the character notes have been appropriately styled "music made easy"; (9) The book is cheap; it contains 260 songs and 206 pages. See prices below.

A striking feature of this book is, it contains the pictures of several noted evangelists and Christian workers whom you want to see. This is worth all the book will cost you.
