The English Reformation

CH 610 (3 credits)
Spring semester, 2007-2008

The purpose of the course is to enable students to become familiar with and/or to deepen their understanding of the changing life of Christianity in England from 1500 to 1611. In those years the English Church built on its earlier eleven centuries and drew from continental currents of renewal and reform shaping Christian faith and practice in the distinctive ways that a later age was to call “anglicanism.” Those identifying themselves today as Anglicans are not the only Christians who partake of this sixteenth-century heritage. It also belongs to those whose English forbears unsuccessfully struggled to demand the precise patterns of continental Reformed churches. It belongs to Methodists who separated from the national church two centuries later. Although the course concentrates on religious and ecclesiastical affairs, these, as always in studies of church history, cannot be understood apart from their deep involvement with the political, economic, and cultural concerns of British society.

The course will be divided into three main topical rather than chronological sections -- with a preliminary consideration of the earlier years of the English church in the initial week:

I. Continuity and change through four monarchs
II. Authority and ministry in a unitive society of nation and church
III. Catholic and Protestant worship and teaching in the English Church

A summary of the principal sixteenth century events and issues in the formation and development of a distinctive tradition will be found in William P. Haugaard, "The History of Anglicanism: From the Reformation to the Eighteenth Century" in The Study of Anglicanism (rev. edn., ed. Stephen Sykes, John Booty, & Jonathan Knight [Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1998]). A reading of the first half (pp. 3-18) of this essay will provide a rapid birds-eye view of the course.

Requirements:

General reading to be completed before March 6

Students may well find it useful in the remaining weeks of the course while reading source materials refer back to brief sections that apply to these materials.

At each of the 2nd through 4th class meetings, each student will give a brief oral report on their reading to date in these works responding to the following:
1. What did you find of particular value and interest in sections read?
2. What seemed to you to be confusing?
3. What new perspectives about the English Reformation did you identify in the reading?
4. What differences of perspective between authors – or between author and class lecturer have you identified?

Source Readings:
These readings are assigned week by week from March 13th to the end of the course. Student will be expected to have read the materials and made appropriate reflections and notes for their own use in discussion and for future studies and review. Instructor will distribute questions for these readings at the session in the previous week, but students should not limit their attention to sections responding to the suggested questions.

Readings for these source materials may be found in one or more of the following:

Websites as indicated

Research Paper: A paper of 4,000 to 5,500 words on a topic proposed by the instructor or proposed by the student with instructor’s approval. The topic is to be submitted by October 20 and the paper is due on December 8.

Grading:
No exam will be given in the course. The final grade will be based on participation in class discussions (65%) and research paper (35%).
